THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, 1864.

NEW SERIES....No. 184.

I have given to this subject, there is no other report of a committee of the House of Representatives in regard to it.

Then this is a proposition to compel Wisconsin, if it shall come out of her funds, to buy this stock; and the amendment is so curiously drawn that I am at a loss to know whether it comes out of her five per cent. or out of the Treasury of the United States. At first I thought it was an appropriation out of the five per cent. fund due to Wisconsin, but I am inclined to think, on a more careful examination of the subject, that it will be derived from the Treasury of the United States. It is a proposition, then, to take money out of the Treasury of the United States to pay for this stock which we never agreed to buy unless Wisconsin chose to make the purchase for her own advantage, which she never has agreed to do in a period of twenty years.

Mr. JOHNSON. I of course wish to understand what the question before the Senate is before I vote. My present impression is that the case before us is this: an appropriation was made for the benefit of the canal company, and the controversy now is whether the canal company has or has not a right as against the United States upon an alleged failure on the part of the United States to comply with their part of the contract as between themselves and the canal company. The State of Wisconsin claims the whole amount of the fund in the hands of the United States, or rather that five per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands ought to be paid to the State, and the canal company insists that a portion of those proceeds are due to it.

Mr. HOWE. No, the Senator will allow me to say; neither the canal company nor anybody else, so far as I know, denies that the State of Wisconsin is entitled to just what she claims, that is, five per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands; but of the grant that was made to the Territory for the purpose of constructing that canal, a portion of the land was sold and a part of the money was paid over to the company and expended, and a part was not, but still remains in the treasury of Wisconsin, and the question is whether that portion belongs to the United States or belongs to the canal company. That is the dispute. The United States has charged the whole grant to the State, that which she has got and that which has been paid over to the company. Everybody concedes now that that charge is wrong, and so far as the unexpended balance in our hands is concerned, the State concedes that she does not own it, that it belongs to somebody else, she is a mere stakeholder, and the question now under debate is whether it belongs to the United States or belongs to the canal company. The canal company say it belongs to them because the act which made the grant declared that if the State of Wisconsin which was to be formed afterwards out of the Territory should make no other adequate provision for purchasing out the residue of the stock of the said canal, the dividend of the State stock thereby acquired, and all other proceeds of the sales of the lands thereby granted, should constitute a fund to be applied to the extinguishment of the claims of all other stockholders until the entire stock vested in the canal should have been acquired by the State. After which, and after said State should have been reimbursed for all expenses incurred out of her own proper funds in the construction and repairs of said canal, no other tolls or charge whatever for the use or navigation of the said canal should be levied, except to such amount as might be required to keep the said canal and the works appurtenant thereto in good repair, and provide for the collection of the tolls and the superintendence of said canal.

Because of that language, and because of the decision had in the House of Representatives some years ago, the canal company say that this fund belongs to them; it was granted to their use, and they ought to have it; and it ought not to go into the treasury until all the individual money which they expended has been refunded. The Territory of Wisconsin, it will be borne in mind, some years after this work was undertaken, thinking that the fund was not likely to prove adequate, and that the company with all its private means and with the trust fund was not likely to be able to complete the canal, thought it discreet not to pay over any more money, and asked Congress to take back the grant. On that occasion the question of the right of the company to the grant was considered, and a committee of the House of Representatives made a report from which the Senator from Indiana has quoted repeatedly. I will just call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to this clause of it:

"The company have refused their assent to this proposition?"

That is, the proposition that the Government should take back the grant:

"The company have refused their assent to this proposition of the Territorial Legislature, and the inquiry presents itself whether, without that assent, the Federal Government can rightfully exercise the supposed power of repealing the act of cession. From the recitals made above from the charter, and from the act of June 18, it is manifest that the company have an interest in the proceeds of the lands. They constitute an estate in trust, the use of which is to be enjoyed by the company under its charter. The Territory, as a party, can assert no beneficial or pecuniary interest in the fund: its character is entirely fiduciary, and its rightful action can only be in subordination to the objects authorized by the charter. This grant was made for the sole purpose of aiding the company in opening the canal. To this aid, to this pecuniary benefit, they have an undoubted right."

Holding that without the assent of the company the grant could not be passed back. Then, thinking it still imprudent to pay over the money to the company, the Territory used the money for its own use, but passing the act which the Senator from Indiana has quoted, pledging the faith of the Territory to make the fund good. The fund is good to-day, and the State simply waits for you to determine whether you own it or whether the canal company owns it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I collect, then, from the explanation made by the honorable member from Wisconsin that there is a dispute between the three parties, the canal company, the State of Wisconsin, and the United States; and the object of this joint resolution is to settle that dispute, the whole of it. The United States have in their hands five per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands in Wisconsin, due to that State. The honorable member says the State of Wisconsin has in its hands part of the proceeds of the lands that were included in the grant to the canal company, the part not expended, and the canal company are unable to get those proceeds from the State of Wisconsin because the United States are unwilling to pay the five per cent. which the United States hold and which if nothing else had occurred would clearly belong to the State of Wisconsin. The condition, therefore, in which the State is, is that she cannot get her five per cent., and the condition in which the canal company is, is that it cannot get the proceeds in the hands of the State which the canal company claims; and the effect of these two difficulties is that the dispute is kept alive and must continue to be kept alive until it is settled by some judicial decision. There can be no judicial decision, first, because the State cannot be sued, and secondly because the United States cannot be sued; and the only way, therefore, in which it can be settled is by an arbitration voluntarily entered into or compulsorily ordered; and if I understand the object of the joint resolution reported from the committee on this subject, it is to leave by law the settlement of this question to the law officers of the Government, and that settles the whole dispute. If Wisconsin receives from the Treasury, even if the Government were willing to pay it, the five per cent. which the Government holds and which belongs to the State of Wisconsin, then the canal company will say that the United States ought to pay them the amount of the proceeds which are in the hands of the State of Wisconsin and which the State refuses to pay; so that really it would seem to me that the only practical way, the only way in which the dispute can be settled at all is the way proposed by the committee or some analogous way. The laws as they now stand furnish no remedy for the case, and the question for the Senate to decide is whether the case is not entitled to a remedy, (and nobody can doubt about that,) and if it is, whether this is not a fair remedy. Thinking that it is, I shall vote for the joint resolution.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I shall vote against his amendment and vote for the report of the committee, because the very question of the validity of the claim of this company as against Wisconsin will come up and be heard and determined before the Commissioner of the General Land Office. We do not by voting for this reference admit in behalf of Wisconsin any valid claim on the part of this company against the State of Wisconsin; but for the sake of peace, and to have an end of the controversy, which has lasted nearly twenty years, we are willing to vote for this joint resolution which contains a reference to a tribunal that will put an end to the controversy.

Mr. HARLAN. The Senator is entirely mistaken. It does not leave the question open to be decided by the Commissioner, only so far as ascertaining the amount is concerned. It settles the whole question of the right of the company. Here is the language that I propose to strike out:

The said Secretary shall also settle and allow to the Milwaukee and Rock River Canal Company such sums of money as have been properly expended by said company in the survey and location of said canal, &c.

There it is; it is a decision of the whole question here by Congress. The only question open for the Commissioner of the General Land Office is to ascertain how much they have thus expended, and not to ascertain whether we are liable for the amount.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire simply to say in reference to this matter, which I once looked into somewhat, that I do not think the Government of the United States ought to be mixed up with the settlement of the claims which a company in Wisconsin has against the State of Wisconsin. I shall therefore vote for this amendment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. In answer to my honorable friend from Illinois, allow me to say that the Government of the United States has mixed itself up with our Wisconsin affairs by refusing to pay us our five per cent., and refusing to pay that five per cent. until we settled with this company. We cannot get the five per cent. without it.

Mr. HARLAN. The Senator is in error there again; the State of Wisconsin has been credited every dollar of the five per cent. fund on the books of the Treasury, and the whole amount has been paid over to Wisconsin, and more than the whole amount, and she is now indebted on the books of the Treasury to the United States the sum of over sixty-three thousand dollars.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Wisconsin is charged with this land at $2 50 an acre.

Mr. HARLAN. And this joint resolution, in the first part of it, proposes to remit just one half of that, and that, I think, would be just; but this canal company says the Government of the United States shall not remit $156,000 with which she has improperly charged Wisconsin, unless we take an additional sum from the Treasury of the United States and pay them all they have put into a canal over in Wisconsin. That is the state of the controversy.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The account, as charged on the books of the Treasury of the United States against Wisconsin, charges Wisconsin with this land at $2 50 an acre, which is charging Wisconsin by the wholesale for lands twice as much as the United States sell them for at retail in all the new States and Territories. That is the way in which the account stands there. At once it is seen that, so far as Wisconsin is concerned, it certainly cannot be right to charge her twice as much at wholesale as the Government charges individuals at retail for the public lands.

Mr. HOWE. I must protest against the remark of the Senator from Iowa, when he undertakes to say that the State of Wisconsin has received every dollar of the five per cent. fund. I cannot conceive by what reason or upon what data he can justify that statement. In point of fact, strictly speaking, we have not received a dollar of it; but we have received, and have now, as the resolution admits, out of another fund, which does not belong to us, a part of the five per cent. fund. We propose to offset it against the five per cent. fund. That is all. It is true we have been credited with the whole five per cent. fund, but you have charged us with this whole grant at twice as much as the Senator concedes it ought to be charged at, and a grant which was not made for our use to the amount of one dollar. We could not receive one dollar of benefit, as I have stated over and over again, and shown you, and as your own committee of the House of Representatives said. We could not receive a dollar's beneficial interest out of it in any way; and yet you have charged us double what you ought to have charged for it if we had had the whole interest. We want to get rid of that charge. That is what we are struggling for.

Mr. HARLAN. The Senator from Wisconsin is not correct in saying that Wisconsin never received a cent. It received every dollar due up to 1851 in money.

Mr. HOWE. Not of this claim.

Mr. HARLAN. Yes, of the five per cent. fund, and since then it has received it in credit on the books of the Treasury. It is true the Government did charge her $2 50 an acre for the land granted to construct this work, and the first part of this joint resolution proposes to remit just one half of that charge, amounting to $156,000; but the Senators refuse to take this unless we put our hands into the Treasury and take out an additional sum equal to all that the canal company has expended.

Mr. HOWE. I protest again. The Senator says that "the Senators refuse to take this." He knows that the resolution which I introduced myself did not open up this controversy. I proposed simply a settlement between the State and the United States, and I have said since this debate came before the Senate that I regarded the State of Wisconsin as a simple stakeholder. So far as the State is concerned I care nothing whether you vote that money into the Treasury or into the hands of the company. He is not justified, therefore, in saying that "the Senators refuse" to make this settlement unless this other thing is done. We refuse no such thing.

Mr. HARLAN. I think I was justified in making the remark, from having heard the announcement of the mode in which the Senator said he intended to vote. The bill, as introduced by him, I think is about right without any amendment whatever, and it would remit to the Senate about one hundred and fifty-six thousand dollars unjustly charged, and I am perfectly willing to vote for the proposition as he introduced it; but then the amendment carries as much more as I have indicated. It carries from the Treasury of the United States to the canal company an amount of money which the Senator himself never intended should be taken; and hence I think I have a right to claim his vote in favor of the amendment I have proposed, for that will leave the joint resolution substantially as he introduced it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 10, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Fessenden, Foot, Harlan, Morgan, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wilkinson, and Wilson—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Carlisle, Clark, Conness, Doolittle, Harris, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Sausbury, Sprague, Sumner, and Wiley—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Sherman, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wright—17.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

SPECULATIVE TRANSACTIONS IN GOLD.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 106) to prohibit certain sales of gold and foreign exchange. The amendment was to strike out the first section of the bill after the enacting clause, and in lieu of it to insert the following:

That it shall be unlawful to make any contract for the purchase or sale and delivery of any gold coin or bullion to be delivered on any day subsequent to the day of making such contract, or for the payment of any sum, either fixed or contingent, in default of the delivery of any gold coin or bullion, or to make such contract upon any other terms than the actual delivery of such gold coin or bullion, and the payment in full of the agreed price thereof, on the day on which such contract is made, in United States notes or national currency, and not otherwise; or to make any contract for the purchase or sale and delivery of any foreign exchange to be delivered at any time beyond ten days subsequent to the making of such contract, or for the payment of any sum, either fixed or contingent, in default of the delivery of any foreign exchange, or upon any other terms than the actual delivery of such foreign exchange within ten days from the making of such contract, and the immediate payment in full of the agreed price thereof on the day of delivery in United States notes or national currency; or to make any contract whatever for the sale and delivery of any gold coin or bullion of which the person making such contract shall not, at the time of making the same, be in actual possession. And it shall be unlawful to make any loan of money or currency not being in coin to be repaid in coin or bullion, or to make any loan of coin or bullion to be repaid in money or currency other than coin.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is a very lengthy amendment, and I think it ought to be printed so that we can see exactly what it is before voting on it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It only makes two changes from the section as it stood before, and they are in mitigation of it. Instead of requiring immediate payment in the case of a sale of gold, it allows the contract to be completed within the day. Then in regard to the purchase of foreign exchange, it allows the transaction to be completed within ten days instead of its being done at once. The amendment is an improvement on the bill, and an improvement in the direction in which the Senator's mind would operate. I think, therefore, there can be no objection to adopting the amendment at once.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the amendment change the Senate bill except in the first section?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It only changes the first section.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have not been of opinion that it was competent for Congress to legislate in respect to contracts in the States. It is an important question, and I think the Senator from Maine might let it stand over till to-morrow and let the amendment be printed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator insists upon that, I shall not make objection; but inasmuch as the Senate passed the bill on full consideration, and this amendment is a change in the direction of the Senator's own argument and would rather operate in the way he desires, I should suppose he would make no objection. It is rather important if it is to pass that it should be passed as soon as possible. I will not object, however, to the printing of the amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I cannot tell now whether I may not want to propose an amendment to the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope not. We discussed the matter quite fully; it has been gone over and over and through and through in all directions, and further discussion would only have a tendency to illustrate what we all understand, the Senator's acuteness and power on such questions.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am much obliged to the Senator; but I think the bill ought to be printed with the amendment. I do not want to discuss it, but I may possibly wish to propose an amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will not object to printing the amendment if the Senator insists upon it, and I make that motion.

Several SENATORS. Pass it now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Senators about me think it is best to dispose of the question at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

Mr. JOHNSON. The amendment I understand does not alter the bill except in the particular stated by the Senator from Maine, which would make it more acceptable to those who were opposed to the original bill. The objection, however, that I had to the first section of the original bill is not removed by the amendment, because that objection was as to the authority of Congress to legislate on the subject at all. As far as I am concerned, therefore, the amendment will not receive my assent; but as a majority of the Senate think otherwise, there is no reason why it should not be acted upon at once.

The amendment was concurred in.

GOODS IN WAREHOUSE.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is upon the table another bill which has been returned from the House of Representatives with amendments, and I desire to have them disposed of. It is the bill in reference to goods in warehouse.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 282) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the withdrawal of goods from public stores and bonded warehouses, and for other purposes," approved February 29, 1864.

The amendments were, after the word "warehouses," in line two, to strike out as follows: "On the 1st day of May, A. D., 1864;" in line four to strike out the words "at that time were" and to insert in lieu thereof "are;" in line five to strike out the words "had then" and insert in lieu thereof "shall have;" so that, if amended, the bill will read:

That all goods, wares, and merchandise in public stores or bonded warehouses, on which the duties are unpaid, and which shall have been in bond for more than one year and less than three years, may be entered for consumption and the bonds canceled at any time before the 1st day of September next, on payment of duties and charges according to the laws in force at the time the goods shall be withdrawn.

The amendments were concurred in.

TRADING WITH INSURRECTIONARY DISTRICTS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move—

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senator from Maine will not interfere now. It was understood that the bill for the Bureau of Freedmen should come up next.

Mr. MORRILL. I beg to say that I have had an understanding with myself for the last three days to press the bill which I propose to take up at the first moment I could get the floor.

Mr. SUMNER. I have had an understanding with myself for three months in regard to this other bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I want only to finish a bill which has been three times before the Senate, and will not occupy twenty minutes.

Mr. SUMNER. I desire to finish a bill; whether it will occupy twenty minutes or not, I do not know. I hope not twenty minutes.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to take up Senate bill No. 232, in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States. It is one of the most important bills that can be presented to the Senate, and it has been considered several times.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope that the Senate will not now proceed to the consideration of that bill. The Senator says it will not occupy twenty minutes. Grant that. I have given way to-day from time to time; indeed I began at one o'clock by giving way. Motion after motion has been made, and each time I have tried to bring forward a bill which has been pending now not weeks but months, and which has been under consideration already for hours, much more than the bill of the Senator. It precedes the bill of the Senator in every sense, by its place on the Calendar, by its place in the consideration of this body, and I submit, also, by its importance. It hope that my friend will allow me to proceed with that bill and bring it to a conclusion to-day.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine to let the bill alluded to by him lie over for a day or two days unless he is especially urgent about it. My colleague who, he will remember, was engaged in the discussion of it when it was up before, and who is very deeply interested in the bill itself, is unwell to-day and not able to be out. It is a bill that involves our State very largely, perhaps more largely than any other State, in its commercial relations, and I shall be gratified to have an opportunity to have the matter discussed, and discussed by my colleague, who has given the question some attention. If the Senator's sense of duty will permit him to let the matter lie over, I shall be gratified if he will do so.

Mr. MORRILL. I am aware that the Senator from Missouri on this side of the Chamber has taken a deep interest in this bill, but I propose to offer an amendment which I supposed to some extent would obviate the objection brought against it by him.

Mr. BROWN. I will state to the Senator from Maine that my colleague sent word to the Senate to-day asking, if the bill came up, to have it laid over if possible.

Mr. SUMNER. It seems to me that is enough.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill is of the very greatest importance, and I have pressed it once or twice on the Senate; but I feel that I have been a little negligent, that I have not pressed it on the Senate at an earlier day; but under this appeal perhaps I ought not to press it at present, and I withdraw my motion.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. SUMNER. Now I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 51, to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs.

Mr. McDUGALL called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 11, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, and Wiley—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Foster, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Richardson, Sherman, and Wright—15.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to mention in connection with the vote just taken that my colleague [Mr. COWAN] is detained from the Senate by indisposition.

Mr. McDUGALL. I ask the courtesy of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] to allow me to offer a resolution now for present consideration but to go upon the table.

Mr. CONNESS and Mr. SUMNER. What is it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read, as follows:

Resolved, That the people of the United States can never regard with indifference the attempt of any foreign Power to overthrow by force or to supplant by fraud the institutions of any republican Government on the western continent, and that they will view with extreme jealousy, as menacing to the peace and independence of their own country, the efforts of any such Power to obtain any footholds for monarchical Governments sustained by foreign military force in near proximity to the United States.

Mr. CONNESS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution cannot be received.

Mr. McDUGALL. I give notice then of the resolution for to-morrow morning, when I shall call it up for consideration. I suppose that is sufficient notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No notice is required to introduce a mere resolution. At the proper time when in order the Senator can offer a resolution without notice. The objection now is that a bill is pending before the Senate.

Mr. McDUGALL. I shall present it at the first opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 51) to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the question being on the amendment reported by the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

Mr. GRIMES. It will be observed that in the second section of the amendment proposed by the select committee on slavery and freedmen it is provided that the Commissioner who is to have charge of this bureau "shall have authority, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to create departments of freedmen within the rebel States, so far as the same may be brought under the military power of the United States;" but there is no limit to the number of these departments. I propose to amend that clause by inserting after the word "States" in the fourth line the words "not to exceed two in each State."

Mr. SUMNER. I have no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I now move in line ten of that section after the word "needed" to insert "not to exceed four in each State," so as to limit the number of local superintendents and clerks.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no objection.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. Now I propose to strike out the eleventh and twelfth lines of that section, and insert the words "$1,500." That will give to these local superintendents and clerks $1,500 compensation. The section now provides that they shall receive "a compensation not exceeding the ordinary rate for similar services, subject, in all respects, to the approval of the Secretary."

I do not suppose there is any "ordinary rate for similar services."

Mr. SUMNER. The judgment of the Senator on that question certainly is fully as good as mine, and I should be disposed to defer to it. I merely call his attention to this point, whether it may not happen that in some parts of the country the service that is desired cannot be obtained for $1,500; and if so, whether upon the whole it might not be better to leave this question of compensation to the discretion of the Secretary. As it now stands, it does come back upon his discretion. I put that as an inquiry to the Senator. I say that I shall defer to his judgment upon it; he is more familiar with that part of the country than I am; but the practical question is whether if you insert the limitation proposed by the Senator you may not in some way constrain the operations of the Department, whether you may not oblige yourself to resort to an inferior kind of service which will not be competent to do the work required.

Mr. GRIMES. The committee themselves have fixed the compensation of the Assistant Commissioner, who is a superior officer to the superintendents and clerks, at $2,000, and I thought that I was providing for a very liberal compensation to these subordinate officers in comparison with the Assistant Commissioner, who is to receive $2,000, when I proposed that they should receive $1,500. The Senator will observe that in the seventh line of this section it is provided that these Assistant Commissioners shall receive an annual salary of $2,000, and they have authority "to appoint local superintendents and clerks, so far as the same may be needed, not to exceed four in each State, at a compensation not exceeding $1,500." That is the way I propose to amend it. I think that will command the best talent that may be required for this service.

Mr. POMEROY. I think $1,500 is a fair compensation.

Mr. GRIMES. Very liberal compensation.

Mr. POMEROY. That is the compensation the Indian agents have. I think we had better settle on it.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have one or two amendments to propose. In the third line of the first section of the amendment of the committee I move to strike out "Treasury Department" and insert "Department of the Interior." I am not in favor of the bill, but I think this matter should go under the Interior Department if under any Department. It does not relate to the Treasury or to the management of the finances of the country, but contemplates a supervision over a class of persons in the country. The management of the Indians is somewhat analogous to it, and yet that belongs to the Interior Department. There are disbursements of money, to be sure, connected with the management of the Indians; but those disbursements are made under the supervision of the Interior Department. Pensions, and the like of that, relating to different individuals and classes of persons, are all placed under the charge of the Interior Department. It seems to me that it is proper, in connection with the general system we have, that this should be referred to the Interior rather than the Treasury Department.

Mr. SUMNER. The point to which the Senator directs attention was considered very carefully by the committee. Were this a moment of peace, I believe the committee would have been unanimous in adopting the idea of the Senator. Indeed, it seems to me, the reasons for it, if this were a moment of peace, are absolutely unanswerable. It is in the Interior Department that we place the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Bureau of Pensions, the Bureau of Patents, the Bureau of Public Lands, and this certainly would be more or less germane with all those interests. It would naturally be lodged in the same Department with them. Naturally it belongs to the Interior; there can be no question about it. The Senator, therefore, is perfectly right when he makes the suggestion. But the Senator should take into consideration that at this moment we are acting provisionally and not permanently under suggestions growing out of the present state of the country, and not as if we were in a condition of permanent peace.

In placing the bureau where the committee have placed it, they followed what seemed to be the necessities of the case. Congress by previous legislation has practically placed the bureau there, in the Treasury Department, or rather it has rendered it necessary that the bureau should be placed there, unless Congress was willing by legislation on this matter to create a conflict between two different Departments. Congress has already placed in the Treasury Department the control of the business relations between the rebel States and the loyal States, and also the control of the abandoned lands and plantations in the rebel States. Now, as I tried to exhibit to the Senate the other day when I opened this question, the main interest for the moment in regard to the freedmen is how to bring them in connection with the lands. If you go beyond that, if you undertake to provide means for their support, you assume what I believe the country really does not expect you to assume, and what I believe those who have the welfare of that people most at heart do not venture to counsel. We desire to secure to that people opportunity—opportunity to work; that is the main point, and that can be secured only by bringing them in connection with the lands. The care and guardianship of those lands where it is proposed to place the freedmen has already by previous legislation been lodged with the Treasury Department. Therefore, naturally and logically it seemed to follow, unless you were willing to create a conflict between two different Departments or between the agents of two different Departments, that you should place the care of the freedmen in the same Department.

Sir, I am not alone in this view. The other day I presented it and gave some opinions on the subject. I have here a letter; it was written as a private letter from Mr. Owen, well known to the Senator from Indiana, from which I will read a passage:

"It will never do to have Treasury agents who lease the lands to white men, and War Department agents who assign the same lands to colored people. Nothing but confusion and conflict of authority can result; it will not work at all; but even if it would, why employ two sets of agents to do what one set can do so much better? And who is to inspect the leased plantations, and see to it that neither employers nor employed are wronged? The men who give the leases to them are Treasury agents, and have nothing to do with freedmen or the freedmen's commissioners; but what authority can they have over men who do not hold their leases from them? The men who have the care of the laborer ought to have the leasing of the land and the inspection of the leases, and they should be authorized to lease equally to white and to colored people."

But this is not all. I hold in my hand a document which was not printed when I addressed the Senate before on this subject, though, having perused it in manuscript, I referred to it. It is a part of the report of the freedmen's commission, appointed by the Secretary of War to consider, among other questions, the very one which is now before the Senate. In the course of the document the commission express the following explicit opinions:

"But, in the judgment of the commission, the most serious error in connection with the present arrangements for the care and protection of these people arises out of the assignment to a different agency of the care and disposal of the abandoned plantations."

The Senator from Indiana will observe how completely that is an answer to his proposition to place the Bureau of Freedmen in the Department of the Interior, because, as I have already said, Congress has placed the care of the abandoned plantations in another Department.

The commissioners proceed:

"To enter into the detail of all the evils and abuses that have arisen out of this error, and which are unavoidable so long as it continues to exist, would occupy too great a space in this report. Suffice it to say that it is the source of the greatest confusion and a perpetual collision between the different local authorities, in which not only the emancipated population but the Government itself suffers the most serious injuries and losses."

The commissioners then proceed to quote the opinion of General Banks on the very question started by the Senator from Indiana. It is as follows:

"The assignment of the abandoned or forfeited plantations to one Department of the Government, and the protection and support of the emancipated people to another, is a fundamental error productive of incalculable evils, and cannot be too soon or too thoroughly corrected."

So far General Banks. The commissioners then proceed:

"And this is the purport of all the testimony which the commission has been able to obtain, not in the department of the Gulf only, but everywhere in relation to the matter."

"The unhesitating judgment of every person, official or other, not interested in the opportunities it affords for speculation with whom we have consulted, coincides with that of General Banks. All, without exception, declare that no system can avail to effect the great objects contemplated, that does not assign to one and the same authority the care and disposal of the abandoned plantations and the care and protection of the emancipated laborers who are to cultivate them."

"And, after the most thorough investigations, I am authorized in saying that this is the deliberate judgment of the commission."

Now, sir, this is the answer to the proposition of the Senator from Indiana. In order to make his proposition practical, he must proceed still further, and take from the Treasury Department the superintendence of the business relations between the loyal and disloyal States, and that other branch which has followed on the first, the care of the abandoned plantations and captured property. It was after a most careful review of the whole question, contemplating it in every possible light, and I may say beginning with a conviction that the bureau ought not to be lodged in the Treasury Department, that I was brought to the conclusion that at the present moment there was no other place where it could be lodged with any reasonable chance of its accomplishing the good which we hope for it.

But I wish the Senate to bear in mind that I speak only for the present time. If we were establishing a permanent bureau to continue hereafter when the war is closed, or for an indefinite time during peace, than it should be placed where the Senator from Indiana proposes to place it. But until then, it seems to me, it must be placed in the Treasury Department, unless we choose to take from that Department that other branch of business to which I have referred.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator says that if we were in a time of peace he would be in favor of the proposition. How long does the Senator expect this war to last? Does he expect this bureau to continue as a bureau of the Government only during the war? I presume, to accomplish his purposes, that it must continue for some period after the termination of the war. I am not one of those who believe that this war is to continue very many years. I believe it has got to terminate some way or other within a reasonably short period; and therefore, as this bureau is to continue, unquestionably, (the Senator will not question that,) for some time after the war, for a longer time after the war than during the war, the argument on that point, so far as length of time decides it, is in favor of the amendment which I have proposed.

His next point is that the abandoned plantations ought to be under the control of the same Department in which this bureau is to be located. If we are to have a management of the abandoned plantations at all, it ought to be in the Interior Department. If these lands are to be considered as abandoned by the owner and thereby fall into the mass of the public lands, as is contemplated by a bill that is before the Senate, those public lands ought to be under the control of the Interior Department, because they do not relate to the Treasury; the Treasury has no machinery for their management; and I think perhaps that is one reason they have been so badly managed, why there are so many complaints from different quarters of fraud and outrage touching the management of the abandoned lands. I do not know very much of it, but it is said that a system of favoritism has grown up that is exceedingly disgusting, and it may be owing to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury is so much occupied with investigations of altogether a different sort that he cannot give the necessary attention to that class of business.

But further, I ask the Senator having this bill in charge if he intends one set of agents to be paid by the Government to manage the lands that are abandoned, and another set of agents to be paid by the Government to manage the negroes in the same neighborhood? Certainly, the superintendents that he provides for in this bill ought to take the immediate charge of abandoned lands, if they are to be taken charge of at all by officers of the Government; and it is my purpose, if this bill is to become a law, to provide that the agencies established in the bill itself shall have charge of the abandoned lands. We ought not to be paying two sets of agents to manage a matter that one set of agents ought to manage. If there is force in the argument of the Senator that the agents managing the abandoned lands ought to be appointed by the same Department, that argument will go further, and will lead us to this result, that the abandoned lands and the freedmen, as he calls them, ought to be managed by the same agents in the same neighborhood.

Mr. SUMNER. That is admitted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Thereby saving very large expenditures to the Government, enormous expenses. Then in this same bill he ought to provide at once that these agents whom he provides for shall have charge of the abandoned lands. Then the whole properly falls under the Interior Department. This matter will have to go to the Interior Department some time. There is so much dissatisfaction with the management of the abandoned lands, and the Treasury regulations touching the commerce between the sections, that it will go to some other Department before very long.

Mr. SUMNER. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the seventh section? There he will find a provision which I think meets his views. It is that the agents of the Treasury who now have the leasing of abandoned plantations shall hand over all their papers to the commissioners appointed under this bill, the object being to put an end to those agencies, or rather to allow them to be all absorbed into those created under this bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If that be done, then these ought to be agents of the Interior Department, and there need be none of this conflict that the Senator provides for. In a very simple provision of this bill we can transfer the whole of the lands, which properly belong to the Interior Department, as well as the persons that he wants to provide for, and let the whole go to the Interior Department. I think, that Department being more accustomed to deal with questions of this sort, and having the machinery for their management, there will be less public dissatisfaction because of favoritism and fraud than as they are managed now.

I think the amendment I have proposed ought to be adopted to make the system effective. Let the agencies for the lands and the agencies for freedmen be the same, and the whole under the Interior Department.

Mr. SUMNER. I have only to say in reply that when the war is over and the State governments are once more established I shall welcome such a proposition as the Senator now makes. If a Bureau of Freedmen continues then, its proper place will be in the Department of the Interior; but until then it must be where Congress has already placed these other branches of public business with which this bureau is necessarily associated.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator admits that the proper Department to take charge of the business to be created by this bill, in a time of peace, is the Department of the Interior. About that I suppose there can be no difference of opinion. But he says this is not a time when it should go into the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, because we are in a state of war. If we are in a state of war, as we certainly are, and if, because we are in that state, it is not proper that the control should be in the hands of the Interior Department, it seems to me equally to follow that it should not be in the hands of any of the civil Departments of the Government, but in the hands of the War Department; and I see the bill as it originally was drafted by the House of Representatives, and as it came to us from that House, left it with the War Department. There must have been some reason for taking it away from that Department, and if the honorable member is able to tell us why it is that the Treasury Department was substituted for the War Department, I should, for one, like to be informed.

Mr. SUMNER. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator had done me the honor to listen to me the other day—I know it is too much for me to expect—he would have found all that answered at too great length. I discussed it fully; and I may say also that I have discussed it even this morning. I have stated that the actual legislation of Congress required that the proposed bureau should be placed in the Treasury Department, and it is simply to prevent discord and conflict between two Departments and between the agents of two Departments managing more or less the same subject-matter. Congress has already placed in the Treasury Department, as I have said, the care of the business relations between the rebel States and the loyal States, and also the care of the abandoned lands and captured property.

Now, Congress may have erred in placing those two interests in the Treasury Department. On that I express no opinion. Possibly the Senator from Maryland is right when he suggests that they should be in the War Department. Congress has not seen fit to place them in the War Department; it has placed them in the Treasury Department; and as all the testimony of persons most interested in this question, constituting what we may call experts, went in one direction, that the care of the freedmen should be in the same Department which had the care of the lands, the committee felt constrained to report the present bill, feeling that if the care of the freedmen was placed in any other Department, be it the War or be it the Interior, there would be an occasion for conflict or discord at least among the agents of these two Departments, if not between the two Departments.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question, as he is familiar with this subject. Is there any inconvenience, so far as the records are concerned, or the mere machinery that is found now in the Treasury Department, in transferring that from that Department to the Department of the Interior?

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator understands that we should have to transfer these two great interests to which I have referred, the control of the business relations between the rebel States and the loyal States, and also the control of the abandoned plantations and captured property.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator does not understand the question I designed to put. It is this: whether it is inconvenient or impracticable to hand over the machinery already established in the Treasury Department, the records, and the files. Are the books voluminous?

Mr. SUMNER. On that point I am not able to answer positively; but I have an impression that if Congress should see fit to take from the Treasury Department the whole subject-matter under the two heads to which I have referred, the business relations between the rebel States and the loyal States, and the control of the abandoned plantations and captured property, all that in one mass might be transferred to another Department. I know nothing to the contrary.

Mr. GRIMES. I have no proposition to make in regard to it; but it seems that there are three different Departments here who have their advocates for the control and management of this Freedmen's Bureau. The Senator from Massachusetts is in favor of vesting all this power in the Secretary of the Treasury; the Senator from Indiana prefers to bestow it upon the Secretary of the Interior; and the Senator from Maryland proposes to put it upon the War Department. As I said before, I have no proposition to make; but I wish to ask these Senators whether they have not overlooked one department to which this subject might more properly be referred than to any other, and that is to the Attorney General. It is known of course that the War Department is overwhelmed with business. There are connected with it a great many bureaus. It has the charge of the armies in the field; it has the charge of almost all the operations in connection with this war. The Interior Department has charge of our public lands, of our Census Bureau, of our Indian affairs, of patents and the Patent Office, and, I believe, is somewhat connected with the agriculture of the country. The Treasury Department is also overwhelmed with business. The Attorney General, who holds the same relation to the Government as a member of the Cabinet, has connected with his department no bureau. He has thus far been a mere law officer of the Government. It will be observed by reference to this bill that the chief of this Freedmen's Bureau is called upon to perform very responsible legal duties. He is to see that lands are leased; he is to appear in court and represent all of these freedmen in any controversy that may arise between them and third parties, or he is to see that somebody does appear and represent them. It occurs to me, although I am not prepared to give any advice to the Senate on a subject of this kind, that there is a peculiar appropriateness in putting this bureau into the charge of the Attorney General. That makes the fourth Department that has been suggested as being the proper one.

Mr. SUMNER. In reply to that I have simply to say that had Congress placed the other branch of the subject in the charge of the Department of the Attorney General, I should certainly be in favor of following the suggestion of the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I offer an amendment to add as a new section the following:

And be it further enacted, That all white persons in the States not in revolt shall be protected in their constitutional rights, and that no such person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall any such person be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any such person, except as aforesaid, be tried for any crime or offense whatever by court-martial or military commission.

It is not my intention to discuss this bill at the present time. If the vote should not be taken this afternoon, perhaps I may do so to-morrow. Neither is it my intention to discuss the amendment which I have offered.

The bill under consideration, in my judgment, has not a single section in it which is not liable to a constitutional objection. The bill is very careful of the rights, if rights there be, of the interests, if interests there be, and of the feelings of the negro race. I wish in these times, when so much interest is manifested in that particular race by Congress, and when so much of the legislation of the country is devoted to that particular race, that we should manifest some regard for our own poor, abject, downtrodden, and in these times I fear, popularly considered even inferior race. I want to see whether the Senate of the United States will recognize those great constitutional rights of white persons which are guaranteed in the Constitution which was framed by our fathers. It will be observed that the entire language of my amendment, with the exception of the latter clause which provides that no such persons shall be tried by court-martial or military commission, is in the language of the Constitution of the United States.

Sir, it may be out of order in these times to say a word or to enter a plea in behalf of this poor, downtrodden white race; certainly if the character of the legislation of Congress is to be considered, they have not much interest in this Government; because most of our legislation during this session has been devoted to a consideration of the interests of the negro race. Scarcely a single day since the commencement of this Congress has passed that the African race has not occupied a considerable portion of the attention of the Senate, much more, I apprehend, than the white race.

To guard this amendment which I propose against any possible objection arising from the class of persons whose rights are to be protected, I have been careful to insert in it the words "all white persons in the States not in revolt," so as to leave to the Administration to continue whatever policy they please in reference to persons in States in revolt. But, sir, I will not occupy the time of the Senate in discussing the question. I simply ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. I merely wish to make one remark now, and I hope I may not have occasion to say another word. This bill has been carefully considered by the committee; it is the best that they can present to the Senate; and their desire and my desire and the desire of its friends is that the Senate should proceed to vote without any further discussion, certainly on our part.

Mr. WILLEY. Of course the Senator from Delaware does not expect that there will be any very serious discussion of his proposition, or that it will be seriously entertained by the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not expect any discussion, but I did expect that it would be seriously entertained.

Mr. WILLEY. There is not a proposition in the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to which I do not most heartily subscribe; but I suppose it will hardly be proper to be attached to this bill. I rose, however, to notice a remark made by the Senator from Delaware. He said that in his opinion this bill, while it ignored the interests of the downtrodden white race, was, nevertheless, very careful of the African race. I entertain an opinion directly the reverse of that. In my opinion, after as close and careful an examination of this bill as I have been able to give to it, its proper title would be, "A bill to reënslave freedmen." Looking at the provisions of this bill, looking at the machinery by which its purposes are to be carried out, looking at the inevitable effects which must ensue, this bill if it passes will be the initiation of a policy to reënslave that portion of the African race to which it relates; and for one, sir, I protest against it on that ground.

Sir, it would be more consonant with what will be the practical results of this bill if the officer named in the first section of it as a Commissioner were called an Overseer General, and the subordinate officers provided for in other sections as deputy drivers, according to the language of the craft in the South. Why, sir, what responsibility is fixed upon any one of these commissioners who are to exercise this tremendous authority over the African race? What penalty in this bill is attached for cruelty, for peculation, for violation of their duties? Where is there any particular prescription of what they shall perform, except simply to confide in them an authority that no slave-master of the South ever gave to an overseer on his plantation. You may examine the articles of agreement, as I have a hundred times, between the slave-owners in the South and the overseers they employ, and I have never yet seen a carefully drawn agreement between them that did not provide more particularly for the care and protection of the negroes under his control than this bill does for the rights and liberties and privileges of the negroes who have been emancipated and who are to be operated upon by this bill. Sir, in the name of liberty and emancipation I protest against the passage of any such bill by the American Senate. Look at it for a moment. What is the language used in the bill?

That the Commissioner, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall have the general superintendence of all freedmen throughout the several departments, and it shall be his duty especially to watch over the execution of all laws, proclamations, and military orders of emancipation, or in any way concerning freedmen, and generally, by careful regulations, in the spirit of the Constitution.

That is the only limitation upon the exercise of his power; but he is clothed with the authority to say what the "spirit of the Constitution" is. There is no penalty in this bill for any violation of any authority vested in him; there is no limitation in it:

In the spirit of the Constitution to protect these persons in the enjoyment of their rights, to promote their welfare, and to secure to them and their posterity the blessings of liberty.

Sir, liberty is a thing that is regulated by law. What law regulates this Commissioner and his deputies in the exercise of the power vested in them in this bill? What is it that the Commissioner is required to do? Where are the limitations upon the exercise of his power? To what tribunal is he responsible? If to any tribunal at all, simply to the arbitrary discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, who is to appoint him, and to nobody else. I desire to attract the attention of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, and of all other Senators, to this bill in all its provisions, and I will venture to say that I will be sustained in the assertion by every candid mind in this Senate that there never was a more arbitrary authority vested in any set of human beings upon the face of the earth. Why, sir, the master is limited in the exercise of arbitrary authority and cruelty toward his slave by his interest in the preservation of his life and health, so that he may make the most out of his labor; but there is nothing even of that character here. It is arbitrary power without any limitation, without any rules or regulations to govern these masters and drivers in the exercise of their most extraordinary authority.

Why, sir, it has been held lately that these freedmen are perfectly competent to exercise the great privilege of franchise or voting; but according to the provisions of this bill they are not to be allowed even to exercise their own free will in their maintenance and self-support, unless it be under the supervision and direction, if not under the lash, of an arbitrary commissioner, appointed without responsibility to any authority anywhere or anyhow.

Look at the provisions of this bill again, sir. It seems that there is to be no limitation to it. I looked in the amendment reported by the Senate committee for a limitation to this system that is put upon the country by the appointment of a swarm of irresponsible officers at extravagant salaries; but it seems there is to be no end to it; there is no limitation, no time fixed when the exercise of this authority is to cease. It is not only irresponsible while it exists, it is not only illimitable in its extent while it operates, but illimitable, so far as this bill is concerned, in the length of its duration. When are these poor creatures to be allowed to escape from the custody and oversight and domination of these irresponsible commissioners who are to be placed over them? These men, who are sometimes qualified to vote, are not allowed to make a contract, under this bill, for a longer period than one year, but from year to year without any end, so far as this bill is concerned. They are to be in the hands of these commissioners; their contracts are to be written for them; they are to be under the supervision of these men from year to year, transferred hither and thither, according to the arbitrary authority of these men, from farm to farm, and section to section, so far as I can see, without any limitation or discrimination.

Senators look at me as if they were surprised at my warmth. I say again I protest, in the name of liberty, against this bill as the initiation of a scheme, much earlier than I had anticipated, to reënslave the men who, by the operation of this war, have, for a short time at least, enjoyed the boon of freedom.

Look at the provisions of the bill further. In one sense, some portion of the white race might be characterized as downtrodden by this bill. Here is another provision of it:

That the Assistant Commissioners shall have authority, within their respective departments, to take possession of all abandoned real estate and all real estate, with the houses thereon, liable to sale or confiscation.

In other words, if in the county of Fairfax, Virginia—and I only allude to that section of the country by way of illustration—there are farms lying abandoned there to-day, as there are, owned by loyal refugees in the city of Washington, they are to be taken possession of by these commissioners. The bill provides that all abandoned farms are to be taken possession of by these Commissioners whether they belong to loyal or disloyal persons. Why, sir, there are thousands upon thousands of abandoned farms all over the South to-day, unless they are occupied by traitors, the owners of whom have sought refuge in the North until this storm of war be over and passed.

Mr. SUMNER. Let me correct the Senator. The Senator forgets to read the qualifying language:

All abandoned real estate and all real estate, with the houses thereon, liable to sale or confiscation, or to any claim of title by the United States, and not already appropriated to Government uses.

Mr. WILLEY. Very well; I will read it again:

That the Assistant Commissioners shall have authority within their respective departments to take possession of all abandoned real estate and all real estate, with the houses thereon, liable to sale or confiscation—

The Senator's own bill makes a distinction between the two classes of real estate—

All abandoned real estate and all real estate, with the houses thereon, liable to sale or confiscation, or to any claim of title by the United States.

Why, sir, there are thousands of farms all through the South owned by loyal refugees in New York, Boston, and in all the loyal States to-day—men who have been merely able to escape with their lives. These irresponsible Commissioners are to take these poor Africans again and impose upon them a worse bondage than the masters of the South ever exercised over them, and make them work these lands, not for the benefit and profit of the slaves, except at stipulated prices at the will and pleasure of these irresponsible masters, and hand over the proceeds and the profit of their labor—to what? In the first place to pay this overseer general and these deputy drivers these extravagant salaries, and if anything is left it is to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Then again I think there is a chance for a very handsome speculation by these Commissioners and deputy drivers. The bill provides that they are also "to take possession of all personal property found on such estate;" and what are they going to do with it? They take possession of it, and there is an end of it so far as the bill is concerned. How are they to account for it? To whom are they responsible? What is the object of taking the personal estate into possession—horses, corn, and things that perish in the using? What are they to do with them? How are they to account for this personal property? The bill does not seem to provide.

Sir, I will not detain the Senate by going through this bill. Every section of it, it seems to me, is liable to objection of the same kind and character. Some of the provisions of the amended bill reported by the Senate committee, if it passes, ought to be modified; for instance, the one in regard to the character of the leases. They are to be but for a year, I believe. You can raise but half a crop on these abandoned lands if you lease them but for a year. If you lease them during the winter you can raise a crop of corn and oats the next summer, but you cannot raise a crop of wheat, because you sow in the fall, and it does not ripen until the next year.

But, Mr. President, having attracted, as I see I have, the attention of Senators, and that was the object of my rising, to a critical observation of the special provisions in this bill, and more especially having stated the fact, that I believe whatever may have been its intent, its result will be practically the reenslavement of the African race, I am content to leave the subject with the Senate.

It has been a matter of wonder to me that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts failed to discover the only practical mode by which the difficulties which he seeks to remedy could, in my estimation, be obviated. Why, sir, we hear cries every day from Massachusetts, Connecticut, and various other States, of the lack of labor, that the war has so much subtracted from the labor of those States that the manufactories and the farms to a great extent are lying idle. It is so, I believe, in all the States. Now, here are thrown loose upon us, without employment, a vast number of athletic men and women. Would it not be a much better policy, Mr. President, would it not be a vastly better policy to clothe these Commissioners with the simple duty of finding in those States places and employment for these freedmen, where they could be under the influence of free institutions, where they could be brought in contact with the law and with the labor, according to the idea, and the good idea, too, of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, where they would not be left to the arbitrary will of irresponsible Commissioners to control them, but where as citizens they would have all the guarantees and protection of the Constitution and laws and the courts in the forms of law? Why not place them there and give them employment there? Therefore I move to amend the amendment of the honorable Senator from Delaware, which I suppose he does not expect to pass, [Mr. SAULSBURY. I do, sir,] by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

That it shall be the duty of said Commissioner to procure places and employment for as many of said freedmen as may be practicable with the farmers, mechanics, and manufacturers of the free and loyal States where the laws of said States shall not prohibit it, and that for the purpose of more effectually accomplishing this object he open a correspondence with the Governors and various municipal authorities of said free and loyal States requesting their cooperation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inquire to what the Senator proposes his amendment?

Mr. WILLEY. To the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest—the Senator may not be aware of the fact—that that is an amendment to an amendment, and a further amendment cannot be in order.

Mr. WILLEY. Then, sir, I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. The amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, which is now before the Senate, merely affirms or seeks to affirm the Constitution of the United States; and as I am at a loss to imagine how the validity of that instrument can in any manner be made greater than it is by any legislation I shall vote against the amendment. It is neither more nor less than stating that the Constitution of the United States should be enforced. If it is not enforced practically, the fault lies with the Executive. If they have abandoned all the guarantees of the Constitution, which they have sworn to support, what security is there, what reason is there to think that they will not abandon the duty which apparently would be enforced upon them by this proposition?

In the next place, it is an amendment not germane to the bill itself. The bill professes, if I understand it, to deal only with such portion of the States of the United States as are in rebellion. The Constitution of the United States in the States in rebellion is only so far in force as is consistent with the state of war which exists between the United States and the States in rebellion. The trial by jury, and all the personal guarantees that the Constitution provides for a state of peace, are necessarily at an end for the time in a state of war as between the United States and the people, if they be a portion of the United States, who are in a state of war with the United States. As the bill refers only to the rebellious States, the whole operation of the amendment if it were to pass, if it could have any operation, would be upon the States that are not in rebellion; and with reference to the States that are not in rebellion, if they are not protected by the Constitution, my friend and Congress might pile acts upon acts, and we should still be without protection.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the honorable Senator from Maryland had lived in the days when the sovereign of England guaranteed to his people the rights of Magna Charta, I presume he would have condemned the action of that people afterwards who, when that Magna Charta was violated, wished its reaffirmance; for his first objection is that these rights are guaranteed by the Constitution, and if they are violated the Executive is to blame. So, sir, might have said the honorable Senator had he lived in the days to which I have referred, when the Executive of England violated the rights secured by Magna Charta, "It is useless for you to ask their reaffirmance, because they are there already." Not so was the spirit of liberty in those former days; but when chartered rights were violated, the people, whose rights were interested, rose up and demanded their reaffirmance; and under the reign of one king alone, I believe some several times was that reaffirmance asked.

Sir, in times like these it is well to look back into the precedents of the past, for history in these times is but repeating itself. Human liberty—the liberty of free, noble-born, high-spirited white men—is but imitating the example of the noble champions of liberty in the past; and the example of those champions comes up in thunder tones today condemnatory of the principle laid down by the honorable Senator from Maryland. Admit that my amendment but reaffirms the Constitution of the United States, would it not be refreshing to thousands of American citizens whose constitutional rights have been violated, the violation of which has been condemned by many who have had the boldness to condemn it in the face of arbitrary power—would it not bring gladness to their hearts to know that the representatives of the sovereign States of this Union, having witnessed these violations long enough, meant to give to their constitutional rights the vote of their approval? Sir, pass my amendment, and joy will spring up in many an aching heart; he who without cause now groans in unlawful bastille prisons would be cheered; the weeping mother and the worse than orphaned child would take heart again, and they would say that the representatives of what was once the great Republic of the United States have arisen at last to a sense of the just constitutional rights of this people, and they mean to assert in the face of the exercise of arbitrary power that they cherish those rights, and will see that they shall be preserved.

But the honorable Senator says the amendment is not germane to the bill. That is no objection to its adoption. It has been held by the Senate that any amendment, whether germane or not, may be made to a bill. On one occasion a large appropriation bill was tacked on to a pension bill as an amendment, and the point of order being made, (and the history of the Senate of the United States will show it,) it was decided by the Senate, as I understand, that it could be done. I may be mistaken in the facts, but I know that two bills wholly incongruous were united. I have often heard it from the late distinguished Senator from Maryland, Mr. Pearce.

I have offered this amendment to this bill because I did not believe that if I offered it as a separate resolution I could get a vote upon it. In my feeble attempts on all previous occasions to assert by resolutions, either of inquiry or affirmative in their nature, the constitutional rights of the people, I have been disappointed, and have never been allowed to take them up for consideration. The bill of my honorable friend from Kentucky, [Mr. POWELL,] providing against military interference with the freedom of elections was introduced early in the session and debated, but he has not been allowed to take it up for consideration since it was postponed on the motion of the honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] that he might discuss it.

Now, sir, no evil can result from the adoption of this amendment. It is not liable to any objection arising under your rules. It can do no possible harm. It asserts, it is true, constitutional rights. I offer it, therefore, that the people of this country may know that there is respect in the American Senate for those constitutional rights, and that they will see that in the future those rights are preserved.

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield to no member of the Senate in devotion to all the principles of freedom which make a part of the Constitution of the United States, and which are guaranteed by that instrument; and when any portion of the Government shall violate those principles, and I am called upon officially to declare an opinion, I shall not hesitate to meet it, and to meet it, if the fact be true, by punishing the violation to the whole extent of any existing law. But the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware to this bill is not offered as a censure upon any branch of the Government.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not wish to censure them.

Mr. JOHNSON. So I supposed. I have a right, therefore, to assume, as far as that amendment is concerned, that every branch of the Government has conformed to the Constitution; that there have been no violations. However the assumption may be true in point of fact, I have a right, for the purpose of passing upon the propriety of this amendment as it stands, to assume that to be true.

My friend talks about the reiteration by the barons of Magna Charta from time to time. If he will bring in (provided it is a matter over which the Senate have any control) a proposition of censure, and will establish the case as against the President or any member of the Administration, of an intentional violation of the Constitution, he will not find me lagging far behind.

But the question now is, as presented by his amendment to this bill, are we to declare that the Constitution is in force? My friend says it was done in England, and it had a wonderful, happy effect upon the then majesty, and it was done more than once. Does he think if there has been any violation of the Constitution that this reiteration of the Constitution will guard us more effectually in the future than the Constitution itself has in the past?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope it will be a warning.

Mr. JOHNSON. But that single warning will have no effect. Put it into every bill that is presented; and to-morrow morning when we have bills in relation to other subjects before us, the honorable member if he carries out his theory will be found offering an amendment like this, that the Constitution of the United States is in force. Where are we to stop?

Now, sir, I have stated as another reason for not voting for this particular amendment that it is not germane to the bill. The honorable Senator says there was a case in which an appropriation bill was attached to a pension bill. Does not the honorable member see that that pension bill was an appropriation bill; that it dealt with money in the Treasury just as directly as any other mode of appropriating money in the Treasury; and that therefore, so far from the two propositions not being germane in the eye of parliamentary law, there was an exact similarity?

I repeat, Mr. President, that come when the time will, when this great charter of American freedom is to be vindicated against all its violators, and more certainly just in proportion as they may hold high and elevated situations, he will not find me behind him in using whatever ability I may possess in laying bare the enormity of such transgressions, and visiting upon the parties who have been guilty of them all the punishment which the laws have provided. And if it does not come in any parliamentary or judicial form, by any parliamentary or judicial proceeding, but does come before the grand inquest of the nation, who are in all cases the rightful judges of what shall be done to a certain extent with those who have violated the Constitution, and I am satisfied that persons of that description are again seeking popular support by seeking reelection to the offices that they now fill, I will use whatever ability I possess to expose their conduct before that inquest and try to obtain a verdict at their hands, which, while it will punish the present guilty, will be a warning to all who shall have thoughts of guilt in their mind hereafter.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The honorable Senator from Maryland asked me if, in my judgment any persons now exercising power have violated any of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States which are recited in this amendment why I did not bring in a resolution of censure, and if I presented a case where they had so violated he would unite with me in voting for the resolution of censure. Sir, it is because I have too much respect for the Constitution of the United States, notwithstanding I do know that persons are exercising this unwarrantable power and doing these unwarrantable things, that I do not bring in a resolution of censure. The Constitution of the United States points out the mode and manner in which you shall censure the high executive officers of this Government. It is not by a simple resolution of censure of this body, but it is by articles of impeachment in the other House, in which case the honorable Senator and myself would be called upon to act as judges. That is the mode and that is the manner which the Constitution of the United States points out for censuring those clothed with office under the Constitution of the United States who abuse their power.

The honorable Senator says that he has a right to presume, at least so far as this amendment is concerned, that there have been no such violations of the Constitution; and yet, sir, as a matter of fact there is no gentleman in this country who knows better than the honorable Senator that those violations have occurred, for he himself was frequently called upon before he became a member of this body to render his professional services to procure the release of persons who have been arbitrarily, without process of law, and contrary to the Constitution of the United States, imprisoned in forts and bastilles.

The Senator says that this amendment is not germane to the bill. If the honorable Senator thinks that it is not germane to the bill what is the mode for him to take advantage of it? If he thinks we cannot properly and legitimately add on this amendment to the amendment proposed by the committee of the Senate, his proper plan is to raise the point of order, and ask for the judgment of the Presiding Officer. That would bring up the question.

Mr. FOOT. You cannot raise a point of order on the question of congruity.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I presume that some of those who will vote against my amendment will do it because it is incongruous. I should like to have the opinion of the distinguished ex-presiding officer of the Senate, before this debate closes, whether my amendment to this bill is proper or not; I mean, whether there is anything in the rules of the Senate that prevents this body from so amending the bill.

Mr. FOOT. I will say to the Senator from Delaware that it is not competent for the Presiding Officer to rule any proposition in the form of an amendment out of order upon the ground of incongruity to the matter to which it is proposed as an amendment. The want of congruity may be the best of all reasons for voting against the proposition, but a question of order cannot be raised upon it upon which the Chair can decide it out of order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope that honorable members of the Senate who I know profess to believe that the principles embodied in the amendment are correct will give us a direct vote upon it, and not give us a vote the reasons for which the country cannot understand. The country can understand this, sir: that if this Senate votes affirmatively upon my amendment, they mean to assert the principles therein contained; but if honorable Senators vote against it, then they know one of two things: either that honorable Senators are not in favor of the principles contained in the amendment, or else there is some technical objection to prevent them from so voting; but what that technical objection is, or how many technical objections there may be, the country cannot understand. But, sir, I will not pursue the debate further.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope we may be allowed to have a vote on this question.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 14, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. CHANNING.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

OVERLAND MAIL.

Mr. ALLEY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report a joint resolution from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in relation to the continuance for one year of the overland mail to California.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEY, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a joint resolution to authorize the Postmaster General to extend the contract with the Overland Mail Company; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that the contract with the Overland Mail Company be renewed for one year from the 1st day of July next on the same terms and conditions as the present existing contract.

Mr. ALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will state for the information of the House that a bill came from the Senate authorizing the Postmaster General to contract with the Overland Mail Company or any other company, if in his discretion he should deem it expedient, for the continuance of the service of carrying the mails by the overland route for four years, which bill has been before the Post Office Committee of the House, and we have been unable to agree fully, and if we had, it has been impossible to report to the House, inasmuch as that committee has not been called for reports for several months. The Postmaster General has advertised for bids, and the time expires to-morrow, and it is therefore necessary to have immediate action. Under the circumstances it was regarded by the parties in interest on all sides that it was for the interest of the service and of the Government that this contract should be extended for one year. And in the present state of the currency it is impossible to determine what the service may be actually worth for so long a time as four years.

It is clear to my mind, therefore, and I think it is the unanimous opinion of the committee, that this, under the circumstances, is the best thing to be done. I therefore call for the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ALLEY. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS. Has not this contract been advertised for by the Department, and are they not receiving proposals?

Mr. ALLEY. The contract was advertised for, but was afterwards withdrawn, as was stated, at the request of the Senate committee, for the purpose of procuring additional legislation. That additional legislation it has been impossible to obtain in consequence of the committee being unable to report. The interest of the Government requires that immediate action should be taken, and, in my judgment, this course will save to the Government a very large amount, perhaps $1,000,000.

Mr. STEVENS. When does the contract expire?

Mr. ALLEY. On the 1st of July; but the time for receiving bids expires to-morrow. As I learn, scarcely any bids have been presented, and it will place the Government in the hands of a few individuals.

Mr. STEVENS. Let us postpone this to see what these bids are. I suggest that it be postponed till Monday next.

Mr. ALLEY. I will say that the Senate have had the matter under consideration, and have reported that the Overland Mail Company shall receive $150,000 additional compensation to what they have received during the last four years. That bill is now before the Post Office Committee of this House for consideration. In my opinion that is a very exorbitant price for the Government to pay for that service, if we had a sound currency, which we hope to have long before the four years will expire.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not like to vote against this resolution, but I want to see what these bids are.

Mr. ALLEY. It will be too late.

Mr. STEVENS. Why too late? It does not expire till the 1st of July.

Mr. ALLEY. Because the Postmaster General will, I fear, hardly feel himself authorized to reject those bids without any suggestion from Congress. This resolution extends the contract for only one year. It is already extended to next October. Consequently it really extends it only nine months, which gives an opportunity to mature a bill at the next session and protect the interests of the Government to the fullest extent.

Mr. SHANNON. In my opinion this resolution ought not to pass. The Postmaster General did advertise for bids to carry the overland mail to California, but I understand at the request of a single individual he has withdrawn them.

Mr. ALLEY. It was, as the gentleman states, by a single member of the committee, but with the sanction of the committee, and in the note to the Postmaster General he stated that it was by direction of the committee. The Postmaster General acted on that authority, and the committee, as I understand, did not disclaim that action.

Mr. SHANNON. In view of the fact that the contract will expire on the 1st of July, I do not see why the Postmaster General, at the instance of any member or committee of either House, thought proper to withdraw those bids. We believe, and indeed we understand and know, that if the advertisements had been continued competent parties would have bid to carry the mails to the Pacific coast within the schedule time set forth in the advertisement. That some responsible party would have taken the contract on the 1st of July there is no doubt, in my opinion. Now, sir, the management of carrying the mail to Salt Lake, St. Joseph, and Atchison, is notoriously outrageous. We wanted a better management and more efficiency in carrying the mail. The carrying of the mail from Salt Lake to Folsom, California, is well done, but it is notorious that it is outrageously managed from Salt Lake in this direction. Complaints of all these matters were made known to the Postmaster General, and he was informed that the service required more efficiency, more competency, more responsibility, and better management, and that we desired that the contract should be opened to competition, and that the mail should be carried within fifteen or twenty days. Now, sir, the extending of this contract for one year in this manner is a piece of patch-work, and I hope the resolution will not pass.

Mr. ALLEY. What the gentleman states may or may not be correct. On that I have nothing to say, for that is not the question at issue before the House at the present time. If, however, what he states is correct, there is the strongest reason existing why this resolution should be passed, because it extends this contract for only a short time. If it is not passed these parties will probably obtain that contract for four years, and at a much larger sum than is provided to be paid by this joint resolution.

So that by every consideration of interest, justice, and propriety, if there is anything in the gentleman's argument and if his statements are correct, this resolution should be adopted by the House. I am certain its passage will save a very large amount to the Government. Whether the Postmaster General has done right in withdrawing that advertisement has nothing to do with the case. He acted, I have no doubt, in perfect good faith, and at the suggestion and in accordance with the wish and direction, as he supposed, of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads on the part of the Senate.

The advertisement was withdrawn and another substituted, but too late to allow these parties to come in and make bids and obtain their supplies; and now the Government finds itself in a position without protection at all against any of these parties, and if the Postmaster General is obliged to accede to any propositions which may be submitted, the probability is that the Government will suffer to the extent of several hundred thousand if not million dollars.

Mr. LOAN. I would inquire of the gentleman how he knows that the second advertisement was too late for bids to be put in that would authorize the granting of a contract to these parties. How does the gentleman know what the bids are, and that it is too late?

Mr. ALLEY. Parties have been waiting for the action of Congress, and this company has finally agreed to extend the time to October next; and no matter how I obtained my knowledge. I have information which satisfies my mind, and which justifies me in making this declaration to the House. I say here upon my judgment and responsibility that I believe that if the resolution is not adopted it will place the Government to a great extent so far as this service is concerned in the hands of two or three parties, and that it will cost the Government several hundred thousand if not million dollars. If the resolution is adopted it will only extend the time from October to July, and will give ample opportunity next session to investigate the whole matter, and to settle it upon such a basis as will be just to the Government and all the parties interested.

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot see how letting this thing go over to next Monday will do any harm. I see no great harm to accrue to the Government from accepting these bids, and I presume neither the Government officers nor the gentleman know what these bids are. I cannot presume that they do. I hope, therefore, the gentleman will allow me to postpone the resolution until Monday next. If not, I hope the House will not pass it. I cannot understand the objection to postponing the resolution until Monday, when we shall know exactly what the bids are.

Mr. ALLEY. I see nothing to be gained by postponing; but, on the contrary, great harm will result, if it is any object to save a large amount of money to the Government.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman will allow me to move to postpone.

Mr. ALLEY. I cannot. I insist upon the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the House will not second it.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 33, noes 36; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ALLEY and SHANNON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 40.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put; and being put, the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. SHANNON called for the reading of the engrossed joint resolution.

The SPEAKER stated that the joint resolution not having been engrossed, it went to the Speaker's table.

VOTES RECORDED.

Mr. KELLOGG, of New York. I ask unanimous consent of the House to record my vote on the last vote taken yesterday—that on the passage of the bill for the repeal of the fugitive slave law.

Mr. ANCONA. I will not object if the same privilege is accorded to me. I was absent yesterday under the impression that I was paired.

Mr. ARNOLD. I ask the same privilege.

No objection was made.

Mr. ARNOLD and Mr. KELLOGG, of New York, voted "ay."

Mr. ANCONA voted "no."

Mr. FENTON. I was obliged to leave the House yesterday afternoon in consequence of ill-health, and my colleague [Mr. STEELE] kindly paired with me on the bill to repeal the fugitive slave law. We are both present now, and I ask that we have leave of the House to record our votes.

No objection was made.

Mr. FENTON voted in the affirmative, and Mr. STEELE, of New York, in the negative.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, changed his vote from the negative to the affirmative on the resolution reported from the Committee of Elections declaring Mr. Jayne not to be entitled to a seat as Delegate from Dakota.

SALES OF GOLD.

Mr. HOOPER called for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER stated the regular order of business to be the consideration of the bill (S. No. 106) to prohibit certain sales of gold and foreign exchange, coming up as unfinished business.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts withdraw the previous question long enough to afford me an opportunity of saying a few words on this bill prohibiting the sales of gold?

The SPEAKER. It is not in the power of the gentleman from Massachusetts to do it. The previous question was sustained on the third reading of the bill, which cut off debate, and a motion was then made to lay the bill on the table, which was also undebatable. The gentleman can speak now only by unanimous consent.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I was absent from the House when this bill was under consideration last week. I desire an opportunity to be heard upon it, and I would like to say what I have to say now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the condition of the question. After the previous question was sustained on the third reading of the bill, a motion was made to lay the bill on the table, which prevailed. A motion was then entered to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table; and a motion has been made to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. In this state of the question the gentleman from New York asks leave to speak for a few minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 63, nays 79, not voting 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Baily, Augustus C. Baldwin, Brooks, James S. Brown, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Ganson, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Herriek, Higby, Holman, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kernan, King, Knapp, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Mallory, Marcy, McDowell, McKinney, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Ross, Scott, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Sules, Strouse, Stuart, Sweat, Thomas Tracy, Wadsworth, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, and Fernando Wood—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Garfield, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Littlejohn, Loan, Longear, Marvin, McClurg, McClure, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Anos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Perlman, Pike, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Schenck, Schofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smith, Smithers, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Thayer, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Webster, Whaley, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—79.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Baxter, Bliss, William G. Brown, Chandler, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Deming, Dumont, Finck, Gooch, Grinnell, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Jenckes, Kabisfleisch, Kasson, Long, McAllister, McBride, Middleton, Daniel Morris, Nelson, Noble, Odell, Patterson, Perry, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Stebbins, Voorhees, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—39.

So the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. W. J. ALLEN stated (during the roll-call) that he was paired with his colleague, Mr. WASHBURN.

The question recurred on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill and amendments were laid upon the table.

The question was put; and the motion to reconsider prevailed.

The question recurred on laying the bill and amendments on the table.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] withdraw the previous question to enable me to submit a few remarks?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts cannot withdraw it, as the House has ordered the main question.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to speak for ten minutes on the bill.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

The question was taken; and the House refused to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

The question recurred on the amendment proposed by Mr. HOOPER, in the nature of a substitute for the first section, as follows:

That it shall be unlawful to make any contract for the purchase or sale or delivery of any gold coin or bullion to be delivered on any day subsequent to the day of making such contract, or for the payment of any sum, either fixed or contingent, in default of the delivery of any gold coin or bullion, or to make such contract upon any other terms than the actual delivery of such gold coin or bullion, and the payment in full of the agreed price thereof, on the day on which such contract is made, in United States notes or national currency, and not otherwise; or to make any contract for the purchase or sale or delivery of any foreign exchange to be delivered at any time beyond ten days subsequent to the making of such contract; or for the payment of any sum, either fixed or contingent, in default of the delivery of any foreign exchange, or upon any other terms than the actual delivery of such foreign exchange within ten days from the making of such contract, and the immediate payment in full of the agreed price thereof, on the day of delivery, in United States notes or national currency; or to make any contract whatever for the sale or delivery of any gold coin or bullion of which the person making such contract shall not, at the time of making the same, be in actual possession. And it shall be unlawful to make any loan of money or currency not being in coin to be repaid in coin or bullion, or to make any loan of coin or bullion to be repaid in money or currency other than coin.

And on the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS, of New York, to add the following proviso:

Provided, however, That during the operation of this act the laws of trade and the law of gravitation be, and they are hereby, suspended.

Mr. HOOPER. I propose to modify my amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. I object to any modification.

Mr. COX. I propose to move to amend the title.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order at this stage of the bill.

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to a question of order. The amendment, as read by the Clerk, is different from the printed amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modified his amendment the other day in various particulars.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I ask leave to withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can only withdraw it by unanimous consent.

Mr. BROOKS. I object.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment; and it was rejected.

The question recurred on Mr. HOOPER's amendment; and it was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then read the third time.

Mr. HOOPER moved the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ANCONA demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ANCONA and ALLISON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 54.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

OVERLAND MAIL.

Mr. ALLEY. I rise to a privileged question.

I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution in relation to the continuance, for one year, of the overland mail to California was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The motion was entered.

SALES OF GOLD—AGAIN.

The question being on the passage of the bill, Mr. ANCONA demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 76, nays 62, not voting 43, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Eliot, Henry Winter Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Eckley, Elery, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julian, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Littlejohn, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, Ames Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Pernam, Pike, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smith, Smithers, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Thayer, Upton, Van Valkenburgh, Webster, Whaley, Wilder, Wilson, and Windom—76.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Badly, Augustus C. Baldwin, Brooks, James S. Brown, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Knapp, Law, Lazear, Le Bond, Mallory, Marcy, McDowell, McKinney, William H. Miller, James K. Morris, Morrisson, Pendleton, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Ross, Scott, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweat, Thomas, Tracy, Wadsworth, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, and Fernando Wood—62.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Bliss, Broomall, William G. Brown, Chanler, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Denning, Driggs, Dumont, Grinnell, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Higby, Kasson, King, Long, McAllister, McBride, McIndoe, Middleton, Morrill, Nelson, Noble, Odell, John O'Neill, Perry, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Stebbins, Voorhees, Ward, Elihu B. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Williams, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—43.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. ALLISON stated that his colleague, Mr. KASSON, was detained from the House by illness.

Mr. HOOPER moved the previous question on the title of the bill.

Mr. COX. I move to amend the title by making it read "still further to depreciate the currency."

The SPEAKER. If the previous question be not seconded, the amendment will be in order.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was on agreeing to the title of the bill.

Mr. COX. I move to amend the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. No amendment is in order, the previous question having been ordered.

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of order. In the first place I gave notice of my intention to amend this title long before the previous question was called; but I waive that, and raise another point of order. I submit that the Constitution requires that the title of each bill shall express the object and purpose of it. Now, the object and effect of this bill is to depreciate the currency of the country and embarrass the commerce of the country. The title of the bill does not conform to that object, and therefore is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order. The gentleman from Ohio did give notice of his intention to move to amend the title, but, as the gentleman from Ohio very well knows, the uniform practice of the Chair is to recognize the gentleman having charge of the bill at every stage.

The title of the bill was passed.

Mr. HOOPER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon House bill No. 506.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. MORRILL in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 506, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN announced that the bill would be read by sections for amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the reading of the bill for amendments is commenced I rise to make an inquiry of the Chair. Some time ago a bill was brought before the House by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. STEVENS) from the Committee of Ways and Means, when upon the gentleman's own motion upon its second reading it was postponed. Objection was made to the second reading of the bill for the purpose of giving an opportunity of making certain points of order upon provisions in that bill, and upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania its consideration was at that time passed over.

Subsequently, the bill which I hold in my hand was brought before the House not by the Committee of Ways and Means but by a gentleman who is a member of that committee upon his own individual responsibility. The bill was introduced, and by order of the House referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on Monday morning last during the morning hour on the call of the States for resolutions and the introduction of bills on leave.

I submit that this is introducing a new practice into the House, a practice which the Committee of Ways and Means, with all the responsibility that is upon them, having to a great extent in their charge the business of the House, cannot justify for a moment. It was known that this bill contained certain provisions which could not properly be incorporated into an appropriation bill, and gentlemen desired to avail themselves of their right under the rules of the House to raise points of order upon them, and it was upon that point that the bill was laid over on its second reading. But, while that bill was thus pending in the House, this bill containing the same provisions was introduced and referred here in the irregular way I have stated; and if the proceeding is to be sustained by the House it will be seen that members will in this way be deprived of their just rights on this floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know whether the gentleman has made a point of order or not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I cannot raise a point of order on this bill. It is here in committee by the order of the House. The history of how it came here the gentleman very well understands. I simply rose to call the attention of the House to it for the purpose of showing how gentlemen had been deprived of their rights of raising questions of order upon provisions that are improperly in the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I have only to say that the bill to which the gentleman refers will come up in its turn. This bill contains some of the provisions of that bill and some important ones, but that bill contains some provisions that are not in this. This bill came into the House in a legitimate way. It has been referred by the House to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I presume we have nothing to do but to consider it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is not the intention to substitute this bill for the one pending in the House upon which our points of order were to be raised.

Mr. STEVENS. I was not here when this bill was introduced. The Committee of Ways and Means had nothing to do with its introduction, and we have nothing to do now but to consider it.

Mr. HOLMAN. As far as my experience is concerned, and gentlemen who are better acquainted with proceedings here agree with me, this is the first time an appropriation bill has ever come before the Committee of the Whole except through the channel of the Committee of Ways and Means. It is made their duty by law to report it within a certain time, or report their reasons for not reporting it.

Mr. STEVENS. The items in this bill are some of the items of the bill to which the gentleman objected, and were therefore passed on by the Committee of Ways and Means. As the gentleman made a point of order, in order to obviate difficulties of that kind, as they might be out of order, they were left out, and the pending bill was introduced containing some items which the Committee of Ways and Means have sanctioned. As there were some not in order in that bill this was prepared and introduced to obviate that difficulty.

Mr. HOLMAN. One question and answer will settle all I desire to obtain. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether this bill has been framed in strict conformity to the rules of the House in reference to what appropriation bills ought to be?

Mr. STEVENS. I will answer that items in it have been examined and sanctioned by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think that the gentleman answers my objection. The objection to the other bill was that it contained appropriations not authorized by the rules of the House. I ask whether in this revision to which he refers those portions of the bill which he reported himself, and to which the objection was made that they were not appropriate to appropriation bills, were stricken out?

Mr. STEVENS. I am not able to judge how far the Speaker would have decided some of these to be in order. This bill contains some items I have never assented to, although the majority of the Committee of Ways and Means have sanctioned them. I will not say that they are not in order, but they are items for which I will not vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. All I have to say I can say in a single word; it is the first instance where a practice of this kind has been resorted to to deprive members of their rights upon this floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object, and call for the first reading of the bill.

Mr. PENDLETON. In relation to the subject under discussion I desire to say that I introduced this bill, and introduced it in accordance with the rules of the House last Monday morning, and it was, as under the rule it must be, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I am not aware there has been any evasion or any transgression of any rule of order.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I propose to come into collision with my friend from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] on this bill, in order to call the attention of the House more particularly to the extraordinary mode of legislation which has sprung up in this House, by which private bills, private claims, which cannot be brought before the House in any proper and legitimate way except on report by the Committee of Claims, are put into appropriation bills, and then forced through as coming from the Committee of Ways and Means as if in regular order. If I were to make these remarks to apply to the other side of the House, they would not have that force as when I make them on a gentleman who is a political associate of mine, ostensibly the father of this bill, although it comes from the Committee of Ways and Means.

I call the attention of this House to the last section of the bill. It provides that the ninth section of the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1864, and for the year ending June 30, 1863, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1863, appropriating thirty per cent. of the cost of engraving the special dies for internal revenue stamps, not to exceed in amount $20,000, be so amended as to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the contractors, Butler & Carpenter, the sum of $20,000 in full of all claims for indemnity. I do not know who Butler & Carpenter are. I presume that they have an undoubted right to this money, or this appropriation would not have been put in the bill. But here is an appropriation bill, every item of which should be in pursuance of some statute in order to be reported from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. STEVENS. I will say that Butler & Carpenter are persons who are engaged in printing stamps for the Government, and this item was passed in pursuance of the request of the Treasury Department. The whole matter was submitted to and acted on by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BROOKS. The legitimate way of doing business is, not that these communications shall be addressed to the Committee of Ways and Means, but to the official organ of this House, the Speaker, to be read by the Clerk.

Mr. STEVENS. It has been the uniform practice since I have been here to send these matters to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BROOKS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. When I was a member of the Committee of Ways and Means we never received any communications from the Departments asking for appropriations except through the Speaker of the House, and the reason was that when communications reached the Speaker they were made matter of record, while these communications which are brought before the Ways and Means Committee are not matters of record, and not hereafter to be known in the public history of the country.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman will remember that that was in old times, when he and I were young men; but now we are old fogies.

Mr. BROOKS. Oh! for those old happy days once more.

Mr. STEVENS. I should be happy if we could go back. I would go back thirty years. If the gentleman will consult the rules, he will there find communications spoken of sent by the Departments to the committee.

Mr. BROOKS. I speak as an old fogey and as an antiquarian of this House—as one who has been about this House for thirty years—and I say from observation and knowledge that in the better days of the Republic appropriations intended for private purposes—for contractors or individuals—never came through the Committee of Ways and Means; and in those days whenever the Secretaries wished to carry appropriations, their letters were addressed to the legitimate organ of this House, the Speaker, and not to the chairman or any other gentleman of the Ways and Means Committee.

The result of a departure from the old practice is that now in these latter days of the Republic whenever an object cannot force its way through the legitimate channels of the House the Committee of Claims or the Committee on Expenditures, or some other of the committees of this House, it forms a combination or association by which, linking itself with other appropriations, it works its way through the Ways and Means in some bill they have to report.

Again, I find in this bill another private claim. I do not know but that it is just and right; I am bound to presume it is, because it is here. It is an appropriation of $200,000 for Dr. Morton for the discovery and introduction of the anæsthetic agent, and for its use in the Army and Navy of the United States. What antecedent law is there which entitles this claim to appear in this appropriation bill? And to illustrate my idea more explicitly, I desire to say that the Ways and Means Committee, in its legitimate action, is but the clerk of the House to report appropriations which are provided for by law, and it has no right in the exercise of its powers to wander off into other purposes whatever, unless especially instructed. Its legitimate duty is but to make a record of the result of law. It is but to embody in appropriations the public statutes and enactments, and when it goes beyond that it steps into a sphere most dangerous to the public good, while it arrogates for itself substantially the monopoly of the legislation of this House.

Sir, that committee has already too much of the public business to transact without appropriating to itself any of these outside works. Its services are vast, its powers are vast, even when legitimately exercised. And I avail myself of this opportunity to say that the committee ought to be broken up into three separate divisions at least—a committee on currency, a committee on internal revenue, and a committee on the tariff. The Ways and Means take the clerk-like duties of reporting statute appropriations. But the tendency of illegitimate action now is to absorb all the other committees of the House. The right of the Ways and Means Committee at any time and on any occasion to avail itself of the privilege to report, absorbs the whole political and legislative power of the House, and concentrates and throws it all into the hands of that committee. Here is my honorable friend from Massachusetts at my right, [Mr. ALLEY,] who, as head of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, has been seeking for an opportunity to report a bill from that committee; and here are the heads of other committees who have not had time to report and to bring their legitimate business before the House; so that in all probability the only ways and means by which they can this session effect their object is to hitch their measures to some appropriation bill, or beg the Ways and Means Committee to let them come within some report from that committee.

I protest against this action in the House; I protest against putting private claims into public appropriation bills; and I protest against this mode and manner of reporting a bill. In my judgment a bill was acted upon this morning (the gold bill)—I do not say through the Ways and Means Committee, but under its influence and authority—which would not have been sanctioned by the sound sense of the House if it had had opportunity to act freely upon it. But availing itself of the sanction of the Committee of Ways and Means, and under its protection, the bill has passed through by a party vote, in a good degree rallying a large portion of that (the Republican) side of the House, not all. The bill could not have made any progress at all from any other committee of the House, nor progress even from that committee, if any debate had been allowed upon the subject.

But before I sit down I beg leave once more to refer to the original practice of the Republic in those glorious halcyon days when purity reigned through all the Departments of the Government, and when private bills could not be forced into appropriation bills by the Committee of Ways and Means. Let us return to them, in our congressional action, as soon as possible. The forms, the precedents, the principles of our fathers, in their legislation, as well as in constitutional construction, alone, alone can save the Republic. And I tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the sooner we cease to be old and become young again as legislators, the less we go in advance of the times, and the more we retrace our steps to the steps of our forefathers, the more will posterity revere our services, and the higher shall we stand on the records of history.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill seems not to have been reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, but to have been introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] on his own motion. The subject-matter of the bill has been passed upon by the Committee of Ways and Means, and that committee reported a bill to the House. In regard to that bill the right to raise questions of order pertinent to the bill was reserved. This bill having been introduced in the manner in which it was, and referred to the committee, no such reservation existed. Consequently all members who might desire to reach any improper appropriations in the bill by a question of order are deprived of that privilege. For the purpose of going back to the bill reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, embracing these same appropriations, and in order that the House may avail itself of the right to raise questions of order pertinent to the appropriations reported in the bill, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion will take precedence of all motions to amend.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Chairman, I had no knowledge of the bill now before the House, introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, my colleague on the Committee of the Ways and Means, until this morning.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a question of order; merely to ask whether, if that motion be negatived by the House, it prevents any amendment of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. WILSON. To relieve the gentleman from Pennsylvania of any doubt on that point I will say that the motion will not be rejected, and that the House can then reach the other bill by points of order, and amend it as the House may deem proper.

Mr. STEVENS. The House will see the impropriety and danger of this. There are some things in this bill which the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union would perhaps not agree to; and yet we will be under the necessity, if this motion shall prevail in committee and fail in the House, of taking the whole or nothing.

Mr. WILSON. It will not fail in the House. Mr. DAWES. Can we not then take the other bill?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; this or none.

Mr. FENTON. I only wish to remark, Mr. Chairman, that I desire that the benefit of the points of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] shall not be lost, for the reason that I am opposed to some provisions of the bill reported, and to which I think the attention of the gentleman from Indiana was directed. And I shall favor the motion of the gentleman from Indiana if we do not, by its adoption, lose the opportunity of amending the bill.

The question was taken on Mr. WILSON's motion; and it was agreed to.

So the enacting clause was struck out.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MORRILL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration House bill No. 506, making appropriations for the civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865, and had instructed him to report back the same to the House, with a recommendation that the enacting clause be struck out.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 198) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 383) to incorporate the Home for Friendless Women and Children; and

An act to empower the Superannuated Fund Society of the Maryland Annual Conference to hold property in the District of Columbia.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The question being on striking out the enacting clause of the civil appropriation bill,

Mr. STEVENS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the Chair what will be the effect of confirming that which the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union has done.

The SPEAKER. The effect will be the rejection of the bill.

Mr. COX. And what will be the effect on the bill if the House should refuse to strike out the enacting clause?

The SPEAKER. If the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be not concurred in, it will, by the rule adopted in 1860, be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. The adoption of the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union does not interfere at all with the bill reported by the Committee of Ways and Means before the House.

The SPEAKER. That bill is not now before the House. It only rejects this bill.

The question was taken on concurring in the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 73, nays 67, not voting 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Ames, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Beaman, Blair, Boatwell, Boyd, Brooks, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Donnelly, Eckley, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Farnsworth, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Gooch, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Herriek, Higby, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Keraan, King, Knapp, Loan, Longear, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Morrison, Odell, John O'Neill, Pike, Price, Radford, John H. Rice, Robinson, Scott, Smithers, Spalding, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Thayer, Upson, Williams, and Wilson—73.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Allison, Ancona, Anderson, Baily, Augustus C. Baldwin, Baxter, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, James S. Brown, Cole, Cox, Craves, Denison, Dixon, Driggs, Eliot, Fenton, Fluck, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jencks, Kelley, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Mallory, Marey, Marvin, McDowell, Morrill, Anos Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Pendleton, Perham, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Schenck, Seofield, Shannon, Sloan, Stevens, Strouse, Stuart, Sweet, Thomas, Tracy, Van Valkenburgh, Wadsworth, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilder, Windom, Fernando Wood, and Woodbridge—67.

NOT VOTING.—Messrs. Arnold, Bliss, William G. Brown, Chandler, Clay, Henry Winter Davis, Deming, Dumont, Grinnell, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Hooper, Julian, Kasson, Littlejohn, Long, McAllister, McBride, McClurg, McIndoe, McKinney, Middleton, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Perry, Pomeroy, Pruyn, William H. Randall, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Smith, Starr, Stebbins, Voorhees, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—41.

So the enacting clause of the bill was stricken out.

During the roll-call,

Mr. MORRILL said: I desire to ask for information whether if the House should vote not to strike out the enacting clause of the bill the bill would be open to amendment when its consideration should be resumed in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER.. It would be.

Mr. HOLMAN. Could points of order be made on the bill?

The SPEAKER. A point of order can be made on amendments in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but not on the bill itself.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the enacting clause of the bill was stricken out; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEVENS called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILSON withdrew his motion.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the enacting clause was stricken out.

Mr. UPSON moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. STEVENS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FENTON. Has the hour arrived for the consideration of the special order?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 85, nays 49, not voting 47; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alicy, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Beaman, Blair, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Brooks, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Coffroth, Cox, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Dawson, Donnelly, Briggs, Eckley, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Farnsworth, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Gooch, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Herriek, Higby, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Julian, Kaibfleisch, Orlando Kellogg, King, Knapp, Lazear, Le Blond, Loan, Longyea, Marcy, McDowell, McIndoe, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Morrison, Odell, John O'Neill, Pike, Pruyn, Radford, John H. Rice, Robinson, Rogers, Scott, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, Starr, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Tracy, Upson, Joseph W. White, Williams, and Wilson—85.

NAYS.—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Baily, Augustus C. Baldwin, Baxter, Blaine, Blow, James S. Brown, Chandler, Cole, Denison, Dixon, Ehot, Feinton, Finck, Grider, Griswold, Hubbard, Jenckes, Kelley, Law, Littlejohn, Mallory, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Morrill, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Pendleton, Perham, Alexander H. Rice, Ross, Schenck, Seefeldt, Shannon, Thomas, Van Valkenburgh, Wadsworth, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Wilder, Windom, Fernando Wood, and Woodbridge—49.

NOT VOTING.—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ames, Bliss, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Daves, Deming, Dumont, Grinnell, Hale, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Hooper, Ingersoll, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Kernan, Long, McAllister, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller, Anos Myers, Nelson, Noble, Perry, Pomeroy, Price, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Smith, Stebbins, Stevens, Sweet, Voorhees, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Chilton A. White, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—47.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.

The SPEAKER stated that the first business in order was the special order, being Senate joint resolution No. 16, proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States, on which the gentleman from California [Mr. Higby] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. PRUYN. By an arrangement with the gentleman from California he has agreed to let me precede him.

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment. It is the understanding that this day shall be devoted to the discussion of this joint resolution, and that it shall continue to-morrow until four o'clock, when the vote is to be taken. In order to afford all gentlemen an opportunity of being heard who desire to be heard, I move that we shall to-day take a recess from five o'clock until half past seven, in order to have a night session for debate only.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask that to-morrow or the next day a recess be taken for the purpose of considering the Pacific railroad bill during the evening session, so that it will not interfere with the day business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it would require unanimous consent to set apart to-morrow evening for the consideration of the Pacific railroad proposition, but if the House shall take a recess to-morrow the first business at the evening session will be that of the morning hour, and the Pacific railroad bill will be the first question.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that, until otherwise ordered, the House shall take a recess from half past four o'clock to half past seven o'clock, p. m.

Mr. HOLMAN. That does not include to-day, as we have agreed to take a recess at five o'clock.

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. STEVENS. I propose these night sessions for the transaction of business.

The SPEAKER. The session this evening has been set apart for debate.

There was no objection, and Mr. STEVENS's motion was agreed to.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to recommit to the Committee of Ways and Means the civil and miscellaneous appropriation bill, with the view, I am frank to say, of taking the vote of the House as instructions to that committee to strike out everything not provided for by law.

There was no objection, and it was agreed to accordingly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. HICKEY, its Chief Clerk, notifying the House that that body had passed bills of the following titles without amendment:

An act (H. R. No. 486) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Idaho," approved March 3, 1863; and

An act (H. R. No. 504) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the marine hospital at Chicago, Illinois, and to purchase a new site and build a new hospital.

And the following with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (H. R. No. 450) to provide for the repair and preservation of certain public works of the United States.

Also, that it had passed a joint resolution and bill of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A joint resolution (S. No. 64) to amend an act entitled "An act extending the time for the completion of the Marquette and Ontonagon railroad of the State of Michigan; and

An act (S. No. 306) to grant to the State of California certain lands for State prison purposes.

Also, that it had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on bill of the House No. 40, making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1865.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY—AGAIN.

Mr. HIGBY. I call for the regular order of business, and I yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. PRUYN.]

Mr. PRUYN. For the first time in our history it is now proposed to make a change in the Constitution which, if effected, will interfere with the reserved rights of the States. This question is presented in the midst of a great struggle which demands all the power and energies and thought of the country, and when a large number of the States, and those most deeply to be affected by the contemplated change, are not represented in either House of Congress. It has been one of the great drawbacks under which the country has labored in its present troubles that the time and attention of the Administration and its friends have been so largely devoted to questions of social reform in the condition of the slave population of the South, alienating thereby the 'friends' of the Union in those States and embarrassing their return to their allegiance, while they should have devoted their energies to the great work and duty before them, leaving other questions until the rebellion should have been suppressed. Had this latter course been thoroughly and faithfully pursued and a sincere respect exhibited for the spirit of the Constitution and the rights of the States, the contest would, in my judgment, long since have ended. Those who are to write the history of the present time will look back with astonishment at the course of an Administration which, while ostensibly engaged in putting down the rebellion, did so much to keep it alive, and, while calling on the people of the South to return to their allegiance, did so much to drive them still further into resistance. These thoughts properly lead to a consideration of the expediency of the measure before us. That this is not the time to act upon it, and that it is inexpedient now to consider it, has been well shown in the very clear remarks of my colleague, [Mr. HERRICK,] and others no doubt will add to what he has said. I will, however, entirely pass by this part of the subject, and with it all consideration of the slavery question, wishing only to present very briefly some remarks as to the power of Congress to take the action now proposed, and to show that we have no right to initiate the measure under consideration.

At the time of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States the several States were independent sovereignties, each claiming and exercising the full attributes of sovereignty under constitutions or forms of government which they had respectively established or recognized. The Constitution was a grant of power by these sovereignties, each acting for itself severally, as appears by the express terms of the instrument, and each retaining every attribute and power not thus granted, and that this might not rest on implication only, however clear and strong, it was so expressly declared by one of the amendments to the Constitution, insisted upon by some of the States at the time of its adoption, and forthwith assented to by the others. The reserved rights of the States, as they are often called—more properly their inherent original rights of sovereignty not granted under the Constitution to the common Government thereby established—it will thus be seen are in no manner impaired or affected by that instrument, but belong to and remain with the States respectively as fully and entirely as if it did not exist.

I admit that the Constitution should be liberally construed for the purposes for which it was established, but I deny that it can be constructively enlarged, or that under the pretense of amending it, we can go outside of the terms and of the spirit of the grant, and draw within its grasp subjects with which it does not deal, and which have been expressly declared to be beyond its reach. This is not the legitimate meaning of the power to amend; such a power would be one to originate—to create—to establish. The right remained with the States severally to regulate their internal affairs each in its own way, and according to its own views of right and duty. The relations of parent and child, of master and servant; the law of marriage; the mode of alienating property; the law of descent; in short, almost all that concerned the social relations, and the every-day life and pursuits of the great body of the people, were left to be regulated by each State as it chose. The States were not asked to give up these rights, and they were not in any way yielded, and from the history of the times there can be no doubt that had it been proposed to give this large class of powers to the General Government the Constitution would never have been adopted.

Let us suppose that it had been distinctly declared by the Constitution, as adopted by the Convention which formed it, that the powers remaining in and not granted by the States respectively might at any time be delegated or transferred to the General Government, under the section authorizing amendments. Had this been done, no candid man who has studied our political history, or who is familiar with the debates in the State conventions which adopted the Constitution, will hesitate to say that it would never have received the sanction of the number of States required to put it into operation. Or had it been proposed to add to the amendment declaring the powers not granted to the United States to be reserved to the States, a proviso that this should not interfere with the right of the General Government to absorb any of those powers by future amendments, can it be believed that it would have been adopted? The history of the times, and the debates already referred to, pronounce a most emphatic negative.

It may be said that the objection I make would apply even if all the States should assent to a new clause to be added to the Constitution. My answer is that such an assent would be good not by way of amendment, but as a new or further grant of power.

Twelve amendments to the Constitution have been made, the first ten almost simultaneously with its adoption. They are declaratory and restrictive, containing the great principles of the Bill of Rights. The eleventh and twelfth amendments were adopted a few years subsequently. The eleventh, as to the judicial powers, is also restrictive. The twelfth prescribes more definitely than before the mode of casting the electoral vote and of conducting the election for President and Vice President under the provisions of the Constitution. All these amendments, it will be observed, are in substance declaratory and restrictive, or regulate the exercise of powers already granted, and do not enlarge the powers of the General Government. Since the last of them was adopted sixty years have passed, during which time the instrument has not been touched.

But, to return to the point I am considering: Can three-fourths of the States, under this power to amend, overturn the institutions, subvert the authority, and change the condition of the other States? If so, the States might as well in the outset have surrendered all their sovereignty to the General Government, and the amendment declaratory of their reserved rights was meaningless. Is there any person who will venture to claim that any State which adopted the Constitution placed any such construction on this power to amend? I find that the amendment affirming the reserved rights of the States was adopted unanimously by the States which voted on it, and that in Massachusetts it was proposed by John Hancock, president of the State convention, warmly approved by Samuel Adams, and recommended for adoption to the other States. (See Eliot's Debates.)

I am well aware, Mr. Speaker, that it is considered by the supporters of the present Administration to be a great offense to speak of the reserved rights of the States, even in the light in which those rights were formerly understood by the people of the North of all political parties. I learn that three Republican Senators have recently ventured to say a word for them in the Senate Chamber. One of these is the venerable Senator from Vermont, once at the head of the Post Office Department; another is one of the Senators from New Hampshire; and the third a Senator from Wisconsin. What will be done by the Senate with these, I had almost said contumacious members of their body, remains to be seen. In my opinion they deserve credit for their boldness and fidelity to principle. But if gentlemen will read the debates which took place in the State conventions held to consider the question of adopting the Federal Constitution, they will learn how highly State institutions, State interests, and State rights were then prized even in the northern States. My friends from Massachusetts especially would find that views were advanced in their State convention from which most of their statesmen of the present day have widely departed. Let us look at this point somewhat further.

Can Maryland and Delaware and New Jersey (for this illustrates the principle) force upon Pennsylvania an entire change of her domestic policy and institutions? Can Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut compel New York to submit to their domination over her internal affairs, and to lay down rights at their bidding which she never agreed to surrender? If three-fourths of the States can take away rights now clearly reserved to their associates, what is to prevent the absorption of their territory by other States? If one right can be taken away, several can be—all can be. If one principle can be swept away, all can be. Under such a doctrine States may be annihilated and a monarchy built up. These it may be said are extreme cases, but they are legitimate results from the power to amend now claimed. The right to amend is not a right to extend and enlarge the powers granted under the Constitution. It was only intended through its instrumentality to provide for the better and more convenient exercise of the powers expressly granted, in case defects should be found to exist in the practical working of the system. The amendment as to the manner of electing the President and Vice President illustrates this view.

To construe the Constitution as authorizing three-fourths of the States to impose upon the residue terms and conditions of Union not agreed upon or assented to by them, would be a wide departure from its spirit, and a monstrous usurpation of power; and this it is which we are now called upon to do; to take a further step to alienate the feelings of the South, and to embarrass and impede their return to the Union. No matter what the question may be, whether that of slavery or of any other domestic institution or right reserved to the States; so long as it is reserved, Congress has no right to interfere with it in any way. Let us leave it as the fathers of the Republic left it, to each State to do what it believes to be just and expedient in reference to its own people and to its own institutions. Had this course been pursued; had not the aggressive, untiring spirit of abolitionism, which has brought so much misery and wretchedness upon the negro population of the South, been constantly at work; emancipation would have taken place in many of the slave States years since, and the so-called political power of slavery would have disappeared long before the opening of the rebellion. But a spirit of intermeddling and of false philanthropy has delayed this result and brought evils upon our country which no man living can expect to see wholly removed.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a proposition to provide by an amendment to the Constitution for the abolition of slavery without compensation in all of the States in the Union. It will be, if adopted, a change in the fundamental law—a material alteration in the Constitution of the United States as formed by the founders of the Government. It is, therefore, a proposition which involves considerations and reflections such as belong to the gravest questions which can come before the American people for determination. It is whether we shall alter the whole structure and theory of government by changing the basis upon which it rests. My first difficulty in assenting to the resolution is that this is no time for any alteration in the organic law. We are now in the midst of a fearful civil war. The horrid din of this conflict, the groans of the wounded and dying, the sad evidences of death and destruction are all around us. Until recently, even at the very doors of this capital, the armed enemy has presented his threatening hostility. The whole people of America are involved directly or indirectly in this dreadful conflict. Reason, judgment, and that cautious investigation and comparison of interests, opinions, and prejudices necessary to a proper adjustment of a nation's welfare have been banished by the graver realities of war. This is no time to make or alter constitutions. Those who are enveloped in the elemental strifes of the tempest or the earthquake, and involved in the ruin thus created, cannot judge of the cause or measure the extent of the calamity. So it is with the historical convulsions which have desolated vast regions and swept myriads to the grave. The spectator who is himself in the midst of the horrors of war has seldom the coolness to discriminate and decide, with any reasonable degree of accuracy, as to the impelling cause of the struggle. The passions of men, the excitements of the contest, the temptations of ambition, avarice, and fear, all tend to blind the vision and warp the judgments of the actors in the terrible drama now being performed on this continent before the civilized world as spectators. Therefore, in my opinion, this is no time to act upon the proposition, no time to change the fundamental law. Nations do not alter their forms of government amid revolutions. We are now surrounded by dangers from without and from within. The people are in an unnatural excitement, unsuited to that calm deliberation which an alteration of the Constitution requires. All our statesmanship, love of country, efforts at union, consolidation, and good-fellowship, should be devoted to a restoration of our fraternity and prosperity as a people.

But if a change can be made, is this such a one as should be made? It is sought through this amendment to abolish at once and summarily the system of domestic servitude existing in one third of the States which came into the Union with the Government and which have remained with it until now. The effects of such a revulsion in such an interest will be of the most wide-spread and radical character. It will, of course, add to the existing sectional hostilities, and if possible make the pending conflict yet more intense and deadly.

Mr. Speaker, I see many objections to this amendment, while I fail to find one reason in its favor. I am opposed to it because it aims at the introduction of a new element over which Government shall operate. It proposes to make the social interests subjects for governmental action. This is the introduction of a principle antagonist to that which underlies all republican systems. Our Union was made for the political government of the parties to it, for certain specified objects of a very general character, all of them political, and none of them relating to or affecting in any manner individual or personal interests in those things which touch the domestic concerns. There is no feature or principle of it giving to the Federal power authority over them. These were reserved and left exclusively to the jurisdiction of the States and "the people thereof." Of this character are the marital relations, the religious beliefs, the right of eminent domain within the territorial limits of the States, other private property, and all matters purely social. Slavery where it exists is a system of domestic labor; it is not the creature of law. It existed without law before this Government was established. It is incorporated into the organization of society as part of the existing domestic regulations. It cannot be brought within constitutional jurisdiction any more than can any or either of the other private and personal interests referred to.

Again, sir, the proposed amendment to abolish slavery in the States of the Union is unjust in itself, a breach of good faith, and utterly irreconcilable with expediency. It is unjust because it involves a tyrannical destruction of individual property under the plea of a legitimate exercise of the functions of Government. It is in theory the idea which has been derived from despotism and the notions of feudal powers that Governments are omnipotent, and draw within their sphere all that belongs to the individual, even the liberty of thought, speech, and conscience. This is an infamous dogma of the past which should be repudiated, as opposed to the fundamental aims and ends of the Constitution of our Government. The essence of a constitution is protection of individual rights, and in popular Governments to restrain the power of majorities and secure the rights of minorities. Hence it has been truthfully said that the best Government is that which governs least. I characterize all pure, unmixed, and unconditional Governments, whether dependent on the will of one, few, or many, as alike repugnant to sound reason, to justice, and to the interests and happiness of mankind. Modern Turkey, mediæval Venice, and ancient Athens, are examples alike of error in theory and injustice in practice, and wanting in the necessary conditions to secure permanent success and prosperity. I should be sorry to see our system degenerate into either the despotism of monarchy or the despotism of majorities, and I therefore oppose the very first step toward removing the wholesome checks imposed by the constitutional compact. I am well aware in stating this that constitutions are limitations self-imposed by the popular will, and that the sovereign power is competent to change them so as to make them better subserve the great ends of civil order and the welfare of the general mass. Like all other institutions, Governments are made for man, and contrived for his benefit; they conform to the errors and frailties of his nature, and are affected by the ignorances and vices of the times to which they belong. In this enlightened era, and in a land like ours, separated from the influence of ages of barbarism and wars, I shudder at the prospect of going back to any of the exploded forms of arbitrary power. I desire to stand by the traditions of our fathers, and above all to the legacy of that sound and beneficent form of Government which they have given us in the Constitution.

I hold that a good Government is bound to protect the individual in the enjoyment of life and liberty, and in the exercise of his faculties for labor, physical and mental, in the acquisition and preservation of property. It may be destructive, but it should be conservative in these respects. This proposition strikes at property, and it is justified on the doctrine of the wild and erratic though subtle and powerful thinker who proclaimed that all property is founded on robbery. Property, Mr. Speaker, is the stimulus to industry and the foundation of improvement and civilization. All that is valuable or valued belongs to the grand total of public or private wealth, the material products of nature, the field, the mine, and the water, with all their teeming variety of what is useful or necessary; the powers of mind, the stores of knowledge, the genius of the inventor, the harmony of the poet, and last and greatest, virtue itself, the priceless treasure of the soul, all that can be wished and hoped for, are embraced in the idea of property. The social and domestic relations are equally matters of individual ownership with flocks and herds, houses and lands. The affections of a man's wife and children are among the dearest of his possessions, and as such are under the protection of the law. The domestic institution of slavery is one of these relations, and was recognized in the States of this Confederation as a species of proprietary interest. The Constitution describes slaves, and I suppose children and apprentices might come under the same class as persons bound to service.

I insist that no vindictory laws can be passed either depriving individuals of anything which can be denominated as property or infringing existing social relations as the punishment of the offenses either of men or communities. Neither Congress nor the assent of the States requisite to incorporate a new article or amendment into the Constitution can do so justly, under any pretense, when the object is to appropriate private property without due compensation, or confiscate it without the formality of trial and condemnation. Within the scope and reason of the Constitution any amendment to it would be legitimate when ratified by the required three fourths of the States; but for those three fourths to attempt a revolution in social or religious rights by seizing on what was never intended to be delegated by any of the parties to the compact, would be a prodigy of injustice carried out under the forms of law, a wrong more fatally so because made by the very highest authority. If an amendment were now proposed to the Constitution declaring an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise of it by the citizen, it would be parallel with the present and no more obnoxious than this is to merited condemnation. The States, sovereign as I claim that they are and continue to be, could not have delegated what they did not themselves possess, that is, to destroy or appropriate individual rights without compensation. In all the acts of emancipation heretofore passed the tacit consent of the citizens affected accompanied the passage of the statute. A species of property which has ceased to be profitable is usually surrendered without protest or opposition. Men are not disposed to cavil at the exercise of a power abstractly arbitrary, which rids them of a relation which is onerous or inconvenient. Such was slavery in the States where it has been abolished. But where it is one of the main sources of the prosperity of the community it will be regarded very differently.

This proposed alteration of the Constitution is therefore beyond the power of the Government, but the necessary consequences of it are revoltingly so. It involves the extermination of the white men of the southern States, and the forfeiture of all the land and other property belonging to them. Negroes and military colonists will take the place of the race thus blotted out of existence. Is this intended as the last scene of the bloody drama of carnage and civil war now being prosecuted? The world looks on with horror, and it will leave to future ages a fearful warning to avoid similar acts of perfidious atrocity.

But, sir, the most important aspect of this question is whether it is not a violation of the plighted faith of the States who shall aid in foisting this amendment into the Constitution. That the States in establishing the Constitution performed it as a federal act has been shown in the Federalist by an argument as indisputable as any mathematical demonstration. Mr. Madison says on this subject:

"Each State in ratifying the Constitution is considered as a sovereign body independent of all others, and only to be bound by its own voluntary act. In this relation, then, the new Constitution will, if established, be a federal and not a national Constitution."

It is true that the common Government which resulted presents national characteristics, especially in this respect, that its operation is exerted immediately upon citizens within the scope of the powers delegated to it in their individual capacities. The State sovereignties were by no means quenched by the act of federation, but by it certain functions were delegated by the sovereign power in each State to a common depository, to be used in certain cases, and to be exercised over the citizens respectively of each and every State by virtue of the sovereignty of their several States. The obligation, however, of the citizen of the State of New York to obey the Federal laws or authorities results from the powers imparted to the Federal Legislature or Executive by the act of New York, and derives no additional strength from other States entering into the Union. The citizen is bound to obey the Constitution and laws of the United States, because his State is a party to the Federal compact, and for no other reason. The State has delegated a portion of her authority (not of her sovereignty, which is, in its very nature, indivisible as that of individual personality) to a common agency, who may thus within the scope of such procurator require obedience to its requirements. The Government of the Union has this extent and no more, and allegiance, loyalty, and nationality are the new-fangled catch-words of the exploded dogmas of the old Federal party. Allegiance is due to the law, and derives its sanction from the sovereignty of each individual State.

The Democratic party has always maintained the doctrine that the Constitution was a compact from the times of Jefferson, and has for more than sixty years declared this as the foundation of its political faith. It is laid down most distinctly in the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions, the corner-stone of Democracy—

"That the several States composing the United States of America are not united on the principles of unlimited submission to the General Government, but that by compact, under the style and title of a Constitution for the United States and of amendments thereto, they constituted a General Government for special purposes, delegated to that Government certain definite powers, reserving each State to itself the residuary mass of right to their own self-government, and that whenever the General Government assumes undelegated powers its acts are unauthorized, void, and of no force; that to this compact each State acceded as a State, and is an integral part; that this Government, created by this compact, was not made the exclusive or final judge of the extent of the powers delegated to itself, since that would have made its discretion, and not the Constitution, the measure of its powers; but that, as in all other cases of compact among parties having no common judge, each party has an equal right to judge for itself, as well of infractions as of the mode and measures of redress."

Such is the language of Mr. Jefferson in the Kentucky resolutions. In the Virginia resolutions, the author of which was Mr. Madison, it is declared—

"That in case of a deliberate, palpable, and dangerous exercise of other powers not granted by the said compact, the States who are parties thereto have the right, and are in duty bound, to interpose, for arresting the progress of the evil, and for maintaining within their respective limits the authorities, rights, and liberties appertaining to them."

Daniel Webster emphatically recognized this character of a compact in the Constitution when he stated that "if the northern States refuse willfully and deliberately to carry into effect that part of the Constitution which respects the restoration of fugitive slaves, and Congress provide no remedy, the South would no longer be bound to observe the compact." Nay, the dominant party in this House, acting on the same theory of a bargain broken on the part of the South by secession, and considering themselves thereby absolved from the constitutional obligation to return fugitive slaves, have just passed a bill to repeal the fugitive slave law. It must be taken as conceded that the Constitution is a compact and covenant. Now, the very nature of a compact requires that there shall be contracting parties, and mutual obligations and considerations. The States and the people of those States in their sovereign capacity are the parties, and must be held answerable for any breach of good faith in not observing the terms of the contract, or in attempting to change them in any particular which destroys or alters essential and material portions. There was an implied and solemn understanding that the local and domestic institutions of the States should not be attempted to be interfered with in any manner so as to be drawn within the sphere of Federal authority. Does any one suppose that if it had been imagined for a moment that the rights of property and the social relations of the citizens of the several States could have been made the subject of Federal legislation in any contingency that the Constitution would have been ratified by any of the States? The local jurisdiction over slavery was one of the subjects peculiarly guarded and guarantied to the States, and an amendment ratified by any number of States less than the whole, though within the letter of the article which provides for amendments, would be contrary to the spirit of the instrument, and so in reality an act of gross bad faith.

The control over slavery, and the domestic and social relations of the people of the respective States, was not and never was intended to be delegated to the United States, and cannot now be delegated except by the consent of all the States. Articles nine and ten of the Amendments to the Constitution are conclusive on this point. These articles are the general rules for the construction and interpretation of the entire instrument. Powers already granted may be modified, enlarged, or taken away by an amendment, but those which are retained by the people, or reserved to them or to the States, cannot be delegated to the United States, except by the unanimous consent of all the States. This is the only reasonable construction of those articles, in accordance with the plain sense and meaning of the words. The entire subject of slavery in the States has been reserved by them, and the right been retained by the people. No power has been delegated to the United States over this relation thus reserved to the legislative power of the State, and which is thus retained by the people, subject to such State power alone. It stands precisely on the same footing as that of eminent domain in the respective States, a prerogative of their inherent sovereignty, which cannot be taken away by an act of other States. How would an agreement between private parties be construed and interpreted which should declare that the articles of association might be modified and altered by three fourths of the number, and then should declare that certain rights were reserved to them individually? Would not, manifestly, the matters not delegated but reserved be considered as excepted from the subjects which were within the scope of the authority to alter or modify? Take the right of the States respectively of eminent domain within their territorial limits, could this be taken away from the States and delegated to the United States by the consent of the Legislatures of three fourths of the States, after a proposal made by two thirds of both Houses of Congress? I maintain that article ten of the Amendments is point-blank against such a supposition, and is equally repugnant to an invasion of the right of the State alone to legislate on the subject of slavery. I insist further, that, as the States themselves could not justly take away property or destroy social relations without giving just compensation, this is not only not delegated by the States, but is among the rights retained by the people of the States where it exists, and that if all the States should delegate this power, it must, according to the rules of natural equity, be connected with the condition of allowing the masters a proper equivalent for the property taken or destroyed.

This identical proposition was laid down in the fourth resolution of the Chicago platform, once deemed so sacred in the eyes of the President and the gentlemen on the other side of the House, which asserts—

"That the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political faith depend."

Where now will be the right of each State to order and control its domestic institutions if the institutions of one fourth of the States are to be subjected to the will of the people of three fourths by amending the Constitution so as to make them belong to and under the control of a majority in Congress, or to wipe them out altogether?

About the time of the peace conferences an amendment which was substantially the converse of the present was proposed, declaring explicitly that no amendment affecting slavery should be valid that did not obtain the consent of all the States in which that institution existed. I believe if it had been adopted the present war would have been averted; and I consider that the suggestion made by the present Secretary of State, in one of his speeches during the last presidential canvass, that slavery could be constitutionally abolished when the number of free States had increased so as to allow the passage of this very amendment now under consideration, was one of the impelling causes that precipitated the struggle now convulsing the States and converted the "irrepressible conflict" of that political leader into the fearful strife of contending armies and warring States. This, the crowning act of the agitation of years against slavery, from the Missouri restriction to the invasion of Virginia by John Brown, whose chorus has become the music for the loyal hosts, comes at length to give a show of legality to the destruction of the institution of slavery. The very proposal of this amendment demonstrates the utter bad faith of the long series of acts which, illegally and in defiance of the Constitution, "the pledge of mutual friendship and the instrument of mutual happiness," sought to break down this domestic institution of the States of the South.

The proposal of this amendment arraigns the President as having violated the Constitution in his emancipation proclamation, and stamps it as a nullity and void. It is an implied confession that the Administration, carrying on an aggressive war on States and State institutions, had this design in view from the commencement—that the war was not for the purpose of sustaining the Government, preserving the Union, and maintaining the supremacy of the Constitution, but was directed against the sovereignties of the States, and to destroy such of their domestic institutions as were obnoxious to the views of the party controlling the Government for the time. The aggressor is always in the wrong in case of hostilities among States united under a federal system like ours, no matter on which side the General Government may array itself. This is the spirit embodied in the Crittenden resolutions, but it is not in accordance with the policy now avowed by the Administration in prosecuting the war, nor by the party which supports the President for reelection, and least of all by the proposed amendment to the Constitution. The Administration party have proclaimed "that the utter and complete extirpation of slavery from the soil of the Republic" is its present object, and support the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to this effect. Impartial history, in dealing with these events, will pronounce a verdict that this attitude, and, above all, the attempt to change the Constitution to make that illegal which was not so before, shows that the moving cause of the war was from the commencement the prohibition of slavery. That design, suspected with such ample ground, is now rendered transparently clear. No candid mind can avoid the inevitable conclusion which will brand northern sectionalism as the primary cause of the war, and that the apprehensions of the southern people were fully justified by the events now taking place and by the previous acts and proclamations of the Government. The pretext that those acts were done in its defense will be regarded as a falsehood, only intended to deceive the people and conceal the real character of the war.

The charge that slavery was the cause of the war is notoriously false. The agitation against slavery and the menaces uttered against that institution had risen to such an alarming height that the States where it existed believed that the only recourse left was to attempt peaceably to withdraw from the Confederation on the ground that the compact was broken. That this would be the inevitable result of the success of a party which denounced slavery as a moral, social, and political evil and declared its intention to use every means to extirpate it, was foretold for years. The speeches and writings of that pack of political jackals known as war Democrats, most of whom are now to be found yelling and yelping at the heels of power, were full of warnings of what the South would do in defense of their domestic institutions and their constitutional rights. If I did not consider these political renegades and mountebanks beneath contempt, I could fill volumes and exhaust your patience in quotations from men who were once the most ultra in their opposition to coercion and in defense of the Jeffersonian doctrine of State sovereignty. Fortunately their names are now erased from the memorials of the Democratic party, and are expunged and blotted out from the respect of those who still hold fast to its time-honored principles—principles which I trust will survive the storm and wreck of battle and the fiery ordeal of this unjust and unholy war, and upon which only the Union can or should exist.

The sentiment of opposition to slavery is so powerful that I could hardly expect to offer any reason which would awaken sympathy in behalf of its continuance, even if I showed that it was the best possible condition to insure the happiness of the negro race, or that its abolition was an invasion of the rights of the masters and the well-being of the communities where it existed. I have abstained from doing any more than to assert that the relation was one having a legal existence in the southern States and fully recognized by the Constitution. This is uncontrovertible, a fact not to be denied, and virtually admitted by the amendment now proposed. The theory that the States never parted with their sovereignty is likewise not acceptable to the opposite side of the House, and the notion that the General Government is paramount and can set aside all State authority is now popular. We are told, "Preserve the nation, though you tear the Constitution to a thousand pieces; hold the Union fast and let the Constitution slide as long as the nation remains; this generation, wiser and more patriotic than any that has gone before, is competent to devise a constitution better and nobler than that of Washington." I fear that I have no eloquence so persuasive, can make no appeals so winning as to convince the friends of the Administration that the Constitution cannot be improved by their wisdom, but I do insist that no cunning of man can frame a system of morality more perfect than that which demands that contracts between States and individuals should be observed inviolate, that mutual promises should be kept, and that faith should be preserved sacred and unbroken. If this is a nation, let not its national character be based on perfidy and falsehood. This would be worse than boldly proclaiming that it is founded on force, and that "might makes right."

When, however, I declare my hope and sincere desire to see the restoration and perpetuity of the Union, the gathering back into the galaxy of every star that has shot madly from its sphere, and the enfolding of every wanderer into the dear old flag with all its precious memories of associated glory and mutual happiness and mutual good will, I expect that what I utter will not be regarded with hostile feelings and alienated minds. You profess yourselves lovers of the Union, and so do I; we may differ as it regards the means of restoration and the remedy to be applied, "and purge it to a sound and pristine health," but we agree in devotion to the Union. It has been proposed by an eminent state physician that a violation of the Constitution is an excellent medicine to save the "life of the nation." I cannot, indeed, coincide with that same "learned Theban;" but I would humbly suggest a milder treatment than this with its concomitants of fire and sword and desolation. The "life of the nation" cannot be preserved by perjury, the Almighty will not suffer it, and the sense of truth and justice which He has implanted in His creatures forbids the success of the experiment. No Government can be lasting that is not founded on the consent of the governed. Do we dream of a Union of force, and vainly imagine that we can hold forever unwilling States, linked to us without their consent, by circling bayonets and threatening cannon? Is this the lesson taught by the history of that glorious Revolution which made the colonies of Great Britain free and independent States? If the policy of Chatham and Burke had been rejected instead of that of Bute and North, would not the rebellion of the colonies been crushed, and the authority of the mother country restored over her injured and offended children? Have centuries of wrong and injustice cemented the union between England and Ireland? Mark the difference: Scotland, treated with fairness and equity, became completely and firmly allied to her southern and more powerful neighbor, maintaining her laws, her church, and local institutions intact; the political alliance between the two nations has been undisturbed and inviolate.

Turn to the other side of the Channel, and what a contrast between the union of force and the union of kindness, the union of oppression and the union of equality, the union of hate and the union of love! Unhappy Poland still writhes subdued in the chains of that union which binds her to the Muscovite throne. The last instance of determined resistance to arbitrary power is the voluntary expatriation of the Circassian mountaineers, abandoning their country rather than be made subjects of Russia. Do you think that the people of the southern States are more degenerate and of tamer natures than the children of Europe, or the sons of the old birthplace of the race among the rugged mountains of Caucasus? Assuredly the experience of this war should teach otherwise. I see in it no warrant to cherish the anticipation that they will succumb and acquiesce in the yoke, as they deem it, even of the most beneficent Government the world ever saw, when offered to them on the points of your bayonets. The paternal sway of a Butler and the conciliatory policy of a Hunter produced the same effect in Louisiana and South Carolina that the benignant lash of Haynau did in Brescia and the merciful Russian knout did at Warsaw. Human nature is constituted the same in every quarter of the world. Opposition and hate are the results of aggression and force, and gratitude and sympathy the peaceful fruit of kindness and love. On these last, joined with mutual forbearance and consideration, this Union was originally founded; by them alone can it be recreated and made perpetual. How is it that gentlemen can prate of the acts of confiscation and vengeance, and the proclamations of emancipation dealing a "death-blow at the strength of this gigantic rebellion?" Is not the fact far otherwise, and have not the most vigorous efforts to prosecute the war been followed by equally determined resolution to resist to the last extremity? The bloody and brutal policy of the Administration party has well-nigh destroyed all hope of reconstruction, but I have an enduring faith in the efficacy of justice and fraternity. Call these divine principles back to your counsels and you will have taken the only step which can permanently restore the Union.

We have destroyed the former happy state of mutual friendship by innovations on the principles of the Government, first by the specious pretext of destroying slavery by excluding it from the common territory, and since the war broke out by executive usurpations substantially amounting to a military dictatorship under the same pretext, and the plausible though false assumption that this was necessary to preserve the existence of the Government. The present attempt to change the principles of the Union, though proposed in the form and letter of the Constitution, is adverse to its spirit and irreconcilable with its ends. But if it were allowable, it would be madness to press the alteration at this time, when a civil war is raging of such gigantic proportions. Pass this amendment, and the only limit of this war will be the subjugation of the South or the exhaustion of the North. And what is involved in the subjugation of the South? Nothing less than extermination. The contest is of a nature to admit of no termination until the last man dies on the battle-field or the scaffold. From this alternative my soul turns away in loathing and disgust. If the objects of the war were all that its instigators and supporters claim for them, I would shrink from the enforcement of the awful penalty which demands the annihilation of a kindred people. Infinite justice did not thus deal with the sons of Adam, but remitted the dire sentence of death at the intercession of mercy. If human societies would strive to imitate this august and divine exemplar, on earth would be seen—

"Golden days, fruitful of golden deeds,
With joy and love triumphing, and fair truth."

While this struggle is going on, an empire is planted in Mexico. If the war continues, the consequence will be not only perpetual disunion and the South a desolation, but an empire will be so firmly rooted on American-Mexican soil that the battle-wasted population and exhausted resources of the American "nation" cannot uproot it. Canada will have grown and expanded, and monarchical institutions will be then so matured that republicanism will stand alone on this as on the old continent. While war is continued, and it must long be so if this amendment is carried, it is idle to parade the threat that the people cannot regard with indifference the establishment of a monarchy in their proximity. Whether hostile, indifferent, or favorable to the erection of an empire in Mexico, this people must bide their time to offer resistance. It will be time enough to remonstrate when there is power to make remonstrances felt. Bring back the old Union, and the new empire will perish like a premature birth. Make it the victim of an interminable war, or wither and paralyze its limbs by subjugation, and the Mexican throne will be founded too securely to be overthrown by our exhausted energies.

I consider this the crisis of the fate of the Union. As yet there is hope, though three years of war may have piled the dead on either side so high that the boundary might be marked with the whitening bones of the slain. We may still be friends. Neither people have yet been dishonored, and both protest that they were observant of the compact. The people of the South you assert are rebels and traitors. Admit it. You cannot doubt that they are sincere in the opinion that they were justified in the course they adopted, and that it was consistent with the constitutional compact and their reserved rights. All crimes depend on the motive and design of the perpetrator and his guilty knowledge. You cannot deny the sincerity and patriotism of the South. They have submitted to sacrifices and sufferings greater than that of any other race that ever fought for independence. Are they to be branded as traitors because they, in common with Jefferson and Madison, believed that this was not a nation but a confederacy? If you do indeed account this the gist of their offense, then tear the ashes of those arch-traitors from the sepulchers where they repose and cast them to be scattered by the winds and waves, so that the spot of their burial may be unknown among men.

Recall, I entreat you, before it is too late, the ancient spirit of concession and mutual forbearance. There is a higher duty of every American citizen than fighting enemies or quelling by force of arms rebellions. Its voice may be stifled in the deadly struggle and forgotten in the tempest of political animosities, or the earthquake of revolution, but it still lives, and will forever survive. See it in the homely lesson, "to love his neighbor." This obeyed, though but imperfectly, will be more efficacious than all that has been done by force of arms in crushing the rebellion. In carrying out this policy of peace and reconciliation, do not in one breath proclaim the paramount authority of the Constitution, and then proceed to change it in that very particular in which those who are now in rebellion charged that you intended to disobey and violate it. Assure them that the Constitution shall remain as it is; publish an amnesty so broad, general, and all-embracing that it will include all degrees and ranks, civil and military; make at once a treaty of peace, pledging the faith of the States and the people to its strict observance, and invite the rebel States and people to send Representatives to Congress and join in the election of a Chief Magistrate and unite again in the establishment anew of the Union as it was. Let no feeling of vengeance and no mock philanthropy mar this auspicious reinauguration of the Constitution, but let an act of mutual oblivion conceal forever the horrible demagogic possession which has held possession of the States and the people for the last three years. This can be accomplished if the people only were wise enough to recognize their highest duty and their highest interest. Admonished by the past, let them be willing to purchase peace by the cheap cost of doing justice.

Mr. HIGBY. Before speaking to the resolution embracing the proposition to amend, I refer to the fifth article of the Constitution of the United States, which makes ample provision and explains the way by which an amendment may be made. The article reads as follows:

"ARTICLE V.—The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress; provided, that no amendment which may be made prior to the year one thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

The resolution follows in accordance and in consonance with the method proposed by that article of the Constitution, and it proposes an article which, should it become a portion of the Constitution, will forever prohibit the institution of slavery within the limits of our country. The resolution and amendment proposed read as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two thirds of both Houses concurring,) That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the said Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE XIII.

SEC. 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Sir, the whole debate on the other side of the House upon this proposition has been upon the presumption that whatever action is taken by us as a legislative body is conclusive; that if this resolution passes this House—it having already passed the Senate—it becomes a finality, and whatever is embraced in it becomes a portion of the Constitution of the United States. Let no such fallacy sink deep into the heart of any man. The Constitution has most amply and cautiously provided that the national legislative branch of the Government can make no such amendment. Why, sir, the resolution simply gives the amendment in so many words, and proposes its ratification, and then the amendment goes to the State Legislatures, and must be ratified by them.

There is nowhere contemplated in the Constitution of the United States any action by Congress that more completely acknowledges and recognizes State sovereignty than this very provision of the Constitution explaining how it may be amended. Our people are looking with anxiety to the action of Congress with reference to this subject. And now let me put a question to gentlemen on the other side of the House. They have belabored this side often and long with denunciations that State rights are not regarded, that State sovereignty by our action is unheeded, and that we are aiding the national Government to absorb all powers which legitimately belong to the States under and by virtue of the Constitution. I appeal to them when a proposition does come from this side of the House that acknowledges and recognizes State sovereignty in full, whether they dare submit that proposition to the several States; whether they have faith in State sovereignty so great that when the Constitution makes a provision so ample as it has in this case, and so safe too, requiring the Legislatures of three fourths of the States to ratify, that they dare allow their different States to act upon this subject.

The only question that could possibly arise—and that one I find dwelt upon but very little—is whether the times call for an amendment of this character, but the great burden of the argument on the other side is that there is no power in the Constitution to do this act. The member from New York who has just taken his seat [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] has had the hardihood to promulge to this nation that the ninth and tenth articles of the Amendments to the Constitution do away and make a nullity of the article to which I have directed attention and quoted. Can he find anywhere in the Constitution a provision by which it may be amended in so indirect a way, and the portions amended be left as dead matter to cumber the living body? He would search in vain for such a provision. Why, sir, he would trample the Constitution under his feet. And if we follow out his argument and act upon it we will become violators of that instrument.

I regard the fifth article as a part of the Constitution just as full of vitality as it was the day our fathers established it as a part of the Constitution of this country; and, sir, the gentleman from New York, if he has a particle of honesty, himself will ignore every word which he has said upon that one subject.

Let me call the attention of the House to the only limitation in the instrument; and they are referred to this fifth article, where the limitation is to be found; it provides "that no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article." But, sir, this Constitution is entirely silent with reference to all other portions, including even that which provides that fugitives from labor shall be returned to service. Upon this the Constitution is silent, and even before 1808 it could have been amended, with the exception above quoted, by pursuing the course laid down in the fifth article.

Now, sir, what is there in the proposition contained in this resolution? It is that a certain amendment, specifying it in so many words, shall be submitted to the different State Legislatures for their action, and if the Legislatures of three fourths of the States of the Union ratify it it becomes a portion of the Constitution of the United States. And, sir, that is a proposition appealing to State sovereignty that members upon the other side of the House dare not allow to be submitted and acted upon by those high constitutional deliberative bodies.

But, Mr. Speaker, I will not dwell longer upon that point. It is sufficient that we simply propose what the State Legislatures ratify and make a part of the Constitution, or else render a nullity. Sir, this amendment, if it should become a portion of the Constitution, strikes at the root of the terrible evil that is now piercing the very vitals of the nation, whose roots of bitterness have sunk so deep that they are almost drinking up the life-blood of this Government. Men talk upon the other side as they did in the palmy days of peace, when nothing but the busy hum of industry could be heard on every side, and when slavery lay like a lamb, submissive to every law. But now, sir, when it has aroused and become venomous, and, full of the spirit of the tiger, draws the sword and makes no distinction in its wrath, and is feasting upon the very life of this nation, we hear the same songs in this Hall that we used to hear in the days of peace, showing how utterly heartless men must be, having no blood of patriotism in their veins.

We are told that the institution of slavery in the rebellious States has rights under this Government. The rights of slavery! What right, in God's name, has the institution that has now two or three hundred thousand men arrayed in arms against the Government? Is this bold frontory to be weighed as argument, and are we yet to hear about the rights of slavery? It has culminated in concentrating its whole power against this Government. What right has it which this Government is bound to respect?

What was its morale, sir? In early days as an institution it was humble and unpretending. While it was an institution in the colonies it had no political power. The charm of this whole institution has been in the political power that it has exercised. But, sir, as we emerged from dependents as colonies and became an independent nation, the fathers who lived in its very midst trod very cautiously over the ground. Why, sir, what was its first exercise of power? When Virginia, which was then a slave State, ceded the Northwest Territory to the Union, it demanded that slavery should be prohibited forever in that Territory, and the power was admitted to rest in Congress to prohibit the institution from ever going there while it was a Territory. Such was the morale of slavery in its early days, so far as the exercise of political power was concerned. But, sir, it increased in magnitude and in proportions, and became interwoven with our whole system. It was held in early times to be an evil, but a necessary one; it was

But, sir, as it increased in power, so it acquired political ascendancy; it spread over a vast extent of country; slavery was the rule and freedom the exception, and the poor whites under its shadow were insignificant in comparison with master or even bondsman. Slave labor became profitable; it constituted the great labor force, and, what was still sweeter than all, it gave such a political ascendancy that it enabled a few States and a comparatively few white people to control the Government. I declare, sir, for myself, and no man is responsible for what I say but myself, that no Government is republican in form, body, or spirit, that tolerates such an institution as slavery. I lay it down as a self-evident truth to my mind, and if every other man would take the same ground there could be no such institution in existence under the Constitution as we now have it. But as I am probably alone here in that view, and as that construction would not be given by other men, I prefer that the Constitution be changed in the respect that is contemplated by this resolution. For, sir, I would not be willing to trust all men with the construing of the Constitution in its many provisions, for fear self-interest and love of personal aggrandizement would influence in construction instead of a love of equal justice. It has been claimed in latter years that slavery is an institution sanctioned by divine law and by the word of God. Ah, sir, those who made that claim did not read the Scriptures very faithfully, for they would have found it said even in the Old Testament that when a servant escapes from his master he shall not be returned to him again; he shall let him go free:

"Thou shalt not deliver unto his master the servant which is escaped from his master unto thee:

"He shall dwell with thee, even among you, in that place which he shall choose in one of thy gates, where it liketh him best: thou shalt not oppress him."

And over and above all, they forgot the new covenant, whose Founder told the world that He came to "fulfill the law."

But, sir, it will do for old foggy exploded divines to dwell upon that subject and show the validity and divine origin of slavery—for such men as the one who was voted for Chaplain of this House (Bishop Hopkins) at the commencement of this session. The evils of the institution and the effects resulting from those evils are too numerous to mention in a brief hour speech. I have declared that the institution is anti-republican, and that no Government which tolerated it could be in form, body, or spirit a republican Government. Why, sir, men have stood upon this floor, prior to the rebellion, who represented States that had more slaves than free white inhabitants, and I instance South Carolina as one of those States. Those slaves have no political or civil rights, and yet every five of them are equal to three white persons, giving a representation on this floor to four hundred thousand slaves, not one of whom has in the State or nation a voice or a vote, and who can enjoy no civil or political rights any more than the horse and ox which his master owns. Two hundred thousand white inhabitants and five hundred thousand slaves—equal to three hundred thousand whites—would give five hundred thousand inhabitants to be represented in the State; and, under the rule giving one member of Congress to every one hundred thousand inhabitants, that would give to a State having only two hundred thousand white inhabitants five Representatives on this floor. That is not republicanism, sir. That is anti-republicanism. It is the very worst kind of a Government imaginable. It is despotism to the extent of the slave representation—a cruel, brutal despotism.

Mr. Speaker, the people of the South have been extremely cunning in the argument of this question whenever it has been raised. Whenever the spirit of free discussion has arisen, and the question of slavery has been debated, they who were in favor of the abolition of slavery were told that they were in favor of giving to the slaves the civil rights that white people had, the political rights, and not only that but the social rights. The latter point was pressed with more vehemence than all the others. And while they have pressed that as an argument why slavery should not be annihilated, the secret with the South in holding fast to slavery has been the political power which it has given them in this Government. There is the charm; there is the fascination. It is power, political power. That is what they have held to.

The member from New York who last addressed the House [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] said a most beautiful thing, but, sir, he put it to extremely wrong use: "The best Government is that which governs least." I agree with him in the truism. The Government that does away with slavery as an institution does away with the most infamous system of government that was ever instituted on God's earth. It does away with a system which makes the man who domineers a cruel taskmaster. It does away with a system which perverts the judgment of him as master and panders to the basest propensities of the human heart. It is a perpetual, never-dying despotism. And I will join with the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD,] and all others who will, in perpetuating all over the country that truism which he has uttered. I would have the voice of freedom and free discussion and the song of freedom go South, and the other song of the lash and the clanking of chains should recede as these two advanced. Such would be the consequence of carrying out the truism which the gentleman has published here to-day.

Sir, I was speaking of slaves. They are property. They are held as such; that is, when we acknowledge the institution as a legal and rightful one between man and man. But I deny that, in right and justice, such an institution can exist. But, sir, the argument is that in States the institution exists. If it be so, human beings are property; and the five hundred thousand slaves are nothing but property in the estimate as between man and man. And yet, sir, when the Representative leaves his State and comes into this Hall, the five hundred thousand slaves in his State count as three hundred thousand inhabitants, and the State sends here three members, on property owned in human beings over whom they exercise absolute control as property, whom they can buy and sell. But here they stand and talk about the rights of freemen, the rights of free speech, the sovereignty of States, and the rights of their constituents. It is an institution, sir, which has its pens where humanity is herded like cattle, and has its block in market where human beings are bought and sold. And that is claimed to be republicanism. It is a republicanism, sir, which is born of hell, not of earth, or of above the earth. It is an institution which is now at war with this Government, and which will destroy it if it can. And we on this side of the House propose to do away with it in the way pointed out by the Constitution, or so to amend the Constitution that it cannot exist when peace is restored; and they cavil at it on the other side of the House. That shows, Mr. Speaker, how hollow their arguments are and how insincere their purposes and pretenses.

Now, sir, as to the political power exercised by this institution. Slavery wished that there should be a line of latitude between freedom and slavery; and it gave us the Missouri compromise in 1820. It was legitimate, below a certain line, to hold slaves; above it it was unlawful. Great principles of human right were to be bounded by lines of latitude and longitude. I cannot enumerate all the opportunities it has sought to exercise power, and all the wrong it has done.

But what has been done by the Government, under the dictation of the slave power, at certain well-known periods? In 1850 the State which I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor could not be admitted into this Union except through an infamous compromise. The fugitive slave law had to be tacked on and made a part of the bundle. I tell gentlemen on the other side of the House that the Congress then in session, and the Executive who occupied the presidential chair at that day, did more mischief, more toward bringing about the condition of things we have suffered and endured, and which we are now suffering in agony, than any one public act ever done in this country. It was the low, crouching, and mean subserviency of great political parties to the encroachments, arrogance, and aggressions of the slave power.

In 1854 the votaries of the slave power with few exceptions demanded that the Missouri compromise line should be obliterated, and that demand was yielded to. Some of the older and far-seeing ones were fearful when that line was removed that free institutions and free labor in the struggle for supremacy would get the advantage of the slave power. And their fears were not without foundation.

The struggle in Kansas during the last Administration is an illustration of the fallacy of human judgment and human intention, for those men who desired the admission of Kansas as a slave State had the whole power of the Government to aid them. They had not only the civil but the military power to aid in subduing the people and bringing them to terms. It was all of no avail. When the Lecompton constitution came before Congress slavery sugared it all over in order to make it a sweet morsel and palatable to the throats of that people. They told them in the English bill, so infamous, that if they would accept that constitution they might come in as a State with what population they then had. Not only that, but that they should have all of the salt springs and five per cent. of the receipts of the sale of the public lands in their State. This was the bribe which they were offered to induce them to accept that constitution; and if Kansas should refuse the offer admission should be postponed until she had the population the census required. In 1858, after that turmoil in which the Lecompton constitution was attempted to be forced upon them, the people took a vote on it and refused to accept the humiliating imposition by an overwhelming majority. They became a free people and a free State. In that movement slavery was defeated.

It has controlled political parties. Its power has been so great that all political parties have been compelled to bend the knee to it. In 1850, in the passage of the fugitive slave law, the two great parties of the country, the Democratic and Whig, were represented in the infamous transaction. They joined their hands in infamous fellowship, a Democratic Congress passing it and a Whig Executive approving it. And in 1860 there was no political party that did not tolerate and acknowledge the status of this institution of slavery. There was not a national party that had a candidate for the Presidency but acknowledged the right to hold slaves as property in a State. It could have no footing unless it did so. The present Executive took his seat in the presidential chair with the recognition of the right of every State to have the institution of slavery inviolate by Federal action. And yet, sir, slavery arrogantly insisted that the Government was aggressive in its policy. In 1856 it demanded non-intervention, and in the Cincinnati convention non-intervention was made a part of its platform. In 1860, at Charleston, it demanded intervention, and because there was not a yielding and knocking under to that demand it divided the Democratic party, and ran its candidate upon that proposition. And then, notwithstanding the pledge of every party that the institution of slavery was a recognized institution of the different States whose State constitutions allowed its existence, and which every State government could have within its limits, it made war upon this Government for the reason that it would not acknowledge the grasping policy which it demanded.

And gentlemen argue here that we are waging war upon the South. It is a falsehood in fact, yet not intended as such, because some as good men as are here, men whom I know to be as correct as can be upon this subject, still talk on this subject as though the Government was waging war upon the South.

Mr. Speaker, I commend to the attention of every member of this House for his perusal and study a report that was made in the Thirty-Sixth Congress in the session of 1860-61. It is the report of a select committee of five, appointed on the 9th of January, and to whom was referred the special messages of the President and sundry other papers. On the 28th of February, 1861, that committee submitted a report, and I will read from it an extract to be found upon page 3:

"Self-preservation is the first law of a nation. The power to defend its implements of self-preservation is one of the clearest of all its powers. We cannot conceive of a nation without the power to build and defend forts and all implements of war within its own jurisdiction. And yet secession claims to have seized, within sixty days, fourteen forts, costing $5,580,858, and mounting eleven hundred and twenty-four guns. These forts are not only held against the United States, but two others are closely besieged, and assault is every day threatened. The arsenals, the arms, the revenue cutters, the custom-houses, the post offices, the mints, the money, and even the hospitals of the United States are seized and held with impunity. The operations of commerce are impeded. Seven States claim to have released themselves from all constitutional obligations; to have disrupted the Government, and formed a new and independent confederacy in the bounds of the United States, all in the name of secession; and yet we are told secession is not only a peaceful but a constitutional remedy; as if the Constitution had provided for its own destruction by an inconsiderable fraction of the power that made it."

But, Mr. Speaker, it may be possible that some gentlemen upon this floor may question the veracity of that portion of the report, but those gentlemen will not question the veracity of what I am about to read, for it comes from one whom many of them loved at that time, and I do not know but their love still continues:

"Even now the danger is upon us. In several of the States which have not yet seceded, the forts, arsenals, and magazines of the United States have been seized. This is by far the most serious step which has been taken since the commencement of the troubles. This public property has long been left without garrisons and troops for its protection, because no person doubted its security under the flag of the country in any State of the Union. Besides, our small Army has scarcely been sufficient to guard our remote frontiers against Indian incursions. The seizure of this property, from all appearances, has been purely aggressive, and not in resistance to any attempt to coerce a State or States to remain in the Union."

This is an extract from a special message sent to Congress by James Buchanan, and has his signature as President.

And this was signed on the 8th day of January, 1861, almost two months before his presidential term expired. War! Talk about waging war. These villains were laying destruction across the pathway of the Government, seizing its property here and there, going in military array and doing it, threatening men if they did not yield, and yet we are told that this Government has been waging war against the South! That is as big a lie as the institution of slavery is itself. I call slavery the great lie of the age, got up by a body of men, while this is a simple lie by individuals, and history will put the stamp upon it.

But we are told further than that—and here is where men attempt to escape—that Abraham Lincoln gave strength to the rebellion by his proclamation. On the 1st day of January, 1863, President Lincoln issued his proclamation after giving a hundred days' notice, ample time for the rebel States to lay down their arms and come back into the Union and be as they were before they took up arms—a grace which none but the God of heaven would have given, and I doubt whether He would have given it.

Why, sir, the Opposition seek an excuse under that proclamation to withdraw their aid to the Government in this hour of its peril. Let me remind such of a little piece of history taken from the words of the vice president of the confederate States, and which has become a part of the history of that government. He says that the new government formed by them is based upon the institution of slavery as its foundation. Do gentlemen object to getting at the foundation and knocking it to pieces? Do they desire to haggle at the branches, and attack the trunk before they reach the foundation? Is that the way to destroy a system which has slavery as its foundation? There is a preferable mode. Strike at the foundation first, knock it out, and the superstructure will fall, and the whole mass will come crushing down. It is the best blow possible to be struck.

Mr. Speaker, gentlemen who would avoid supporting the Government cry, "Oh, the proclamation!" The proclamation struck at the foundation. It struck at the root of the terrible aggression against this Government. It struck at the very vitality of it, and every man of sense and judgment knows it, and they only deny it for an excuse for not rendering aid to the Government.

Mr. Speaker, there never was a time when the proposition contained in this resolution and in this proposed amendment of the Constitution needed more the action of this body than now, at this time, during this session; and, sir, the States, by their Legislatures, should act upon it at their earliest sessions after it shall have passed this Congress. The Constitution should be adapted to the condition of the country where the noble men of the loyal States are giving up their lives and where they have given them up by thousands. Their bones are bleaching upon hundreds of battle-fields. They are drenching with their blood the soil over which they are moving with victory perching on their banners and killing out the roots of slavery so that it cannot exist; and we, as the legislative part of this Government, should be adapting the Constitution and all the laws as speedily as we can to the new condition of the country where our armies do march in triumph, so that we may never see nor feel again this power that has come so near being the end of this nation.

Mr. KALBFLEISCH. Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to wander over the road traveled by the gentleman who preceded me, [Mr. HIGBY,] but will endeavor to take a common-sense view of the subject, and in plain language strive to give expression to the sentiments I entertain in regard to the proposition now before the House.

For the first time in the history of our country a serious attempt is about to be made to introduce a radical change in the Constitution under which we have enjoyed the greatest amount of earthly blessings ever vouchsafed to a nation. The question as to its propriety is therefore a grave one, beset with many perils, and its consideration should be approached with the greatest care and conducted with the most serious deliberation. Indeed, the necessity for such a change should first be made clearly manifest, and placed beyond all doubt, before its consideration at all should be allowed seriously to occupy our minds.

The subject embraced in the proposed amendment to the Constitution, that of prohibiting involuntary servitude, or, in other words, slavery, in any State or Territory, is not a new one and for the first time agitated. It received the attention of the framers of that instrument, and was exhaustively debated and thoroughly considered by them. They were not unmindful of the fact that the time might arrive when it would require the greatest forbearance on the one side and the utmost caution on the other to avoid a crisis like that in which the nation is now plunged. They settled the distracting question for themselves by mutual concession on the part of conflicting interests and views, and then provided for the permanency of that settlement by the adoption of a clause in the Constitution providing that amendments to it should be made only with the assent of three fourths of the parties to the compact. They feared that at some future time an attempt might be made to tamper with the Constitution in order to unjustly benefit or interfere with an especial interest or a particular section of country at the expense of another, and established what they believed to be an impassable barrier to any such attempt. They sought to place the glorious result of their labors upon as it were a rock, against which the fluctuating, surging tides of evanescent popular majorities and the stormy waves of mere partisan strife should be impotent to endanger its permanence. And there in that firm position it has remained invulnerable, if not unassailable, to the present time, an illustration and embodiment of human wisdom the most sublime ever reared by the mind of man.

Revering the Constitution as I do, can it be wondered at that I should receive the bare suggestion of amending it with any other than feelings of doubt and misgiving, and that before I can give my assent to any proposition for its amendment even for real and apparent defects, still less for fancied ones, I must be clearly convinced that it is indispensable to the future well-being of the country? I must not only be satisfied that it will infallibly tend to restore peace to the country and harmony to the Union, but also that the present is the proper and most auspicious moment for its inauguration. In examining the proposition before us, with a view to satisfy my mind upon these points, it will be pertinent also to inquire into the objects and motives of its advocates here—whether their real desire is the benefit of every section of the country, or only that of a particular locality coupled with the corrupt purpose of perpetuating the power of the party now administering the Government.

The advocates of the proposition to amend the Constitution have endeavored to show by various arguments that the country could not continue to prosper while slavery was permitted to exist in the Territories or States of the Union, and that therefore a clause prohibiting the holding of slaves within the borders of the Republic should be inserted in that illustrious and venerated instrument. How long, let me ask, is it since it was discovered that the country could not prosper under our Constitution? Why, but a few years since to preach such a doctrine would have subjected the party having the hardihood to do it to the scorn and contumely of the people. Even the noisiest abolition brawling fanatics, whether of the slightest tinge or of the darkest hue, have invariably acknowledged that the country was prosperous, at least up to and until the outbreak of the rebellion.

The absurdity of the argument that the proposed amendment to the Constitution is necessary to the prosperity of the country is so manifest that to me it seems almost absurd to attempt seriously to refute it. It is either a crazy delusion or a wicked and willful falsehood on the part of those who promulgate it. No, sir; the prosperity of the country has been marred and its welfare affected, not by the legitimate operation of the Constitution, but by the efforts that have been made to interfere with and overthrow it. The continual intermeddling with and agitation of the subject of slavery by some of the people of the free States who had become frantic upon that question, and the use made of that frenzied state of mind by others of them in promoting the gratification of their inordinate desire for public office and political spoils, may well be regarded as among the primary causes that have hastened, if not produced, the unhappy condition in which we now find the country.

While the Constitution was respected and enforced, for three quarters of a century, we were happy and prosperous; and it was not until a miserable set of political charlatans sought to blind the people to their grasping for place and power by a false issue that this cry was raised that the instrument was defective and needed amendment. It was the production of the master minds of the age in which they lived, men who, if alive to-day, would be joyfully intrusted by the people with the task of leading the nation out of the calamities into which it has been plunged by the corrupt and incompetent imbeciles to whose hands the destinies of the country are now confided. Is it wise, under these circumstances, to discard their labors and teachings, and to attempt a change which may be sowing the seeds of our utter destruction. The fate of him who was well, took physic to make him better, and died in consequence thereof, is an apt illustration of the dangers of tampering with the Constitution, under the benign influences of which, heretofore, our national health has been so hearty and robust. It needs no physic, and least of all such as now offered us by political quacks and mountebanks, to improve our condition.

Where risks are but small in comparison with benefits anticipated, there perhaps may be justification in trying experiments, but the risk of altering one line, nay, even a single word of the Constitution, may involve us in consequences so fatal to the welfare and the liberties of the people that it would be worse than madness to attempt it. The alteration once commenced and the people made familiar with the idea of its mutability, and who can tell how soon other and more fancied grievances and wrongs, or even the reckless desire to pull down everything that bears upon it the least stamp of antiquity, now so prevalent among us, may cause other and more radical changes, until in the end, of the now solid and perfect structure which has stood the test of years, scarce a vestige will remain? The glorious work of the fathers of the Republic, the perfection of human wisdom as it has often been pronounced, may thus become a mere piece of patch-work, shaped and transformed at the will and caprice of the parties in power until at last there shall remain of it but a bundle of shreds and patches as a mournful reminder of its former greatness. God forbid that such a destiny shall await the American Constitution. I regard, sir, this proposition for an amendment of the Constitution but as a part of the scheming and agitation which resulted in the origin and success of the party now controlling the Government, and brought forward in the hope, vain I trust, of securing for it a new lease of power.

By grossly high coloring and unfairly exaggerating the evils of slavery, these politicians succeeded in exciting among the people a sentiment of blind enthusiastic sympathy for the negro, of which they artfully availed themselves as a stepping stone to place and power. And they now seek by appeals to the passions and prejudices of the people stimulated by the events of the war, and by misrepresentation and the raising of false issues, to perpetuate their hold of the position which by the means to which I have referred they have succeeded in obtaining. This proposition to amend the Constitution for the benefit of the negro is, I repeat, but a new dodge in their game. The Democratic party are to be abused and maligned anew for daring to oppose them in their destructive career, and another agitation attempted to be excited, based upon the plea of justice to the negro. I say their destructive career, and I believe I am fully warranted in using the expression, because notwithstanding all their vaunting professions of extreme patriotism and loyalty (the latter a phrase only properly appropriate in countries where monarchical Governments prevail) they have perpetrated many acts which history will pronounce to be subversive of the best interests of the nation and tending still further to widen the breach which we have striven at the cost of hundreds of thousands of valuable lives and thousands of millions of treasure ineffectually to close.

What need, let me ask, have these politicians for an amendment of the Constitution, for any object? Have they ever failed, when their purpose seemed to them to require it, to disregard it both in spirit and letter? If those who differ with me shall answer this in the negative, let them, if they are able, wipe away the stain of confiscating lands, in clear violation not only of the spirit of the Constitution but of the only liberal construction that can be put upon it. Let them account for the disregard of its provisions in the numerous cases of arbitrary arrests, a power heretofore only exercised by military authority, under despotism, and the creation of which was never contemplated by our forefathers. Could the framers of our Magna Charta have foreseen that the time would ever arrive when it would be undertaken to suppress the publication of newspapers, and upon a pretext so frivolous as that put forth in the case of the World and the Journal of Commerce, they would have abandoned their work in despair. These are acts in violation of the Constitution, and which can only be perpetrated by means of military force. Let us hope that we shall have no more of them, and that we are not yet lost to all sense of patriotism and those feelings which animated our forefathers when they declared themselves a free and independent people, willing to stake their lives and sacred honors to maintain that declaration. Let us not become forgetful of their sacrifices and the boon they have conferred upon us, but resolve to continue with a steady and unfaltering step to travel the road they have marked out for us, and which, always pursued by the Democratic party, has under their guidance conducted the Republic to happiness, glory, and renown.

A part of the game to retain power and control of the Government has been to misrepresent and vituperate the Democratic party. We are charged with opposing their proposed change in the Constitution simply with a design to thwart the Government in its purposes and action, and to frustrate its efforts for the restoration of the Union.

This is no new charge. The Democratic party have all along been accused by these political schemers of conduct tending to give aid and comfort to our enemies, and thereby assisting in destroying all hope of a restoration of the Union to its former proud stand among the nations of the earth, when its emblem of nationality was respected in every clime, the dread of tyrants and the star of hope of the oppressed. They are often in derision styled "copperheads," with intent to convey the idea of their favorable disposition to the so-called southern confederacy and their opposition to our own Government. These charges and accusations need no retort nor defense. They fall harmless at the feet of the Democratic party. The hundreds of thousands of brave and patriotic members of that party who fill the ranks of our heroic armies, and whose remains are moldering beneath the battle-fields of the war, and the pecuniary contributions of thousands of their brethren in civil life in behalf of the cause of the Union, suffice to show the proud position occupied by the Democratic party in this controversy. Their acts speak more eloquently than words, and the railing of the blatant babblers in the ranks of the Administration supporters will fail to blot or obscure the glorious record.

But here let me say that these aspersions upon and misrepresentation of the Democratic party, wanton and unjustifiable as they are, have tended more to the prolongation of the civil war than a casual observation would lead one to suppose. They have tended to encourage the rebels in holding out against a return to their allegiance, and in persisting in their vain effort to establish a Government of their own. This they have done by inducing them to believe that there was in the States adhering to the Union a party as powerful as is the Democratic party, sympathizing with their efforts and wishing them success. By conveying this impression and by the everlasting cries of copperhead, traitor, secessionist, and other opprobrious and lying epithets, of late so lavishly heaped upon the members of the Democratic party, the supporters of the Administration have, in my candid opinion, helped to prolong a war which should long ere this have been ended. And let me ask, would it not be a fair argument for the rebels to use to these would-be pure patriots who are so denunciatory of the acts of their fellow-citizens who differ with them in opinion, should they, the rebels, say: "You admit that you are in favor of a Government selected by a majority of the governed, and you say that you believe the power of sovereignty is still vested in the people, and that they possess the right to delegate it to such of their number as a majority of them may select?" You will not deny this, and the rebels continue: "You allege that the Democrats of the North are copperheads, in favor of the government of one Jeff. Davis; in short, that they are secessionists in sentiment; if so, why do you war against us and condemn us as rebels? You must admit that combined we rebels and the copperheads, who, as you say, are in favor of our Government, constitute a large majority of the people North and South; therefore our rebellion, according to your own showing, is justifiable and becomes a revolution, because it is based upon a desire for a change of Government, which, according to the principle recognized by us all, the majority of the people have an unquestioned right to make." This is the argument you put in the mouths of the rebels, and upon your own premises I imagine you would find it exceedingly difficult if not absolutely impossible to confute it.

Mr. Speaker, the language I have used may not be as eloquent nor my arguments as clear and lucid as I could wish and as others more capable to the task might have given expression to; but I believe my idea of popular government will be understood. No one, I am sure, with the least particle of love for the Union inspiring him, can fail to see the harm done to its cause by our opponents, not only by their unceasing use of language unbecoming American citizens, but by the commission of acts which are disgraceful in the extreme. Certain it is that to charge the Democratic party with having brought about the evils under which the nation labors, and with aiding and abetting in their continuance, does not tend to promote the fraternal feeling which should prevail among us, especially at the present.

So much for this charge that the Democrats are the enemies of the Government. I acknowledge, sir, and here I hope I may not be misunderstood, that when I speak of the Government I mean the Government as distinct and different from the individuals who, for the time being, administer it. To further explain: I love and venerate the Government and the Constitution defining its powers, and I maintain a proper respect for the authorities elected or appointed under it; but I reserve the right to examine into their official conduct and to express my disapproval of their acts if they do not accord with my sense of propriety and justice, even though such acts may be those of a constitutionally elected President. I say I claim the right to disapprove, as I do, of many of the official acts of Abraham Lincoln, the President of the United States. To this extent, no more, has the Democratic party sinned; and what sincere and candid friend of free speech can arraign them for that?

Having, Mr. Speaker, referred to these unfounded charges against the Democratic party, so far as I consider them worthy of notice, I desire somewhat to examine the claims of their opponents to all the political virtues which they so boastingly put forth. Let us see, also, whether these professions of desire to restore the Union are founded in truth or conceived in a genuine spirit of patriotism. They assert that the institution of slavery is the primary cause of this war, and that it should, therefore, be no longer allowed to exist. At first blush the assertion appears to have considerable force, and the consequence which they insist should attend seems to follow naturally enough. I deny, however, slavery to have been the origin of all our evils; but admitting, for the sake of the argument, that it was, upon reflection it will be found that the question still arises, is its utter annihilation at the present time, and in the present condition of the country and that of the negro race, the proper remedy? As well might it be contended that the utter destruction of life is the best mode of relieving long-continued bodily ailment. No sensible physician would either in theory or practice advocate such a treatment, and yet in what respect do the cases differ? The immediate abolition of slavery no one will deny strikes a death-blow at the very existence of the communities whose people are said to be cursed with the institution. A safer and more certain method to restore them to political health would be a resort to gradual emancipation or some other measure of a like nature. It might at least have been allowed consideration, for it should not be forgotten that the southern people themselves are not wholly accountable for the evil of slavery. Their brethren of the North are more responsible for its introduction among them, and should therefore be the last to demand that their title to what has always been recognized as property should be destroyed merely to satisfy the inordinate cravings of fanaticism. For one I can never consent to the adoption of a measure which must utterly abrogate their former acknowledged rights and destroy their political existence, and thus deprive them of a participation in the blessings enjoyed by other portions of the country to whose birth and prosperity they have so largely contributed by their willing sacrifice of blood and treasure.

But passing over this question and conceding, if you please, for argument's sake, the position of our opponents, what justification can they possibly find for their attempt to enact laws depriving innocent offspring of lands owned by their forefathers, and thus robbing them of their lawful inheritance, to be parceled out among these liberated slaves? This is an assumption of power in direct violation of the Constitution, quite as much so as would be a law for the utter abolition of slavery. And yet we have had not even a hint of a proposition to amend that instrument so as to permit of confiscation. And why? Was it because that, unlike the slavery agitation, there was no political capital to be made from such a proposition, and because they feared that a proposition so outrageous might lead to a more careful inquiry and scrutiny into their acts by the people, and result in the raising of a whirlwind the effects of which no political organization could withstand? It would seem so, at all events.

Again, why are we not asked to amend the Constitution so as to confer greater powers upon the Administration to justify them in their unwarrantable arbitrary arrests? Is it not because they fear the verdict of the people upon such an issue directly raised? The Constitution prohibits the infliction of cruel and unusual punishment upon actually guilty parties; and what can be said in mitigation of the incarceration of citizens in a dungeon as a punishment for a casual remark or for no conceivable offense whatever, upon mere frivolous charges preferred by irresponsible parties? The Constitution also provides for the freedom of the press. Why are we not asked to amend it so as to prohibit such freedom? Will they dare do it? No, and yet they have not hesitated to set the constitutional guarantee utterly at naught. Why, one of the main planks of the platform upon which the Administration party rode into power was the assertion of the freedom of the press, and yet see how they have disregarded their promises and pledges. Have we not been made the scorn and laughing-stock of the civilized world, from the fact that, with all our boasted freedom, our press is muzzled to an extent scarcely paralleled in any age or country since the art of printing was discovered? Is it not on pain of extinction that our public journals are compelled to refrain from giving utterance to their opinions and obliged to remain silent, while stupid and stupendous lies are daily perpetrated and circulated by parties who, affecting to be par excellence the friends of the Union, are influenced by purposes of plundering or stock-jobbing operations, or both? Has not the suspension of the two journals alluded to before, and known as the Journal of Commerce and the World, by order of the President, and placing a military guard in possession of the premises, presses, and printing materials, been of a character to alarm every freeman and justly excite his apprehension for the liberty of the press in the future? Have the American people already become so familiar with the perpetration of kindred acts that they cease to warn them of approaching danger? I hope and trust the people have not yet become so indifferent and have so tamely submitted to these attempts to trample upon or abrogate their sacred rights guaranteed by the Constitution as to have suffered them to be taken away without opposition, or have deservedly lost their title to them by default. The despotic theory that "the king can do no wrong" can never be recognized by Americans nor its practice tolerated on American soil.

If the publication of the bogus proclamation was what it is claimed to have been, a criminal transgression of law, the offending parties should have been arrested on a warrant issued by a civil magistrate and taken before him for a hearing, been allowed an opportunity to answer, and if able establish their innocence and show that they were not guilty of the offenses charged against them. This privilege was denied, though it was soon discovered that they did not commit nor intend to commit any wrong, and that they were simply the victims of a base and fraudulent imposition. Had these papers been published in the interest of the Administration they might not have received such harsh treatment. The actually guilty party who had committed the act was soon discovered, arrested, and taken to that celebrated Government boarding-house, "Fort La Fayette," where he should be kept for the good of the country and the improvement of his morals; but I am informed he is soon to be liberated and will be once more at large, free to again play his pranks at any moment upon some unsuspecting victim. Like the fox he may lose his hair, but I doubt if, like the fox, he ever loses his tricks. He was an attendant at Beecher's church; a prominent member, nay, I believe the president of one of the numerous loyal leagues; and if true, as I am led to believe, that it is to these circumstances he will owe his speedy liberation, he will prove to have been much more fortunate than other and, in my opinion, much better citizens and purer patriots.

At the time of the suppression of the journals named many if not all the employees of the Independent Telegraph Company were deprived of their liberties, under circumstances, if possible, more to be regretted by the people. These men were incarcerated in a dungeon upon a mere suspicion that possibly they could have been guilty of transmitting this notorious bogus proclamation over the wires of the company in whose employ they were. Their innocence was shortly after established beyond even a shadow of a doubt, and had to be admitted by the very parties who, under color of authority, so ruthlessly deprived them of their liberties. No amends can be made for the injury done by such unauthorized assumption and exercise of arbitrary power, and it should, therefore, not be allowed to pass unnoticed, but be properly rebuked, and receive at least the merited indignation of every lover of freedom, and of all those who have any regard for the fundamental law and the observance of its mandates.

The placing of a military guard over the property of the company and depriving them of its use for the time being, is yet another act done without authority and in clear violation of the Constitution. It may not be as deplorable in its results; but that does not justify it nevertheless. The pecuniary loss occasioned by these unlawful proceedings I admit can be restored, but nothing can be done to blot them out. I am informed that it is the intention to give the company some of the Government patronage hitherto exclusively bestowed upon their rivals in business. But notwithstanding all this, what a sad page the recital of these wrongs will fill in the history of our country.

Let us not, for Heaven's sake, tamper with the Constitution. We have a work of more importance to perform; let us try and do it; yes, do it manfully, and not hesitate; let us see that the Constitution is respected in future; let us insist upon the proper enforcement of its provisions at all times and in all places, high or low; and let us not be deterred from inflicting condign punishment upon him who has the presumption to dare to violate or disregard it.

Let us talk no more about amending the Constitution to attempt to free the negroes. Are we not warned by the signs of the times, lest in so doing we may not only lay the foundation for enslaving the white people of this country, but of the whole American continent beyond redemption and for all time to come?

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that on no occasion when the purposes of those administering the Government have seemed to them to demand it, have they hesitated to infringe upon and disregard the Constitution. Not only by their acts, but in numberless instances by the teachings of those who are recognized as expounders and exponents of their views, have they asserted that where the Constitution stood in the way of the carrying into effect of their policy the Constitution must give way. This is the doctrine daily preached by that pulpit politician, Henry Ward Beecher, and the worthies who affiliate with him in political sentiment and action. And no one will question that they are the very apostles of the political faith of the partisans in power. This same Mr. Beecher, in 1863, said in Plymouth church in speaking of the Constitution, "I know it is said that the President is not the Government. What!" he exclaimed, "a sheep-skin parchment a Government!" doubtless presuming the assemblage to be in unison with him in sentiment. Why, sir, this is as much a substitution of the mere will of the Administration in place of the written law as the most arbitrary despot in history has ever dared to exercise.

It was for no more daring assertion of kingly prerogative and usurpation of power that Charles I of England lost his head upon the scaffold. Louis XIV of France, when he arrogantly declared, "The State—I am the State," and acted upon that declaration, scarcely went further than this new doctrine, which boldly announces that the Constitution may be violated upon the pretext that, in the opinion of the President, it is necessary to do so to preserve the Union. Louis had the Bastille, in which by a summary process, secretly and without trial, those who dared to criticize or oppose his policy were incarcerated. The Administration have Fort La Fayette in which, for no greater offenses, American citizens have been subjected to similar treatment. History, we are told, repeats itself; and the parallel I have cited would seem to be an illustration of the truth of the saying. Let those having charge of the Government beware that the parallel is not carried still further. Louis Philippe restrained the freedom of the French press, and went so far as to attempt to prohibit the right of the citizens peacefully to assemble in public meeting, and the result was that he was forced to fly the country, not disguised in a long military cloak and Scotch cap, it is true, but in the loose blouse and overalls of a Parisian hod-carrier. Let the Administration, then, I repeat, be warned in time, for there are limits beyond which it is not safe to trench upon the rights even of a people so patient as those of the United States have shown themselves to be.

Already the indignant mutterings of the people at the repeated gross violation of freedom of speech and discussion are to be heard coming up in tones that should give most significant warning that the limit of endurance has been reached.

Why is there this apparent hesitancy at this moment to treat the Constitution in regard to the institution of slavery as they have treated it in respect to the points to which I have referred? There was no hesitancy to violate that sacred instrument in the case of the emancipation proclamation and confiscation acts. And why this new-born delicacy and reluctance manifested in the present request to go through the form of its amendment? Is it because the old love and reverence for the Constitution once so universal among us has been resuscitated, or because the majority here repent of its many wanton violations on their part? No, sir; I can give them credit for no such reform and repentance. It is an attempt to replenish again their almost exhausted stock of political capital by creating a new issue based upon the slavery question before the people, in the hope of renewing again that agitation upon the turbulent waves of which they were swept into the power which they have so deplorably abused.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, permit me to appeal to gentlemen of the Opposition to pause and reflect. Let me remind them that the country has little to hope for the future unless the war and its speedy and successful termination be not made the primary and unceasing object of all our efforts. Let us, I beseech you, thus occupy our attention, and leave this carping about constitutional amendments and other measures of like character to be disputed about and disposed of hereafter. Is not the war still the question of all questions pressing upon our consideration? Alas! no one can deny it. Let our earnest effort then be to unite in the endeavor to secure an early and honorable termination thereof. Above all let us not be led astray by a desire for mere partisan success, and thus, through party strife, place additional barriers in the way of the consummation that our people so fervently desire. Let our aim be to restore the country to its former happy condition; but, if unsuccessful, let us at least maintain our great charter inviolate. Let us heed the lesson which history teaches us, that it is wisest always to leave well enough alone.

Mr. SHANNON obtained the floor.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. STEELE, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 486) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Idaho," approved March 3, 1863; and an act (H. R. No. 504) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the marine hospital and grounds at Chicago, Illinois, and to purchase a new site and build a new hospital; when the Speaker signed the same.

The hour of five o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, the Indian appropriation bill, returned from the Senate with amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for an order to have printed some amendments which I propose to offer to the bill of the House (No. 515) to provide ways and means for the support of the Government.

There being no objection, the order to print was made.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.

The House then resumed the consideration of the joint resolution of the Senate proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States, on which the gentleman from California [Mr. SHANNON] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. With the permission of the gentleman from California I desire to present an amendment to the resolution, which I shall offer at the proper time.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add to the resolution the following:

Provided, That this article shall not apply to the States of Kentucky, Missouri, Delaware, and Maryland until after the expiration of ten years from the time the same shall be ratified.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask consent to print an argument on this subject which I am unable to deliver.

There was no objection, and leave was granted. [The speech will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. SHANNON. Before proceeding with my remarks, I desire to say that I have given my friend from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] half of my time. He is a new member, and was not aware that he would have an opportunity to speak until late this evening, and could not prepare his remarks before to-morrow morning. I trust, therefore, that under these circumstances he will be permitted to occupy half of my time to-morrow instead of this evening.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am not addicted to boring this House with set speeches, and nothing save the deep conviction I feel of the importance of the question now pending would induce me on this occasion to occupy time in these closing days of the session. But, sir, I would not do justice to the constituency I represent were I not to place upon the record my protest and their protest against this rebellion and its unholy cause.

It will not, I trust, be necessary in this, the fourth year of our struggle, to press upon this House proof that slavery is alone responsible for this war. No man who has read carefully the history of the past eighty years, whatever may be his political bias, will, I think, differ with this opinion. It is now our province to inquire whether that curse can be perpetuated with safety to American freedom and national unity, and if we find that it cannot, it will then become our duty to see to it that for the future it shall not exist as an element of disruption and disintegration in our midst.

Sir, the apothegm "liberty regulated by law" expresses my idea of the spirit of American institutions. It is that condition of the people wherein each is at liberty to regulate his own domestic affairs according to his own judgment or caprice, only being careful that those laws which protect the rights of his neighbor from infringement must not be violated. Slavery is inconsistent with this condition; it makes the many subject to the few, makes the laborer the mere tool of the capitalist, and centralizes the political power of the nation. Yet, sir, this centralization is not such as that which gave Russia her solidity and despotic greatness; it is that cheaper article from which "petty lords and feudal despots" spring. It draws around the slave-owning nabob all the petty trappings of the feudal system, and does not hesitate to assume like political powers. Its slaves are numbered as people to be represented, yet considered before the law as soulless beasts of burden. The man who owns five hundred slaves figures in the tables of representation as the equal of three hundred non-slaveholders. In plain Saxon, Mr. Speaker, the half-witted heir to a plantation stocked with five hundred negroes, located in a slave State, has just the same voice in this Hall as have three hundred of your constituency, even though my friends on the opposite side should move into your district.

Much was said a few years ago on this floor and elsewhere about higher law, and men were branded with every opprobrious epithet who believed that slavery should be amenable to a law higher than constitutions or human enactments. Sir, the statesman of the North was not responsible for that doctrine; the Commonwealth of Kentucky has adopted it as a part of her organic act.

The constitution of that State, adopted in 1850, contains this remarkable sentence:

"That the right of property is before and higher than any constitutional sanction; that the right of the owner of a slave to such slave and its increase is the same, and as inviolable, as the right of the owner of any other property whatever."

Now, sir, any gentleman who will turn to article thirteen, section three, of that instrument will see that I do not misquote the people of Kentucky when I assert that with them slavery assumes to exist by a "higher law" than the constitutions of our fathers. "He that is not for us is against us." Slavery is by its own declarations in antagonism to our Constitution, and for that reason, if for no other, I would oppose its continuance.

Sir, slavery rolls back the car of civilization, and brings us once more to the feudal age, giving us that system with all of its iniquities, and yet without its claims to respectability. Can such a system be legitimate fruit growing upon the tree of liberty planted by our patriot fathers and watered by their blood? Is it not rather a poisonous parasite which clings to the sides of the tree, sucking up its sap, smothering its foliage, and sure in the end to destroy it? For my own part I could never understand why the owner of slaves should be entitled to more political weight than the man who earns his daily bread by his daily toil.

I conceive, sir, that that nation is greatest the largest proportion of whose people are educated, possessed of the comforts of life, and are endowed with citizenship. Let the voting masses of any country be composed of an independent yeomanry the majority of whom are freeholders of moderate yet sufficient estate, let them be fairly schooled, intelligent, each one bearing a fair share of the responsibilities of the Government, and that nation will be healthy; more, sir, it will be great in a nobler sense than Rome was great.

Small farms, small towns, manufacturing communities and villages, rather than cities or large estates, are among the conditions of true national greatness. To each of these slavery is in antagonism. It revels in extensive plantations, seeks to deprive those who are not citizens of education, independence, and the comforts of life, and by increasing the proportion of slaves reduces the number of its citizens to the smallest possible point. With it the statesmanship that labors to secure "the greatest good to the greatest number" is inverted, and the greatest good to the smallest number is substituted.

Slavery and barbarism are identical. There was no enormity perpetrated in the darkest age or among the rudest people which it does not sanction. Every form of incest is common in this, that assumes to be a paternal relation. Even polygamy is degraded by it to promiscuous prostitution. Now, sir, I love the white race too well willingly to see their blood miscegenating with the African, and must protest against any institution, however patriarchal, under which such things are profitable, and too generally, on that account, called respectable.

It has been asserted, and even in some cases by divines otherwise respectable, that this thing, slavery, was of divine origin. I shall not stop, nor have I patience, to discuss those texts in holy writ which are said to favor this view, but shall content myself with remembering the one great test by which the divinity of all doctrines must be weighed: "By their fruits ye shall know them." Who will dare make, in this enlightened age, the assertion that the fruits of slavery are divine? What divinity, pray, in that condition of affairs where men and women are compelled to labor illy fed, more illy clothed, and unpaid, to the end that one, no better before God, should live in ease and without labor? What divinity in whipping women for protesting when their virtue is assailed? What divinity in tearing from the mother's arms the sucking child, and selling them to different and distant owners? Where is there one fruit of this tree that any man will dare to call divine?

Mr. Speaker, I have no respect for clergymen who so far forget the sacredness of their high calling as to give utterance to such a dogma. The man who preaches such stuff and believes it, if there is one such, I cannot help looking upon as a fool; the more intelligent the man who gives it utterance, the less do I respect him; for a fool may be pitied, a hypocrite must be despised. Slavery divine, indeed! Is its divinity attested by its unbridled licentiousness, or by its degradation of labor; by its destruction of every family tie, or its prostitution of both races in prohibiting its victims from acquiring that knowledge which would enable them to read God's holy word?

Where, then, are the fruits of its growing which proclaim it as emanating from on high? Shame on the blasphemy which would saddle such an accursed institution upon the God of love and mercy! Man could heap no greater contumely upon his Maker than to attribute so unholy a thing to Heaven.

But, sir, some of these learned churchmen who find it profitable to advocate the divinity of slavery may conceive that this tithish rebellion is a bud of hope suggestive of a coming confederacy that shall prove to be a divine fruitage. Perhaps, sir, the grand dream of a confederacy whose citizens should be above the vulgar necessity of toil, and who should, every man of them, luxuriate in the enjoyment of a fat office, or rejoice in the possession of a princely revenue, would prove the disease which gave birth to the utopian dream, as being born of Heaven.

A. H. Stephens declared that the confederacy had slavery for its corner-stone. Mad brains had conceived the idea that a nation could be builded up all of whose citizens—not all of its people—should be free gentlemen and ladies, free not only to act as their own refined instincts might dictate in their intercourse with each other, but the male portion, at least, free to follow those same instincts into the descending cycle where the dusky damsels who are an integral part of this corner-stone might pander to their laziness and lust. It was to be a government whose citizens should not degrade themselves with the vulgar cares of life; they were to leave such things to their slaves, and they rule. Some would be soldiers, that is, wear the shoulder-straps; some would fill the various official positions of civil government; others would condescend to grace the various liberal professions by their presence. There should be no non-producers who were not slaves in fact, no producers among the governing class. The poor white man should be made a common soldier, a sailor, a petty officer, or a patrolman, whose duty it should be to keep the slave population in proper subjection. For, Mr. Speaker, it is a fact which those who believe slavery divine and the normal condition of the black man must wonder at, that these so-called happy slaves have so poor an appreciation of the joys of their condition as to be constantly pining for freedom to that extent that they will skedaddle from their comfortable quarters to seek refuge among the abolition barbarians of the frigid North whenever they chance upon an opportunity, and instances are not wanting where they have even risen upon their kind and indulgent masters and struck with terrible courage for that liberty so sweet to all men. The poor whites, however, were to protect their wealthy neighbors from all such terrible contingencies. This employment of the poor white would leave no poor idle, hence no dangerous class in the community; it would all be absorbed and its interest made identical with the interest of the wealthy class. The conditions of master and slave were alone to exist, the third class being a mere adjunct of the latter.

This institution necessarily establishes three conditions of society where it prevails: the master, the slave, and that most degraded condition of all, the middle-man, or the poor white trash, whose vocation is pander and pimp to the vices of both master and slave, and ultimately dependent on both, having no recognized condition, and enjoying none of the privileges of the governing or governed class, but an outcast from both and despised by both.

Now let it never be forgotten that our mission also is to elevate and disenthral that most injured and dependent class of our fellow white men from their downtrodden and degraded condition, that they too may be men, and enjoy the independence and rights of manhood. And, Mr. Speaker, that Utopia was much nearer its realization three years ago than most of us dreamed. Why, sir, subsisted by these slaves, every well man among the citizens of the slave States has been able to become a soldier. In the North two thirds of the able-bodied men are required in the production of food and all those articles required for the subsistence of our wives, our children, and our armies.

Our enemies leave all this work to the slaves, and the slaves are all productive; male and female, old and young, all go into the field. The planter and producer is not, as with us, limited to the number of able-bodied men upon the plantation. With him a woman is a full hand. She does, and is expected to do, the same work with the men. Little children are not required to attend school, as school bills for colored children form no part of the plantation expenses. The little fellows of six summers are quarter hands, at twelve are required to do half the work of a man, and at sixteen are full hands. Decrepit and tender youth alike are made to produce subsistence for the armies and the people of the South. It is this system which calls out all the bone and sinew of the South in aid of their cause which has made the once celebrated anaconda system of warfare a failure. Sir, all the cries of starvation we have imagined ourselves to be hearing from our "erring brethren" have been but the cries wrung from the poor creatures engaged in gathering their abundant harvests. And unless those cries are heard and heeded by this Government we can never hope to succeed in crushing the rebellion, and never ought to. We must deprive them of their producers; we must by our action in this Hall demoralize every slave left beyond the reach of our armies by guarantying to him his freedom beyond contingency; for, depend upon it, the action we take upon this bill will be known to every black man and woman in the South in a very short time.

In 1860 a period was reached which had been predicted by very many of the founders of the Republic, and which had been foreseen by that advocate of State rights, Thomas Jefferson. It was a period in which was to be solved a problem of vital importance to the American people. Jefferson wrote in 1798 that the State and General Governments were "coördinate departments of one simple and integral whole;" and in a letter to one of his friends said, "The enlightened statesman, therefore, will endeavor to preserve the weight and influence of every part, as too much given to any member of it would destroy the general equilibrium." And to another friend he expressed the fear that "a conflict would arise between State rights upon the one hand and Federal rights upon the other, the one encroaching upon the other to that extent as to produce a collision." Sir, that collision has come, and now we must decide for ourselves and for those who come after us whether the one or the other shall be maintained; whether the Republic as a whole is worth more than a system of petty nations, each independent of the other, and each powerless to protect its citizens from attacks from without or dissensions within.

The idea of a confederation of States had been tried and the experiment found not worth repeating; hence, on the formation of the present Constitution, it had been decided to "form a more perfect Union" by the action of the people of the States themselves, through their delegates to the Convention. That Convention represented the people of the several States, and their action was afterwards indorsed by a vote of the people of the several States. Sir, the people, acting through that Convention, ordained that this Government should have power to declare war, make peace, regulate the currency, and be in fact a supreme Government, "a more perfect Union;" one in which the people of the several States could find repose undisturbed by foreign attacks, or the machination of factionists within their own borders. The men of 1860, swelled up with the lust of slavery and blinded by its specious reasonings in favor of what it was pleased to call the rights of the States, unfortunately have proved too weak, too unpatriotic, to maintain unsullied the inheritance of freedom left them by their sires. To these men the doctrine of State rights was a cry under which slavery with all its attendant evils was to be fostered.

Slavery had been suffered to remain in our system at first by men who were anxiously counting the days, the time, when it could be abolished, as they believed, without peril to the country. They argued that it was weak, and the sense of justice which they believed was inborn in the American heart would soon lead to its final and utter abolition. In fact, our fathers were abolitionists. A provision was incorporated into the Constitution by which no new additions were to be made to the stock of slaves then in the country, and it was believed that gradually and without a jar to the Federal system it would become extinct. Our fathers were mistaken. Slavery was not waning. Every year but added strength and gave vigor to the accursed tree, and eighty years after it is found to have grown so much as to number more victims than was the entire population of the Republic in the days of the Revolution. Waning, indeed! Why, sir, to-day it claims more territory than our fathers aspired to possess for the whole nation, and fights this war to enable it to wrench more domain from the grasp of freedom. This mistake, leaving to the people of the several States the right and authority to establish and regulate the crime of human slavery, has well-nigh proved a vital one. It is not necessary to trace the progress of the slave power. Every page of our nation's history records it. Every school-boy is familiar with it. From the purchase of Louisiana and from the passage of the Missouri compromise to the breaking out of the rebellion, every year's legislation embodied some new concession to slavery, and the pill was always labeled "compromise." It was continually making aggressions upon freedom, and still claiming that it was only securing to itself rights guarantied to it by the Constitution.

Assuming that the Government was a partnership of the States, the adherents of slavery finally attempted to dissolve it unless the reins of power were delivered into their hands. It would rule, sir, or it would ruin. The issue, then, was reduced to this: we must have the Union with the Government in the hands of the slave oligarchy or submit to its dissolution. We consented to neither, but trusting to the God of battles and the patriotism of our people we dared the fight, and as sure as Heaven is just we will succeed.

Now, sir, what is this institution of slavery that has sought to assume the reins of Government in this land of freedom? What is slavery, sir? It is "the sum total of all villainies." It is the destroyer of every virtue, public as well as private, because it encourages promiscuous and unbridled licentiousness, and renders null the marriage relation. It is the enemy of all religion, inasmuch as it has caused to be enacted in every slave State laws making it a felony to teach men and women whose skins are black to read even the Bible, and places restrictions about their assembling themselves together to worship God. It destroys all thrift, energy, and good citizenship among the ruling classes, teaching them to depend upon the labor of others for support when God has ordained to man that by the sweat of his brow he should eat his bread. Slavery is paganism refined, brutality vitiated, dishonesty corrupted; and, sir, we are asked to retain this curse, to protect it after it has corrupted our sons, dishonored our daughters, subverted our institutions, and shed rivers of the best blood of our countrymen.

Sir, the time has passed for concessions to the slave power. Slavery has risked all to gain all, and now it must abide by the cast of its own die; and to us there is but one issue, dissolution and a recognition of the confederacy, or the utter and immediate abolition of slavery. There is now no middle ground. I believe now that since the days of Calhoun there has never been a middle ground. We have tried tenderness long enough. For eighty years we have been compromising; we have coaxed and petted; it has availed us nothing. We have given the South the high places in our national synagogue, our kindness has never faltered, but, sir, it has been our ruin. We said to the South, we will not interfere with your pet snake while you keep it in the den you have provided for it; we will not fight your nefarious institution so long as you keep it at home. Slavery shall not be interfered with in any State where by local law it exists. We would even permit the snake to crawl into and establish for itself a den in Territories common to both; but because we insisted that it should not invade with its slime our own homes and take to itself every foot of the common inheritance it has rebelled. Why, sir, even as late as 1860 we of the North were a nation of compromisers, and after the ordinances of secession had been passed in several States, it is a question whether we would not have been willing to accede to all the demands of the South. Even the old abolition party had men in its ranks who were willing to make some arrangement by which the widening breach might be bridged.

Mr. Speaker, at that time few men in the North were found so radical as to be unwilling to compromise upon some basis, and a still smaller number who would insist upon no terms short of full emancipation.

But, sir, as the history of the past might have warned us, every pacific overture was rejected, and no alternative was left to the freemen of the North but war. How sternly that war has been prosecuted upon both sides history will bear testimony. And shall we be willing to end the struggle now until sufficient guarantees are secured that our people and their successors shall live for all future time without a constant fear that the smothered flame shall again leap forth and burn with tenfold fury? No, sir, we must end this war now, end it for all coming time; and we can only end it as we desire by so amending our organic act that slavery can never again be an element of discord among our people. Members upon this floor who fear that their constituency will not sustain them in voting for this measure should remember that they have a constituency coming after those whom they now represent, a constituency who will hold them to a more strict account of their stewardship than will the partial friends of to-day, and the execrations of that constituency will be heaped upon the man who now hesitates to aid in wiping out this stain and curse that has disgraced us so long. We want no timid men now. Our brothers and sons have poured out their blood upon fields made memorable by their bravery, and shall fear that some of us will not be returned to seats in this House lead us to hesitate in doing justice to our country in this the crisis of her destiny?

Mr. Speaker, there can be no reunion with slavery—the day when such a thing was possible has passed. Sir, let us for one moment try to realize such a reunion. The first thing to be done under such a condition would be to enforce the fugitive slave law. But, sir, thousands of the slaves we would be called upon to return would be soldiers in the Union Army, men who had been engaged in fighting our battles. Our faith as a people is pledged to those men for freedom. They would be the wives, sisters, mothers and daughters of soldiers, and dare we submit to the rendition of that class? The fugitives who have followed our armies from the plantations of the South have been the only loyal men and women it found in its track, and shall we be asked in the day of our triumph to punish these our friends with one hand while with the other we reward the red-handed assassins who have endeavored to strike down our liberties? Sir, I can never bring myself calmly to contemplate the possibility of a reunion with the South which shall tolerate the further existence of slavery, much less one that shall restore it to its former assumed privileges. No, sir, we must either abolish slavery, or consent to see the Union of our fathers destroyed, its hitherto proud name become a hissing and a reproach, and its people no longer free.

Sir, there is but one compensation we can render to this country for the terrible sacrifices she has been called upon to endure in this struggle; that compensation is the entire abolition of the curse of slavery; otherwise the blood of our countrymen is shed in vain. We have seen it lurking and rankling in the veins of our body-politic for eighty years, until it has culminated at last in this terrible war, the most gigantic, and, upon the part of the South, the most brutal the world ever saw. Shall we now be willing to give it a new lease of power, new strength to renew its attacks? No, sir, we cannot, we dare not consent to such a thing. Were we to so far forget the lessons of the past as to entertain so base a proposition, we would be disgraced in our own sight and in the eyes of the world and of God.

But, sir, if we are to make emancipation effective and adequate to our national disease, we must adopt it boldly, resolutely, and at once. We must not only emancipate the slaves in the seceded States, but we must include the slaves of the border States, leaving no root of the accursed tree to spring up for the future to the peril of the country.

And, sir, the measure now pending seems to me to be the only one adequate to the emergency.

Mr. MARCY. Mr. Speaker, I have sought this opportunity to address the House for the purpose of expressing some general views on the state of the country. In the expression of my sentiments I shall not be sustained with the hope that my counsels will be heeded by the Administration party in power in this House, but if my remarks go out to the country, it is more probable that the righteous aversion existing in the heart of the people to this Administration may receive strength. The foundations on which our national liberty rests were deliberately settled by the illustrious statesmen of the Revolution; everything that was felt to be a necessity for a free people was carefully provided for; civil and religious liberty was surrounded with safeguards; the cause and the Government which the heroes of the Revolution fought for received the blessings of Heaven; the Constitution was a perfect work, and so long as the Administration of the Government under it was in the hands of the Democratic party, so long did it meet the wants of the whole country, but the moment the great disloyal abolition party assumed to direct the affairs of the nation, from that moment the safeguards of liberty were broken down, the foundations of the nation's strength were undermined, time-honored landmarks were blotted out, the purity and sacredness of the ballot-box were violated, and now, emboldened by success, the Executive of the nation proclaims to a bewildered people that, as he understands his oath to support and preserve the Constitution, it calls on him to do what in his judgment is indispensable to its preservation, whether such means are constitutional and according to its letter or not.

I address myself now, Mr. Speaker, to the consideration of the President's position as a plain, honest man, seeking for what is the best for the whole country, and as a man free from all prejudices, free from fanaticisms, and free from the mortal sin of ever having by word or deed promoted and fostered hatred between the two sections of the country. When visiting the splendid agricultural regions of the South, and doing business there, and when at home amid the busy marts of New England industry, I have invariably cherished one and the same national sentiment. Fraternity and equality are the guides of all true Americans. The Constitution in plain and unmistakable terms—so plain that a wayfarer man though a fool and a joker need not err therein—defines and limits the President's use of means and measures in the exercise of his duty in its protection and defense. His oath confines him to the use of the means which the Constitution provides. When he knowingly violates the sacred instrument, instead of either protecting or defending it, he destroys it; he commits a high crime against the American people, and registers in heaven the act of his perjury; and all his aids and accessories to the crime in this Congress, and all that portion of the wicked, disloyal abolition party who sustain the President in his infractions on the Constitution, are joint heirs with him to the inheritance of eternal infamy.

If the President has the right to overleap, or, in the language of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] "override" the Constitution and to substitute his own views for the written law of the land, he can justify himself by showing wherein the Constitution gives him that right. He says he does it to preserve the nation. How would you like a physician to preserve your life by cutting your heart out; the Constitution is the heart of the nation. Oaths are of no consequence when those who take them are allowed discretion as to when and for what purposes they can be violated. In time of peace the Constitution cannot become obsolete. In time of war, for still more obvious reasons, it cannot be laid aside. It is a living code; no part of it can die; every line is operative everywhere throughout the country, and at all times. It is binding on every American, and he who has once sworn to support it and then perjures himself, he is a traitor.

We are not to-day, Mr. Speaker, where my voice can reach the erring and misguided South; if we were I should entreat them to return to their allegiance, to come back within the fold of the Union and once more cross their hands in friendship with us. If they would listen, the great loyal Democratic party would guaranty to them the pure administration of the law of the land, they should enjoy without further molestation their full and equitable rights under the Constitution. If the disloyal abolition party would humble itself in dust and ashes, and purge itself from its monstrous iniquities and wash away the stains which disfigure its infamous brow, and swear that from this time henceforth and forever it would never seek to interfere with the administration and regulation of the internal police of the southern States or of any State, and act with the Democratic party, peace would once more return to bless the land and to seal with the benediction of divine love the nuptials of a reunited country. Shall we see that glorious day? The abolition party do not wish to have the Union restored. I challenge any one of them to rise in his seat and say that he is in favor of the Union as it was and the Constitution as it is. Whenever such a blessing is hoped and prayed for they universally deride and mock the sentiment; all expressions for the Union as it was turn to ashes on their lips.

At the time the Constitution was adopted it saved us from impending anarchy and sought to secure liberty to posterity. But the history of this Republic, like that of all others, has taught us that virtue among the rulers and the people can alone preserve and protect the forms of Government. The power of minute local administration was given to each State. It was made a very prominent feature; the people of each State were allowed to make their own laws, to govern their own institutions. From 1792 to 1860 the country for the greater part of the time was under Democratic rule. It ascended in the scale of nations to the first rank, and was the equal of the four great Powers of the earth; the American people became the pride and boast of the world. All this was accomplished because the great code between the States was respected. The party in power now seem as ready to overthrow this glorious Constitution as our fathers were to shed their blood to obtain it. Our fathers broke the yoke of tyranny, and a degenerate portion of their sons are ready to place their necks in it again.

Why are they ready to resume it, Mr. Speaker? When for a moment reason is allowed to resume its sway the question is easily answered. We are engaged in putting down a great rebellion. That was the ostensible purpose of the war. Whether it has degenerated into a crusade to overthrow the institution of slavery at the expense of all the available blood and treasure of the North is an open question; but I asked the question, why does a portion of the country seem ready to put on the yoke of despotism? It is because they meekly sit by and see established forms of Government swept away, and, either in their ignorance or in their willingness to see the Government destroyed, aid and abet the nefarious crime. Nothing can be more unfortunate in any country than the necessity or the rashness which blots out an established constitution before a substitute is prepared. We hear every day now, in addition to open infractions of the Constitution, of schemes for a different form of Government. Change it in the slightest manner and the form of Government is changed. If the Constitution should be altered to suit the infractions that have been made on it, what would become of us while the change was going on? How many fanatical theorists, filled with only the idea of the black man, would come forward and obtrude their ill-digested notions upon the public? Despotism and its minions would lie in wait to take advantage of the hazards by which the Constitution would be surrounded. Breaking the Constitution is like breaking the golden cord: when once the mischief is done you cannot expect it to be repaired; rulers and people are alike unrestrained by authority; but while there is enough of the Constitution left to keep a remembrance of what it was, I shall not lose all confidence that its condition will be beyond hope when it again falls into the hands and care of the loyal Democratic party.

Mr. Speaker, as I proceed in my remarks I shall have occasion to speak more particularly of some of the infractions of the Constitution. I have said so much in a general way for the purpose of expressing to this House the absolute convictions of my constituents as well as my own, that by disregarding constitutional obligations the warning admonition of Washington, and the wise counsels of all the most eminent patriots of the land, past and present, the country has been involved in the horrors of a terrible and devastating civil war. My constituents, with me, believe that the Constitution, as framed by the fathers of our country, is sufficient for all emergencies, and we utterly repudiate the doctrine that in time of war, or at any time, it can be suspended or enlarged in its powers beyond the letter and true meaning of that sacred instrument. It is to us, as it was to our fathers, the only hope of a perfect Union, to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, and if observed in its letter and spirit is amply sufficient to secure to us, as it did to them, these inestimable blessings. And as a Representative in Congress, I am instructed by my constituents to unite with all true Union men everywhere in the support of the Federal Government, and to seek to preserve the Constitution as it is and to restore the Union as it was.

Mr. Speaker, the patriotic and eloquent gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] has told us how, under its present custodians, the Constitution has been used to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty. The remembrance of that speech must still be fresh in the minds of the guilty party who have murdered the Constitution by piecemeal. My constituency do not believe in war as a remedy for the tremendous evil with which our country is afflicted. They regard the history of the three years of the immediate past as one of mourning, shame, and sorrow, and humiliation; they look upon it as a fratricidal strife which wise statesmanship might have avoided; they look upon the terrible and frightful slaughter as so many lives uselessly sacrificed; they think the mourning which the fate of war has carried to so many homes a dear price to pay for the military glory we have won; they look upon the immense amount of property which has been destroyed as a reckless and wanton waste; they assume the gigantic load of taxes which has been placed upon their shoulders with a spirit of heroism that may be equal to the task, but praying that they may be spared additional weight; they look upon the mighty pyramid of our national debt and its prospective increase, and cry out, "Not unto the third and fourth generation shall our children suffer for their fathers' sins, but all our posterity, throughout all the coming ages of the endurance of this nation, must feel the burden of heavy taxation to pay even its interest." My constituents are a thinking, reasoning people. They bow down to no idols and worship no false gods; their politics consists of pure Democracy, and their religion of patriotism and devotion to the whole country. They do not believe that the black man is equal to the white. They are not imbued either with any false philanthropy or false notions concerning the black man's true position. They would not disturb the equilibrium of States and plunge the country into a desolating war on the negro's account, but would leave each State to regulate its own internal affairs as guarantied by the Constitution. If there is sin in slavery, they would leave it wholly to the conscience of the southern people and to their God.

By what principle of right can any man justify the breaking up of our form of government to secure freedom to the slaves? Gentlemen on the other side, do not disguise your true position, do not deceive yourselves any longer; look into the mirror of present events and see the reflection of your own image; if it is not more frightful than any ever seen in Babylon, and more terrible than the apocalyptic Beast, then I have not seen the colossal and iniquitous image in its true light. "Better a thousand times the old Union as it was should perish and rebellion triumph than ever to witness its restoration," is the wicked sentiment of the Republican party. It is fastened on them like the poisoned shirt of Nessus. Could the war stop to-morrow by the restoration of the Union as it was, how many votes could the measure get from gentlemen who charge this side of the House with disloyalty? Could the war stop to-morrow by the resurrection of the hopeless slain to return to the bosom of their families, and to bless with their presence the bereaved and stricken mourners, how many disloyal and crazy fanatics would give up their schemes for their loved negro to help on such a bright and glorious day? Not one, Mr. Speaker; in my judgment, not one; if there be any such who would, let him speak for himself.

Have I offended? But, gentlemen, your career is fast drawing to a close. God, in His mercy, will not impose upon the free American people another four years of your dreadful misrule; four years in the fiery furnace, four years groping in the valley and shadow of death, four years of the blind leading the blind, four years amid the sulphurous flames of the pit that is bottomless, I think will satisfy even divine vengeance; and when the administration of the Government passes into the hands of the conservative party, our abolition friends must emigrate to the place the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] so often mentions, Abyssinia, and into the heart of Africa, or be content with the four years of miscegenetic beatitude they have so hugely enjoyed. The Government instituted for white men will again become popular. The bleeding Treasury will be rescued from the grasp of relentless speculators, and will become virtuous too; and the fairy tales that render it so disreputable will cease to exist.

I approach now, sir, the consideration of two or three of the subjects which have claimed much of the attention of the country, and done much to excite that deep and overwhelming spirit of opposition to the Administration which is so manifest in all the States. One of the resolutions, sir, passed at the convention which nominated me for Congress was as follows:

"Resolved, That the arbitrary arrest and imprisonment of citizens for political offenses, and the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus in loyal States, are gross violations of our national and State constitutions, and tyrannical infractions of the rights and liberties of American citizens, which cannot be tolerated in a free country; and that the people cannot, and will not, allow the freedom of speech and of the press, that great safeguard of civil liberty, to be put down by unwarranted and despotic exercise of power from whatever source."

Among the articles of our present faith we find the following: we do not believe the Administration is engaged exclusively in putting down the rebellion; we believe it is employing our vast armies to sustain acts which have the strongest tendency to overthrow the framework of our Government. We believe the Army has been used in loyal States to carry elections, and, above all, Mr. Speaker, how was it in Florida for the purpose of getting up a bogus State government in favor of the President, and how has the Army been used by Banks for the purpose of enriching cotton speculators? Are these things fresh in the minds of Republicans, or are they not? Are the immense losses in the material of war and the lives of thousands uselessly sacrificed to Moloch and Mammon passed forgotten into the history of your nameless crimes? The true purpose of the people in furnishing the sinews of war is comprehensively stated in a general order issued by General McClellan, August 9, 1862. The order is as follows:

"The general commanding takes this occasion to remind the officers and soldiers of this army that we are engaged in supporting the Constitution and laws of the United States, and in suppressing rebellion against their authority; that we are not engaged in a war of rapine, revenge, or subjugation; that this is not a contest against populations, but against armed forces and political organizations; that it is a struggle carried on within the United States, and should be conducted by us upon the highest principles known to Christian civilization."

But I pass on to the resolution first quoted. I know not how many times Mr. Seward has rung his bell since he has been prime minister, and consequently I know not how many citizens have been unceremoniously locked up in military dungeons without an opportunity of trial by a jury of their countrymen; but we do know the number is legion, and that in every instance it was done in absolute violation of the established law of the land. No special pleading can convince us to the contrary; when the people are robbed of their liberties they know it. Among the dearest of their rights is that of trial by jury. The people will not be trifled with any longer; the great constitutional arguments on this subject I leave for the able lawyers on this side of the House to discuss. I simply state the broad facts as stated by the Constitution and as they are understood by the people at large, who are now awaking to a sense of their true condition.

The President has had a majority of both Houses of Congress in his favor; hence whatever radical measure he has wished to carry has been accomplished without the slightest difficulty. The direct and only object of a majority of these measures has been to secure a firm foothold for approaching despotism, coming on with equal steps with every unconstitutional act. Is it any exaggeration to assert that the military prisons have been filled with citizens from the loyal States who are political opponents of this Administration, and have they not, in their wretchedness, become prematurely old, and has not the affliction with many of them been so great as to lead to suicide and to the lunatic asylum? After they have been confined for many weary months, vainly seeking for the cause of their arrest and for a trial, have they not been released without one, or even so much as an excuse given for the horrible outrage inflicted upon them? Any man of influence known to be opposed to this Administration is in danger all the time of having his most sacred rights violated, of being torn from the bosom of his family and incarcerated in a loathsome dungeon. The whole country is filled with spies and eavesdroppers to report to the Bakers whatever can be tortured into anything like opposition to the tyranny seeking to plant itself upon a throne. By the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus the Government officials are enabled to seize and imprison any offensive person. How long will such a state of things last? Just so long as a foolish people will permit it.

My constituents understand this question, and woe be to the man who attempts among them to execute the mandates of tyrants. My friends are also in favor of free speech and a free press.

Mr. Speaker, during the ever-to-be-memorable trial of the distinguished Representative from Ohio [Mr. LONG] for words spoken in debate, I was painfully struck with the following remark from the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH], namely:

"A man is free to speak so long as he speaks for the nation; when he speaks against it he shall not, with my consent, do so with impunity on the floor of this House."

Who is to be the judge when I am speaking whether I am speaking for the nation or not—the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] or myself? Is his judgment so faultless that he can decide better than his peers what is constitutional and within the scope of legitimate debate? Has it come to this in his judgment, that he can rise and dictate what we, with "bated breath and whispering humbleness," may say? Dare he stand up in Congress and seek to lock the mouths of the Representatives of a free people whose every right is as sacred as his own? I tell the gentleman and all of his way of thinking that I shall utter upon the floor of this House whatever I wish concerning the crimes, the follies, and the outrages of this Administration; whatever I wish concerning its turpitude, its sins, and deformity. I quote from Story on the Constitution:

"In some foreign countries even to this day it is a crime to speak on any subject, religious, philosophic, or political, what is contrary to the received opinions of the Government; or even to speak upon the conduct of public men, of rulers or representatives, in terms of the strictest truth and courtesy, has been and is now deemed a scandal upon the supposed sanctity of their stations and character, subjecting the party guilty of it to the severest punishments."

The gentleman and his friends had better at once find those genial climes. They are just suited to the tastes of despots and aristocrats. But the right of free speech is a plant of indigenous growth in this country, and can not be eradicated. The freedom of the press, Mr. Speaker, receives no protection from the present guardians of the people's rights. I now ask for information: is there an instance on record where Government officials have exerted their power and authority to prevent the destruction of newspaper offices? Is there an instance on record where the strong arm of the law has been interposed and upheld by the friends of Mr. Lincoln to save newspaper property from a lawless mob? I know of none, sir, and I do not think there is one; it has seemed rather a holiday pastime than otherwise, and thought as lightly of as any other infraction of the Constitution. It has remained for the historian to refresh our memories with the fact, while comparing this country with others, that "In some countries the press has been shackled, and compelled to speak only in the timid language which the cringing courtier of the capricious inquisition should license for publication."

Sir, how well do his words apply to the state of things now in our own unhappy country. Let the people ponder well these facts before the glory of our nation is entirely gone; before it stands only as the shadow of the imperial name it once had; before it is seen only as a broken and crumbling monument of its heroic history; before Icha-bod is written all over its shattered temples.

In this hasty review I must avail myself of the privilege to notice other acts of this Administration, which have materially helped to strengthen and prolong the rebellion, and to swell the army of tax-gatherers and the processions of wretched mourners in all our streets.

On the 22d of September, 1862, the President gave notice that on the 1st of January, 1863, he should issue a proclamation of emancipation to all the slaves in the districts seeking for independence. Three months' notice was given to the southern men to prepare for the event. During this time the abolition press was in ecstasies, the rebellion was about to receive its final blow, the colored millennium was to be ushered in. Greeley, at the head of nine hundred thousand more, promised to move immediately upon the enemy's works under the influence of the Spirit of the Lord. At the tread of their conquering march the confederacy was to tremble and totter to its fall. But how have all those bright visions vanished! Time has demonstrated the wisdom of the country's true friends. That proclamation had the identical effect which statesmen foresaw. Not one single slave has been liberated thereby. Wherever the armies have penetrated slaves have been received and protected within the lines of the Federal forces. The same was the case before the proclamation was issued.

Mr. Speaker, while General McClellan was in command he received and protected every negro who came within his lines. He never refused one, and never returned one to slavery. But it was not his idea to employ the armies of the Union for the purpose of destroying their property, liberating slaves; the Army had with him a higher and holier destiny. Under his leadership his soldiers knew that the grand object of the war was to preserve the Constitution and restore the unity of the States. After the proclamation was made, instead of having the effect to fill up the depleted ranks of the Army with a million of willing troops, conscription and princely bounties was the resort. On the other hand it broke the spirit of thousands of loyal men struggling to be loyal. They saw their property about to be swept away from them at a single stroke; it may have been nothing but a weakness of theirs, but it was more than they could stand. They joined the ranks of the confederates, and interposed a line of gleaming bayonets between their property and those who would take it away; and beyond all that, it kindled into a flame seven times fiercer than ever felt before the mortal enmity of the southern heart. This may have been wise and judicious. I beg leave, however, to differ. In my judgment overreach of the Constitution to proclaim freedom to millions of blacks affords staple for the demagogue; consequently the misery and wretchedness the country endures on account of it are of no earthly account.

For an explanation of the additional burdens imposed upon the white laboring classes at the North to support this folly of follies, I refer the other side to the able and exhaustive speech of my distinguished friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Leaving the proclamation to slumber in the charnel house where, shrouded in the habiliments of death repose the brains of the Republican party, let us pass on to the act approved July 17, 1862, to seize and confiscate the property of rebels, &c. This act provides for the immediate seizure of all the estate and property, money, stocks, credits, and effects of those who were at the time of the passage of the act holding high office, civil and military; and in section six this act provides that the property of any person engaged in the rebellion shall suffer confiscation, including estates, money, stocks, and credits, unless within sixty days after the proclamation of the President, which is provided for in the act, such persons shall return to their allegiance.

On the 25th of July, 1862, the President issued his proclamation of warning to all persons liable to be affected by the act.

Nearly two years have passed, sir, since this act went into operation. In a few places and on the borders of two or three States the act of confiscation has had a practical effect; estates have been seized and confiscated; slight revenues to the Government have thereby gone into the national Treasury; a few persons have been turned out, homeless and homeless into the streets; the greed of the officers charged with the execution of the law has been partially satisfied; the radical humanitarian and utopian theorist have enjoyed the partial fulfillment of their dreams of dividing up and realizing easy profits from the large estates of the South. But, sir, if possible it gave additional incentives to the owners of landed property South to oppose with all their might the military power of the North, which alone is the only power that can enforce the provisions of the law. From these two distinguished acts of the Administration nothing but misery, bloodshed, and desolation have followed in their train; by them the war has been prolonged, millions on millions have been added to the national debt; thousands of the bravest and best of our citizen soldiery have lost their lives in consequence. In the idea of emancipation and confiscation the great and only legitimate object of the war has been lost sight of, and they have led directly to the adoption of the theories of subjugation and extermination.

The Union, as presented to the South by the abolition party, is nothing more nor less than the acceptance of a master who is to prescribe their laws and regulate their internal police.

Forcible arguments have now been put into their mouths to resist, step by step, force with force, the encroachments of an Administration which, in its blind zeal to gratify the lunacy of fanatics, throws down all constitutional barriers and leaps headlong into the whirlpool of anarchy and misrule. Time would fail me to specify one half of the radical mistakes Mr. Lincoln has made. I have no heart to go over the list; they are before the American people. The whole bill of indictments is being drawn by the accused himself. The trial of Abraham Lincoln will not prove a farce, and no packed jury, armed by bayonets, will be able to acquit him. I may reason wrong; but I believe the name of the President will go down to posterity along with the deep execrations of all who revere and love the Union as our fathers gave it to us.

Our soldiers in the field deserve and have ever received from this side of the House the warmest sympathy and support. Their own individual interests have and ever will be among our most sacred trusts. They went out to defend the flag of their country, and to bring back under the Constitution the seceded States. They have illustrated on every battle-field the valor and prowess of American arms. They could do no more. They have done enough to accomplish the true object of the war, and would have done more but for the interference of ambitious, selfish, and designing politicians.

Mr. Speaker, the flag of our country is dear to me. I have carried it all over the world, and beneath that sacred emblem of our nation's power I have in every foreign land, among civilized and uncivilized nations, realized the influence of its protection. I have never felt that it was designed for the benefit of any State or section, but that under it all were alike equal. That flag I still intend to uphold and defend. I see in it nothing to warrant oppression or commitment of crime in the sacred name of liberty. As has been well said by the able patriot from the city of New York, [Mr. Brooks,] traitors to the Constitution are those who violate it; those who depart from it are like the mariner at sea without a compass, and although the truly loyal men stand as lights all over the country to keep the ship of State away and free from the rocks and shoals whither it is drifting, our good intentions are always disregarded and often treated with contempt.

More than once, sir, I have ridden on the mountain waves of the ocean, clinging to a portion of the wreck of my noble ship; the small boat, some friendly plank or spar, has been the means of saving my life. So, sir, amid the general wreck of States, and floating about as we are on the waves of this tempestuous ocean of civil war, I will cling to the Constitution as my only hope of refuge and safety. To refuse its aid would be madness.

Mr. COFFROTH. Mr. Speaker, when I entered this Hall at the opening of this session, I had determined not to participate in any general debate. It was my intention to be a listener and not a talker. This resolve would have been faithfully kept had it not been for the extraordinary legislation that has been pressed upon the House—legislation, in my opinion, which is not only subversive of the interests of the people, but which erects an insurmountable barrier to the restoration of the Union. The resolution before us proposes to amend the Constitution, made by the patriots of the Revolution, so as to abolish slavery throughout the United States. It proposes to set free four million ignorant and debased negroes to swarm the country with pestilential effect. It is to carry out the design of the bad and wicked men whose fanatical teaching has produced the terrible bloodshed and destruction of life through which we are now passing.

Sir, we should pause before proceeding any further in this unconstitutional and censurable legislation. The mere abolition of slavery is not my cause of complaint. I care not whether slavery is retained or abolished by the people of the States in which it exists—the only rightful authority. The question to me is, has Congress a right to take from the people of the South their property; or, in other words, having no pecuniary interest therein, are we justified in freeing the slave property of others? Can we abolish slavery in the loyal State of Kentucky against her will? If this resolution should pass, and be ratified by three fourths of the States—States already free—and Kentucky refuses to ratify it, upon what principle of right or law would we be justified in taking this slave property of the people of Kentucky? Would it be less than stealing?

This legislation has a tendency not only to create discord among the people of the North, but has a power so immense the mind cannot calculate its weight in giving strength and force to the rebellion. It fulfills all the prophecies of the South concerning the North. They have been bolstering up and maintaining their Army by asserting that the people of the North intended to confiscate their homes and rob them of their slave property. The one has already been put in force by an unconstitutional enactment, and you now propose to do the other by the same process of illegality. These acts constitute the propelling power which has filled southern armies. The fanatical legislation of this Congress has been of more value to the South, in giving them large armies, than all the conscriptions they have passed or bounties they have paid. Men who were attached to the old Union, but placed under circumstances to be of little service to it, and who have been waiting with beating hearts to be again sheltered under the old flag, are now forced, not only into sympathy with the rebellion, but into hearty co-operation. They have no other resort. To remain idle now is to lose all they have. In their opinion, to sustain the rebellion retains to them their property.

If slavery is to be abolished, allow it to be done according to the principles of common justice. Allow the people in each State the inalienable right, through their legally constituted authorities, to control their own domestic institutions in their own way. This was the doctrine held by statesmen whose passions and prejudices did not blind them to a correct idea of right.

President Harrison saw the disunion purposes of the abolitionists and slavery agitators at an early day, and expressed the following opinion:

"I am, and have been, for many years, so much opposed to slavery, that I will never live in a slave State. But I believe the Constitution has given no power to the General Government to interfere in this matter, and that to have slaves or no slaves depends upon the people in each State alone. But besides the constitutional objection, I am persuaded that the obvious tendency of such interference on the part of the States which have no slaves with the property of their fellow-citizens of the others, is to produce a state of discord and jealousy, that will, in the end, prove fatal to the Union. I believe that in no other State are such wild and dangerous sentiments entertained on this subject as in Ohio."

Sir, I do not deny the right of Congress to amend the Constitution of the United States for the benefit of the people, but I do deny the right of Congress to amend the Constitution to the destruction of the right of the people to hold property. It never was intended by the framers of the Constitution, nor by any of the great men who ruled this country, that the dominant party, blinded by prejudice, should alter or amend the Constitution to the injury of the weaker section. If the North has the power to take from the South their property, it follows that if the South ever gets the power, she would have the same right to take our property, and the result would be that instead of the Constitution protecting the people it would be turned into a power to oppress them.

The Democratic party has been exerting its power to restrain legislation to its proper channel, and for this it is daily stated upon this floor and elsewhere that the Democrats are in sympathy with the rebellion. What a libel upon that great party! Its great principles, its pure devotion to the country, and its never-dying fealty to the doctrine of man's capacity for self-government, can receive these shocks of vituperation with as little effect as the mighty oak, that has planted its roots deep into the mountain side, receives the peltings of the storm. Let history speak for the Democratic party. Under its control this nation grew from thirteen penniless colonies to thirty-four mighty States. Under its control the forests, where the red man roamed unmolested, have been felled, and mighty cities have sprung up, with their spires piercing the clouds. Under its control the old road wagon had scarcely pulverized the stones of the macadamized pikes upon the mountains, until the iron horse flew with lightning speed through their bowels. It was under its control the sails of our vessels whitened every navigable stream in the world and the flag of our country protected American citizens in every clime. Under its control, when foreign nations were suffering for food, the old ocean was made to groan beneath the weight of provisions sent to a starving people. Under its control science, agriculture, and the mechanical arts became so perfect and harmonious that the Old World wondered in amazement at the scientific advancement of our people. Under its control the people of all climes and countries were invited to make this their home, where they might worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, and under their own "vine and fig-tree." It was under the control of this same Democratic party that vast and boundless territory was acquired. The great Northwest was molded by the hand of the Democracy. That beautiful country, which was once a wild and waving prairie, is now dotted with habitations as the stars dot the heavens above us, and her cattle are feeding upon a thousand hills. It was under Democratic control that "empire marched onward" until the flag of our country was placed upon the highest peaks of the Rocky mountains,

"Whose vast walls
Have pinnacled in clouds their snowy sculps,
And throned eternally in icy halls
Of cold sublimity."

Under Democratic rule the monster barriers of the Rocky mountains proved no impediment to the onward march of American civilization and constitutional government, and the adjoining valley was acquired, whose loveliness and beauty are described as rivaling the magnificence of the garden of Eden. The Democratic party not content with even all these splendid acquisitions took the "empire onward" and crossed the Sierra Nevada mountains, and planted the flag of the free upon the golden soil of California and gave us a "domain of more than imperial grandeur. Its valleys teem with unbounded fertility, and its mountains are filled with inexhaustible treasures of mineral wealth. The navigable rivers run hundreds of miles into the interior, and the coast is indented with the most capacious harbors in the world. The climate is more healthful than any other on the globe, the vegetation is more vigorous, and the products more abundant; the face of the earth is more varied, and the sky bends over it with a lovelier blue. Everything in it is made upon a scale of magnificence which a man living in such a commonplace region as ours can scarcely dream of,

"Which his eyes must see
To know how beautiful this world can be."

No political organization of any country or age can show so glorious a record, so free from blunders and crimes, and so rich in valuable achievements. The unexampled progress of the country in wealth and power, and its peaceful, prosperous, and happy condition before this war, were the result of the wise and patriotic policy of the Democratic party. Can the Democratic party in this the hour of the country's desolation forget its past history? The shouts of fifteen hundred thousand Democrats answer no. The mission of the Democracy is to save our wrecked and divided country, and, with the help of God, relying upon the justice of our cause, we will unite this distracted country in bonds so strong that future causes will never bring upon us a separation.

The man who with this record before him charges the Democratic party with disloyalty I look upon as either a madman or a knave. When the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRINNELL] uttered in debate the startling announcement that he "would rather say a thousand times let the country be divided, the South go their way, all slave, and the North all free, than see the country once more under Democratic rule," I was not surprised. The history of the gentleman from Iowa is consistent with this treasonable language. He declared in a speech he made in Iowa that he would as soon see his daughter marry a negro as a Democrat. It well becomes a man of such refined education and exquisite taste to belch forth his bitterness against the Democratic party of the country.

Looking at the great progress and power of our people, the mind naturally asks the question, what has caused the afflicting and severe troubles that hang over us; what has caused this beautiful land to be drenched in blood, and brother meet brother in deadly conflict? I will not attempt to answer this question myself, but will give the warning voice of some of the great men who lived before us. The prophecy they then made is now being literally fulfilled, and we are reaping the bitter fruits of our disobedience to their advice.

General Washington, in his Farewell Address, thus admonishes the people:

"My countrymen, grow indignant upon every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest. BEWARE OF SECTIONAL ORGANIZATIONS! of arraying the North against the South or the South against the North. In the end it will prove fatal to our liberties."

General Jackson had the reputation of "seeing through a man at a glance." He has left his sage counsels for us to ponder over. In his Farewell Address he says:

"What have you to gain by divisions and dissensions? Delude not yourselves with the hope that the breach once made would be afterwards easily repaired. If the Union is once severed, the separation will grow wider and wider, and the controversies which are now debated and settled in the halls of legislation will be tried in the field of battle and determined by the sword. Neither should you deceive yourselves with the hope that the first line of separation would be the permanent one." * * * "Local interests would still be found there and unchastened ambition. If the recollection of common dangers, in which the people of the United States have stood side by side against the common foe, the prosperity and happiness they have enjoyed under the present Constitution—if all these recollections and proofs of common interests are not strong enough to bind us together as one people, what tie will hold united the warring divisions of empire, when those bonds have been broken and the Union dissolved? The first line of separation would not last long; new fragments would be torn off; new leaders would spring up, and this glorious Republic would soon be broken into a multitude of petty States, armed for mutual aggressions; loaded with taxes to pay armies and leaders; seeking aid against each other from foreign Powers; insulted and trampled upon by the nations of Europe, until, harassed with conflicts and humbled and debased in spirit, they would be willing to submit to a domination of any military adventurer, and surrender their liberty for the sake of repose."

Henry Clay, in a speech in Congress as early as 1839, warned his countrymen against the fanaticism of the abolitionists in the following words:

"Abolitionism should no longer be regarded as an imaginary danger. The abolitionists, let me suppose, succeeded in their present aim of uniting the inhabitants of the free States as one man against the inhabitants of the slave States. Upon upon one side will beget union on the other, and this process of reciprocal consolidation will be attended with all the violent prejudices, embittered passions, and implacable animosities which ever degraded or deformed human nature." * * * "One section will stand in menacing and hostile array against the other. The collisions of opinion will be quickly followed by the clash of arms. I will not attempt to describe scenes which now happily be concealed from our view. Abolitionists themselves would shrink back in horror at the contemplation of desolated fields, conflagrated cities, murdered inhabitants, and the overthrow of the fairest fabric of human government that ever rose to animate the hopes of civilized man."

In addition to these warnings and prophecies might be added like opinions from all the great statesmen of the country. This advice has been disregarded, and a party was built up in the North whose aim was to destroy the institution of slavery, either out of hatred to the people of the South or false ideas of humanity. They appealed to the passions of men, and labored to array the North against the South, and to alienate one section from the other. The friendly relations of the North and South were broken; strife begat strife. The unjustifiable intermeddling with the institutions of the South fed the bad passions of men until that section of our once happy country has taken up arms to destroy the fairest fabric of human government that ever rose to animate the hopes of civilized men.

Sir, I need not quote the treasonable utterances of the opponents of the Democratic party, nor their threats of violence to the South. I need not repeat how they exasperated the people of one section against another; how they attempted to murder and did murder citizens of the South in a wild attempt to abolish slavery; how many jack-legitimate preachers have gone to the South like the wolf in sheep's clothing to stir up servile insurrection, to incite the slave to murder his master, and slay the first-born. Sir, this is the history of the fanatical party that was the inception and cause of the rebellion. While I do not justify the rebellion, while I pronounce those engaged in it guilty of treason, yea, worse than treason, if there be such a crime, in truth and justice I must equally condemn that party which furnished them the excuse for the rebellion. During all the agitation preceding and attending secession, the southern conspirators considered the abolitionists their best friends. Governor Adams, of South Carolina, said of them:

"The abolitionists are our best friends. Thank God for what they have already done; and for the inestimable blessings they were about to confer, they were entitled to our warmest gratitude. Their assaults have been unceasing, but all for our good. They have furnished us a justification for dissolving our connection with them."

In three particulars the abolitionists were the best friends of the southern conspirators. First, by furnishing them with the means to excite the southern masses into rebellion. Second, by advocating the policy of "letting them go in peace," and thus aiding them to establish an "empire founded on slavery." Third, by pushing the Government into an extreme policy of emancipation and confiscation, uniting the South, dividing the North, and in effect doubling the relative strength of the rebellion.

Slavery is denounced as the cause of the rebellion; I deny this, though it may be the occasion, as money is the occasion of larceny, robbery, or burglary. If bad men did not covet their neighbors' money and lay felonious hands upon it and carry it away, such a crime as larceny would not be known to the law. If the unjustifiable and unlawful intermeddling with slavery had never occurred there would have been no rebellion; the deadly conflict which is now convulsing the country from center to circumference would not have occurred; no fields and beautiful farms devastated; no loss of thousands of free and happy people; no graveyards extending from the Potomac to the Mississippi; no people in mourning for lost friends who fell in battle. We lived four-score years in peace and prosperity, and the clash of arms in intestine war was not heard and never would have been had the people been true to themselves and their country, by discountenancing and condemning the fanaticism of the abolitionists.

This nation has been a nation of compromises. From its foundation and through its growth all its difficulties and its dissensions have ended in mutual concessions. The spirit of our genius and the brilliancy of our destiny have always led us heretofore to compromise. When this nation was in the throes of dissolution, before secession had to any extent captivated the southern heart, we might have prevented this unnatural war. If the Crittenden amendments had been adopted the South would have remained in the Union, and to-day all would be peace. Fanaticism had triumphed at the polls, and the President elect, forgetting his country and remaining true only to his sectional platform and party, stood a mute observer of the great events which were passing. His party triumph was dearer to him than the interests of his country. His country was forgotten, and while on his way to assume the presidential chair he dealt in the slang phrase "no body is hurt." Had he been possessed of the patriotism of a Clay or a Webster he would have done as they did in 1850, forget his party devotion and kneel at the altar of his country and there pour the "oil upon the troubled waters," and thus allay the threatening storm. This he could have done. He had power and influence over his own party, and at his suggestion his friends would have adopted a compromise which would have prevented secession and riveted the chains which bound this Union together in indissoluble bonds. Was it unbecoming or degrading to the party coming into power to have adopted the Crittenden compromise? Hear the reasonable and just provisions of that preserver of our peace:

"ART. I. In all the territory of the United States now held, or hereafter acquired, situated north of latitude 36° 30', slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, is prohibited while such territory shall remain under territorial government. In all the territory now held, or hereafter acquired, south of said line of latitude, slavery of the African race is hereby recognized as existing, and shall not be interfered with by Congress, but shall be protected as property by all the departments of the territorial government during its continuance; and when any Territory north or south of said line, within such boundaries as Congress may prescribe, shall contain the population requisite for a member of Congress according to the then Federal ratio of representation of the people of the United States, it shall, if its form of government be republican, be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States with or without slavery, as the constitution of such new States may provide.

"ART. II. Congress shall have no power to abolish slavery in places under its exclusive jurisdiction, or within the limits of States that permit the holding of slaves.

"ART. III. Congress shall have no power to abolish slavery within the District of Columbia, so long as it exists in the adjoining States of Virginia and Maryland, or either, nor without the consent of the inhabitants, nor without just compensation first made to said owners of slaves as do not consent to such abolishment. Nor shall Congress at any time prohibit officers of the Federal Government or members of Congress, whose duties require them to be in said District, from bringing with them their slaves, and holding them as such during the time their duties may require them to remain there, and afterwards taking them from the District.

"ART. IV. Congress shall have no power to prohibit or hinder the transportation of slaves from one State to another, or to a Territory in which slaves are by law permitted to be held, whether that transportation be by land, navigable rivers, or by sea.

"ART. V. That in addition to the provisions of the third paragraph of the second section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States, Congress shall have power to provide by law, and it shall be its duty so to provide, that the United States shall pay to the owner who shall apply for it the full value of his fugitive slave in all cases where the marshal, or other officers, whose duty it was to arrest said fugitive, was prevented from so doing by violence or intimidation, or when after said arrest said fugitive was rescued by force, and the owner thereby prevented and obstructed in the pursuit of his remedy for the recovery of his fugitive slaves under the said clause of the Constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof. And in such cases when the United States shall pay for such fugitive they shall have the right in their own name to sue the county in which such violence, intimidation, or rescue was committed, and to recover from it, with interest and damages, the amount paid by them for said fugitive slave. And the said county, after it has paid said amount to the United States, may, for its indemnity, sue and recover from the wrong-doers or rescuers, by whom the owner was prevented from the recovery of his fugitive slave, in like manner as the owner himself might have sued and recovered.

"ART. VI. No future amendment of the Constitution shall affect the five preceding articles, nor the third paragraph of the second section of the first article of the Constitution, nor the third paragraph of the second section of the fourth article of said Constitution, and no amendment shall be made to the Constitution which will authorize or give to Congress any power to abolish or interfere with slavery in any of the States by whose laws it is or may be allowed or permitted."

If these amendments, Mr. Speaker, would have satisfied the South and saved the Union, the people who bear the burden of the war, who pay heavy taxes, and who give their sons to the Army, will ask what party is responsible for their defeat? I will answer by quoting from the votes and proceedings in the Senate of the United States where this compromise originated. On the 3d of March, 1861, the Crittenden amendments were voted upon, and the following is the vote:

"YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bigler, Bright, Crittenden, Douglas, Gwin, Hunter, Johnson, Kennedy, Lane, Latham, Mason, Nicholson, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Sebastian, Thomson, and Wigfall—19.

"NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Bingham, Chandler, Clark, Dixon, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, King, Morrill, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—20."

Of the nineteen who voted yea, seventeen were Democrats and two southern Americans. The twenty who voted nay were all Republicans. If the Republicans had voted yea, the country would have been saved, and no war with all its desolating effects would have been inaugurated. But party predominated.

It has, often been asserted by the Opposition that the Crittenden amendments would not have saved the country from war. I will not rest the solution of this question upon my own opinion. I appeal to the proceedings in the Senate for a correct estimate of their value. Senator Pugh, of Ohio, has put on record the following testimony as to what could have been done under a proper desire to save the Union:

"The Crittenden proposition has been indorsed by the almost unanimous vote of the Legislature of Kentucky. It has been indorsed by the Legislature of the noble old Commonwealth of Virginia. It has been petitioned for by a larger number of electors of the United States than any proposition that was ever before Congress. I believe in my heart to-day that it would carry an overwhelming majority of the people of my State; ay, sir, and of nearly every State in the Union. Before the Senators from the State of Mississippi left this Chamber I heard one of them, who assumes at least to be president of the southern confederacy, propose to accept it and maintain the Union if that proposition could receive the vote it ought to receive from the other side of the Chamber. Therefore, all of your propositions, of all your amendments, knowing as I do, and knowing that the historian will write it down, at any time before the 1st of January, a two thirds vote for the Crittenden resolution in this Chamber would have saved every State in the Union but South Carolina. Georgia would be here by her Representatives and Louisiana, those two great States which at least would have broken the whole column of secession."—Globe, second session, Thirty-Sixth Congress, page 1390.

To show that yielding would have saved us, we quote the lamented Douglas at an early period:

"The Senator [Mr. Pugh] has said that if the Crittenden proposition could have passed early in the session it would have saved all the States except South Carolina. I firmly believe it would. While the Crittenden proposition was not in accordance with my cherished views, I avowed my readiness to accept it, in order to save the Union if we could unite upon it. I can confirm the Senator's declaration, that Senator Davis himself, when on that committee of thirteen, was ready at all times to compromise on the Crittenden proposition. I will go further and say that Mr. Toombs was also."—Globe, second session, Thirty-Sixth Congress, page 1391.

Judge Douglas said in a speech in the Senate, January 3, 1861:

"I address the inquiry to the Republicans alone, for the reason that, in the committee of thirteen a few days ago, every member of the South, including those from the cotton States, [Messrs. Toombs and Davis,] expressed their readiness to accept the proposition of my venerable friend from Kentucky [Mr. Crittenden] as a final settlement of the controversy, if tendered and sustained by Republican members. Hence the sole responsibility of our disagreement. The only difficulty in the way of amicable adjustment is with the Republican party."

Judge Douglas has so often been quoted on this floor as authority, I scarcely think any one will deny what he said. Then, sir, the present Administration and its friends are responsible for the non-settlement of our difficulties, and are equally chargeable with the secessionists for every drop of blood which has been shed. The very acts of the Opposition prove they did not desire to have peace and tranquility reign, but preferred bloodshed at the risk of national ruin and bankruptcy. Hear the present Secretary of the Treasury:

WASHINGTON, February 9, 1861.

* DEAR SIR: Thanks for your note and explanation of that vote. It may be useful. There is a greater disposition to compromise than I like to see. But I hope the best. Half a dozen of the border State gentlemen have been in our room to-night: Etheridge and Stokes, of Tennessee; Adams and Bristow, of Kentucky; Gilmer, of North Carolina, and others. I really sympathize with them, but see no reason why we should sacrifice permanently a large power to help them, for the purpose of gaining temporarily a little one.

Yours, cordially, S. P. CHASE.

"There is a greater disposition to compromise than I like to see," says Mr. Chase. Certain southern gentlemen had been in his room asking for compromise. He really sympathized with them, but his party fealty held him against a settlement.

We hear it frequently asserted that the responsibility of not quelling the rebellion in its infancy rests with President Buchanan. If there ever was a clear and satisfactory defense for any public man in times of great national danger, that defense undoubtedly belongs to Mr. Buchanan. That he exercised rare qualities of statesmanship and a most exalted patriotism is a proposition which I regard as beyond all controversy. It is true that he was of all men in the country the most anxious that our difficulties should be settled without a resort to arms—

"For the field of the dead rushed red on his sight."

In the Gulf States the excitement ran high. Southern men, who, as Mr. Douglas testifies, were willing and anxious for a settlement, entreated him to exert his influence with the northern men to meet them on equal grounds. His days were spent in unavailing attempts to have them appreciate the danger. They listened not to his admonitions, and when he brought the subject to their attention by his message of January 8, 1861, and urged upon them the necessity of either compromising the difficulties or giving him power to raise the requisite forces, they scorned his counsel and refused him the power. Congress contented itself with preparing and listening to angry speeches, still more exciting the public mind. The peace convention was broken up by Republicans. Yet through all these dark days Mr. Buchanan safely carried this Government and handed it over in full vigor to Mr. Lincoln. That he should have done so well, standing as he did between two parties bent on the destruction of the country, will be the great wonder of our children. It is a most fitting commentary upon the policy of Mr. Buchanan's administration that Mr. Lincoln, for six long weeks after his inauguration, followed precisely in the footsteps of his predecessor. This fact speaks more for the wisdom of Mr. Buchanan's policy than all the praise of his most ardent friends.

I repeat it, Mr. Speaker, and history will sustain me in the declaration, that the same breath which casts calumny upon Mr. Buchanan for an alleged inefficiency must cover with unspeakable shame the man who, with that experience before him, chose to walk in the same path. Mr. Lincoln well knew that up to the day that Fort Sumter was fired upon the prospect for a settlement had not faded away. The three great States of Virginia, Tennessee, and North Carolina still stood fast for the Union, and he himself had but a short time before expressed the opinion that the Union sentiment predominated in every southern State except perhaps South Carolina. Mr. Buchanan acted upon the belief that the American people could never be guilty of such gross folly as to lash themselves to pieces in a civil war. Had Fort Sumter been fired upon during his term of office, force would have been met by force. General Dix in a speech made not long since bears this testimony to Mr. Buchanan's resolution; and he, it will be remembered, was a member of the Cabinet, and ought to know what he affirms.

War is upon us; what shall we do? Shall we resign ourselves to the fate of a dismembered republic, or will we spring up, giant-like, to a new hope of a speedy peace and restoration of the Union? Under this Administration we never can have it. I take it, sir, it is not the intention of the Opposition to have peace until every negro is free. If this was not their object the Administration in power would have faithfully adhered to the resolution adopted by Congress with unparalleled unanimity on the 22d of July, 1861, "that this war is not waged on their part in any spirit of oppression, for any purpose of conquest or subjugation, or purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of the States, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution, and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired." They will free the slaves of the South and enslave their own children in the most galling yoke known to mankind, that of enormous taxation to pay an immense public debt.

I charge it upon the Opposition—

That they are not in favor of a restoration of this Union; that, in the event of the election of a Democratic President in November next, they will be in favor of the recognition of the southern confederacy.

That the war has been made a pretext and apology for the usurpation, by the President, of powers unwarranted by the Federal Constitution, and totally irreconcilable with the letter and spirit of our institutions.

That the war has been conducted to build up a party at the expense of blood and treasure and time, and at the hazard of permanent separation of the States.

That the conduct of the war has been characterized by corruptions unprecedented in the history of any people, for which the President has in many instances declared himself responsible.

That the present Administration has committed itself to doctrines which elevate the military above the civil power, affect the purity of the ballot-box, and endanger the personal liberty of the citizen.

That the policy now declared is fatal, not merely to all ideas of a legal reunion of the States, but fore-shadows future bankruptcy, constant agitation, the establishment of a large standing army, and, in a time not remote, a military centralization such as to-day exists in France.

If we are prepared for all this; if we close our eyes and shut our mouths, and do not raise our voices against the infringement that is now being made upon our rights, and we permit the present Administration to remain in power, we should bow our necks to the yoke of tyranny without a murmur. But if we intend to secure to ourselves the imperishable boon to speak, to act as a free people, and to enjoy liberty and preserve our rights, we must retrace our steps to a strict observance of the laws and the Constitution. The question is with the people to decide. "Where there is a will there is a way." No bristling bayonets, no threats or executive influence can tame the will of a people who love liberty. Their fires will be kindled upon every mountain side, until the valleys are lurid with the burning insense upon the altar of liberty, and their shouts will be heard above the din of battle:

"To arms, my friends. And let no sword be sheathed
Until our land from cliff to lake is free!
Free as our torrents are that leap our rocks,
Or as our peaks, that wear their caps of snow
In the very presence of the regal sun!
A country is never lost that hath one man
To wrestle with the tyrant who would enslave her!"

The liberty of speech, the freedom of the ballot-box, and the inalienable rights of the citizen are worth preserving. If defending them on this floor makes this side of the House, in the opinion of gentlemen on the other side, sympathizers with the rebellion, we know we do our duty, and that unborn generations will rise to bless the memory of the men who have preserved for them the rights and privileges of their fathers.

MR. KELLOGG, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have had no time to prepare remarks for this occasion that would be worthy of a subject of such importance to the people of this country as that which we have now before us; but I cannot avoid expressing my opinions and feelings on this question, and, standing here for my constituents, to declare in their behalf my desire that the amendment of the Constitution which this bill contemplates shall finally prevail.

There are so many reasons and so many arguments that might be urged in behalf of this measure that I hardly know where to begin. It seems to me that our prosperity as a people, our progress in civilization, and our duty to mankind, demand such an amendment of the Constitution, and that if we evade it we shall be guilty of treason to human liberty and human rights.

The American Revolution of 1776 was the great event of the eighteenth century, and in my opinion the greatest event of the last eighteen hundred years, and one even of more importance than any other that has taken place in the civilized world. It was not because it severed the connection of the thirteen colonies with the mother country and erected them into an independent nation, but because the result of that Revolution was the establishment of a Government based upon principles not recognized in any other in all the history of the past. It was an attempt to create political institutions that should harmonize in practice with the great cardinal principles of Christianity as taught by Christ and His apostles, principles which I believe are yet to prevail universally and make their way to the dominion of the world. They were new in the history of nations, for they taught the duty of protecting the poor and succoring the oppressed, and enjoined the deliverance of all men from the bondage of body or soul and the education and consequent elevation of the race.

Mr. Speaker, they are well expressed in the Declaration of Independence, which affirms that all men are created equal and possessed of rights which are inalienable; that Governments can rightfully exist only with the consent of the governed, and that they are established for the protection of the humblest as well as the most exalted member of the body-politic, and to secure them in the enjoyment of those rights with which God endowed them when He gave them existence.

It was a belief in the possibility of such a Government that caused the American Revolution and carried our ancestors successfully through it. They had a conviction that these principles must finally prevail, and their faith sustained them in a most unequal contest till they were finally victorious, and won for themselves a name and place among the nations of the earth.

But their trials did not end with the advent of peace, and something more must be done if they would secure the political blessings for which they had sacrificed so much blood and treasure. The partial union of the States under the Articles of Confederation enabled them to achieve their independence, but the Government it created possessed so little power that it could not provide for the payment of the public debt nor command the respect of the people. It was apparent to all that it was necessary to form a more perfect Union and establish a Government with sufficient powers for the emergency which called it into being, and to preserve the liberties and the national independence which had been so dearly won. In this crisis of our history, when wise men knew not what to do, George Washington, our great leader in the struggle for independence, who I devoutly believe was raised up by God for this occasion, called together, for consultation, his illustrious associates in the Revolution, in the hope that they might by their united wisdom accomplish what the people so ardently desired.

They assembled in Philadelphia, where Congress first proclaimed the Declaration of Independence, to devise a way to give force and effect to its provisions, and, after months spent in solemn deliberation and discussion, they succeeded in framing a Constitution so perfect in all its parts that it seems almost the work of inspiration.

The object of this Constitution was admirably expressed in its preamble, which declares that—

"We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

It established a national Government, with ample powers for all purposes, and promising every blessing to the people; it was approved and adopted by them, and thus became the supreme law of the land. The statesmen and philosophers of the Old World admired it; the prosperity of the American people for three quarters of a century testifies its worth; and we all feel and believe that it is the grandest work of human genius and human wisdom the world has ever known. But while it was adapted to the condition of the country at that time, the great men who devised it saw that some change might be necessary in the future, and wisely provided a way for its amendment so difficult an accidental majority could not effect it, yet easily accomplished when it was plainly the wish of the people. Several amendments have been made already, and no one has questioned their wisdom or doubted their utility. But the one which we propose is more important than any that has been offered in the past or that is likely to be presented in the future. Its adoption is necessary if we wish to carry out the objects of the Constitution itself as set forth in the preamble, and remove the only cause of discord and contention from our midst. We propose to insert an article prohibiting slavery throughout the Republic; and unless this is done I fear we shall experience greater calamities in the future than we have suffered already.

I am aware that many in this House object to this amendment, and I confess I am amazed at the opposition to a measure of such vital importance to our country. We are told that slavery is dead, that the war has destroyed it, and this provision in the Constitution is unnecessary; but I do not believe it.

If the rebels should lay down their arms to-day and submit to the Constitution and laws of the United States slavery would still exist and continue to exist increasing in influence and strength with each succeeding year until it would plunge us into greater difficulties than we are involved in now. If they believe it is dead why object to making it certain, why not render its resurrection impossible and set the public mind at rest on this question forever?

I was surprised to hear it asserted on this floor that we had no right to amend the Constitution in the absence of those who are mainly affected by the provision we would adopt. What, sir! Have we no right to change the organic law of the land when we act in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution itself, obeying it to the very letter? If the southern States are not represented it is not our fault, but theirs. Their Representatives left these Halls voluntarily, without any cause whatever, and if we sit here as the Congress of the United States in obedience to the Constitution and the laws what right have they to complain of our action however it may affect them?

We are told, too, that this is an interference with the rights of the people of the slave States, rights which were solemnly guaranteed to them by the Constitution. Sir, what rights have rebels under a Constitution which they have set at naught? What rights under laws they refuse to obey? What rights under a Government they declare their determination to destroy? Sir, I cannot understand the logic of these gentlemen, nor do I believe them to be serious in their objection.

Mr. Speaker, the people demand that this shall be done. There is more unanimity among them in favor of this measure than any other on which we are called to act. The men of the country who are determined to preserve the Constitution and the Union, and who are pouring out their blood so freely in their defense are everywhere in favor of this amendment of the Constitution, and intensely anxious to see it adopted by this Congress and submitted to the States for their approval.

Gentlemen who sit on this floor as the Representatives of the people will vote as they think best, and in accordance, no doubt, with their views of duty, but I believe that those who vote against this measure will find it difficult to justify themselves to their constituents, and be compelled to relinquish their seats to men of different views hereafter.

Mr. Speaker, what is there in the institution of slavery as it exists in this country that should make us feel so tender and forbearing toward it? I cannot imagine a single reason that can be urged in its favor. It is a social, political, and moral evil, without a single redeeming feature, and its immediate abolition would be the greatest blessing that could be conferred upon our country or even upon the States where it now exists. The laws enacted for its protection are more wicked and barbarous than the statutes and decrees of any despot in the civilized world. It fosters ignorance, inculcates a hatred of the principles of liberty, and sanctions customs and practices of the most revolting character. Before the war broke out the principal exports of some of the States were human beings, who were daily sold in the markets of the South. The people of Virginia have sold men and women enough within the last fifty years, who were born and raised in their midst, to pay for all the real estate and personal property they were possessed of at the commencement of the rebellion. It was the business of many of them to breed human beings for sale and live on the proceeds, as the farmers of the West live on the proceeds by raising herds of cattle and driving them to market. What cared they for the sufferings of families whom they separated, or the anguish of those whom they sold from their homes to the planters of the South? It was a trade that was sanctioned by public sentiment and the churches of the country, and protected by the laws and constitution of the State and the nation also; and why not, since it was part and parcel of the system and necessary to its existence? If we had prohibited the exportation of slaves from Virginia we should have destroyed slavery in that State immediately by making it unprofitable. We see then that slavery and the slave trade are inseparable, and while we have the one we must have the other.

Sir, I do not wonder that some men are unable to speak of this organized system of iniquity with calmness and composure. Its cruelty and wickedness are enough to fill the soul with horror and send reason reeling from her throne.

We have called John Brown a fanatic; we have said that he was crazy, and I should not wonder if he was. He was a man who had a clear perception of the wickedness of slavery, and was so affected by it that he could think of nothing else. "Here," said he, "are millions of human beings whom God made and Christ died for, who are robbed of every right by a people professedly Christian. They are men, but they must not read the word of God; they have no right to any reward for their labor; no right to their wives; no right to their children; no right to themselves! The law makes them property and affords them no protection, and what are the Christian people of this country doing about it? Nothing at all! Congress is discussing another compromise which if adopted will perpetuate this infernal system a century longer. Bishops and doctors of divinity are preaching in its favor, the press is rallying to its support, and our great cities, the centers of trade and commerce, will not suffer it to be disturbed; but I cannot endure it any longer, and I will utter my protest against it in such a way that the world shall hear me if I die the next moment." And he did die; but his death woke up the nation, and I trust we shall never sleep again on this subject till we have swept the last vestige of slavery from the land.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CORFORTH] who preceded me says slavery was not the cause of the rebellion; but I do not agree with him. I know the leading men of the South had been conspiring against this Government for twenty-five years, and were resolved to establish another of a different character altogether. But what caused this conspiracy against the best Government that ever existed? What but slavery itself and its influence upon them? It taught them to love absolute power, imbued them with a hatred of democratic ideas and institutions, and a love for those social and political distinctions in society which prevailed in the Governments of the Old World. De Bow, in his Review, the acknowledged organ of southern sentiments, affirms that republican institutions are a failure, and that an aristocratic form of government is the best for any people. True, said he, if you have an aristocracy you must have paupers, but better have it, notwithstanding. They would degrade the laboring classes to a condition below that of the peasantry of Europe and render it impossible for them to rise in society. The atrocious sentiment that it was better for society that the capitalists of the country should own the laborers, whether white or black, found ready advocates among them. In the government they wished to establish in the place of one founded by Washington they would have but two classes, masters and slaves.

Who does not see that civil war was inevitable under such circumstances, and that slavery was the cause of it? The gentleman from Pennsylvania thinks we might have prevented it by adopting a conciliatory course toward the South, but he offers no evidence in support of the assertion. I was here when the rebellion broke out, and I do not believe the adoption of the Crittenden compromise, so called, would have postponed the war for a single week. Southern Senators laughed at the idea of being satisfied in such a way. They were determined to dissolve the Union and establish a separate government in conformity with their ideas, and they firmly believed that we would allow them to do so. They had a supreme contempt for the people of the North, and never dreamed of the difficulties in the way or the opposition they were to encounter. They had made up their minds to do as they pleased, and set the Government of the United States at defiance. It was the last great effort of slavery for the control of this continent, and will end in its annihilation. Heaven and earth are arrayed against it, and what can save it now? God made the human race subject to the law of progress, and all the slaveholders of the country and their friends and advocates in this House or elsewhere will fail to put any brakes on the chariot wheels of Almighty God and prevent the onward march of all mankind toward that liberty and independence which He has promised them at some period in the far-off future.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that any one should be found on the floor of either House who would propose peace on terms which are degrading to every American citizen, and which would destroy the Government of the United States. A day or two since a resolution was introduced in the Senate [by Mr. DAVIS, of Kentucky] calling upon the President to take steps to secure peace at any price, and, if necessary, to consent to the recognition of the rebel government rather than continue the war. Such an act on our part would bring upon us the contempt of the whole world and the curses of our posterity. If the South became an independent nation they would form alliances with France and England, and be ready in a few years to renew the war. Let no one suppose we should be able to live long in peace with them, or that a pretext would be wanting on their part for a rupture. A confession of our inability to vanquish them would increase their contempt for us, and, burning with a desire to avenge their fancied wrongs, they would seize the first occasion to involve us in a war more desolating than we are engaged in now. Better fight this out now, for, come what will, we cannot consent to a dissolution of the Union; that would be the greatest calamity that could befall us.

The opponents of the Government who belong to the peace-at-any-price party are anxious to convince the people that they cannot carry on this war much longer because of the expense involved in it, and that national bankruptcy and financial ruin are inevitable. One of my colleagues, who I am sorry to say is not a friend of the Administration, fixes the liabilities of the national Government on the 1st day of July next at $3,000,000,000. The people in his opinion cannot pay the interest on this debt much longer; but if he is a friend of the Union, as he assures me that he is, I am confident that he will thank me for showing him that he is mistaken. The entire indebtedness of the nation at the close of the fiscal year in July next will not exceed $1,800,000,000, and should the war continue a year longer, it will not reach the amount which he asserts is due already. We have ample means for the payment of this debt were it much larger than it ever will be. In 1850 our national wealth amounted in round numbers to $7,000,000,000. In 1860 it had reached the sum of $16,000,000,000; and should it continue to increase in the same ratio for the next forty years it will amount to more than $400,000,000,000. Our population will soon be double what it now is, and the debt we incur in suppressing the rebellion will not be large in comparison with our resources. Our taxes may be burdensome for a while, but the people are willing to pay them. They know what this Government is worth and they will not suffer it to be destroyed.

But we are told that we cannot conquer the South. Sir, if we do not conquer them they will conquer us. One side or the other must be subdued. There is no escaping that result and no peace to be had on any other terms. Those who have watched the progress of the great commander whose army is now thundering at the gates of Richmond believe he will be successful, and that no matter how bravely the rebels may fight, no matter what skill and genius they may display in the handling of their armies, no matter how despair may nerve their arms, their defeat is inevitable, and they will have to submit at last to the armies of the Union.

Fresh troops are pouring in from every part of the country, and the northwestern States alone have furnished one hundred thousand men in the last thirty days for the reinforcement of our armies.

Ohio tendered thirty-five thousand, and the most of them were ready to march as soon as they were accepted. They were ordered to man the forts and defenses of the frontier, but when they saw our wounded heroes borne back from the battle-field they besought the President to order them to the front, that they too might prove their devotion to their country and peril their lives in its defense. Michigan has furnished more than her quota of men for every campaign since the commencement of the war. Thousands of her sons have fallen in battle and sleep on southern soil, but I trust when the last trumpet sounds they will rise under the same flag that waved over them when they fell.

While our armies are fighting our battles the people have nominated our worthy President for another term, and intend to elect him by an overwhelming majority. They have confidence in his patriotism and ability, and laugh at the silly charges of our enemies that he will rob them of their liberties and despoil them of their rights. They will sustain him in whatever he may do at this time for the salvation of the Union. Sir, it is not the friends of the Government, not those who desire its preservation, nor those who love liberty and hate despotism, who complain of the Executive or feel aggrieved at anything he may do. It is your half-way traitor, the sympathizer with treason, who will do all he can in behalf of the enemies of the Union and escape conviction under the laws. These are the men who are prating about tyranny, talking about arbitrary arrests, and denouncing those who would save the country at any hazard whatever.

Sir, the Constitution confers sufficient power upon the President to enable him to put down this rebellion, and the people expect he will use it against the enemies of the Republic, whoever they may be.

The able statesman whom we have selected for the second place in the people's gift resides in the South; but those who have listened to his denunciations of treason, and who know his hatred of slavery, his love of liberty, and his devotion to the cause of human rights, rejoice that he has been chosen for a post of such importance, and will give him their hearty and undivided support.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot magnify the importance of the issues involved in this conflict for the supremacy of the Government and the integrity of the nation. Our cause is that of the whole family of man, and every lover of liberty in the Old World is watching the progress of this struggle with intense solicitude. Never since the Son of God expired on Calvary has any event transpired upon earth in which every human being is so deeply interested as in the result of this contest. It will settle the question of man's capacity for self-government and settle it forever.

If this Republic is destroyed no other will rise upon its ruins, but if we are successful other nations will follow our example, till liberty is universal.

Sir, my trust is in the intelligence and patriotism of the people, and may God help us to preserve our liberties and institutions, and transmit them unimpaired to our posterity.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, occupying the position of a new member, without congressional experience, I have refrained from participating in the discussion of public affairs; but in view of the extraordinary assumptions indulged in by leading members of the party in power in arrogating to themselves to be the exclusive Union party, and hurling their anathemas of disloyalty against the Democratic party, I deem it due to my constituency and myself to probe their pretended Unionism, to answer and repel the grave calumny. Perhaps the radical members from Maryland and Ohio [Messrs. DAVIS and SCHENCK] have been the most arrogant in their assumptions and vituperative in their aspersions, while smaller craft have followed in their wake.

As evidence to sustain the slanderous imputation, reference is made to certain resolutions offered in the Legislatures of Illinois and other States, and votes cast for Democratic nominees for Governor. Now, sir, the resolutions of said States, and the views of said candidates for Governor, may be submitted to the severest test of scrutiny, and the most unscrupulous mendacity cannot show a word or sentiment which does not breathe the purest patriotism and exhibit the most exalted devotion to the best interest of the country. I profess to have some knowledge of this party, having for thirty years been an humble member within the pale of its organization, aiding and rejoicing in its triumphs, and sorrowing over its defeats. A party has never existed more national in its principles, conservative in its action, or patriotic in its impulses than the old Democratic guard. Sir, it has a clear record and an untarnished history, which will live in the affections and memories of the people as long as personal liberty and free constitutional government shall endure.

Permit me to call attention to a few significant historical facts: the Democratic party made the Government, they laid broad and deep its solid foundations and built the magnificent superstructure. From its organization, with few and short exceptions, they have held and governed it. For over sixty years it exercised its functions. Under its auspices and wise legislation we increased from three or four millions to over thirty millions of population, from thirteen to thirty-four States; under theegis of our flag our commerce floated upon every sea, honored and respected throughout the world, without large armies or navies or a national debt to paralyze industry, exhaust the substance, or foster in the flesh of the people; they carried us safely and triumphantly through the war of 1812 and with Mexico; they added large accessions of territory to the national domain; the rights and liberties of citizens were protected and defended at home and abroad, on the land and the sea; Government securities were eagerly sought and commanded a premium in coin; the people were happy, prosperous, and contented; the public mind was securely at rest in the abiding faith that the experiment of free government had proved a success, that they had built upon a rock, and the gates of hell should not prevail against it.

These, sir, are some of the trophies scattered along the high way of our national greatness, acquired under the auspices of that party now charged with disloyalty by these newly fledged Unionists. In behalf of my constituency and the Democracy of the country I pronounce the charge a willful, malicious slander, and hurl the imputation back in the teeth of the calumniators with merited scorn and indignant contempt.

Having said thus much in vindication of the Democracy, suppose we carry the war into Africa and feel the strength of the enemy. And you are a Union party, are you? Pray tell us when, where, and how you got to be a Union party? Surely it was not in 1860, when with taunts and jeers you sneeringly called us "Union-savers." Many of these latter-day Unionists are from the old Federal stock, lineal descendants from the Tories of the Revolution, enemies to the Union, the Constitution, and our form of government from the beginning. Disciples of the Adams-Hamiltonian-Federal theory, they wanted a stronger, more consolidated system; they held it unsafe to confer general political powers into the hands of the people, they distrusted their capacity to govern themselves, and would have modeled our organic law more after the British form; but Madison, Jefferson, and their compeers thwarted their machinations. Since then they have been restless for a change, ever ready to coalesce with any party or faction to extirpate the Democratic theory and change the form of government; and although the names are legion by which this Federal scion has been known, they never before had the presumption or unblushing impudence to call themselves a "Union party." They a Union party! No, sir; they are the most wily, dangerous enemies the Union has ever encountered; their pretended devotion is only to enable them more effectually to undermine the Government and filch from the people their liberties. Judas saluted his master with a kiss that he might betray him into the hands of his enemies. It is to be hoped that our Union and Constitution may survive the deadly embrace and hypocritical kiss of these latter-day Judases, who, less scrupulous than their prototype who exacted coin as the price of innocent blood, are willing to take pay in contracts, cotton, or greenbacks.

Sir, this fungus "Union party" came into power with treason in its heart and perjury upon its lips; they took upon themselves a solemn oath to support and maintain the Federal Constitution, and at the same time held and promulgated the treasonable doctrine that our form of government had proved a failure, and could not endure, although for over three quarters of a century we had lived beneath its ægis, enjoying the blessings of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness such as had never fallen to the lot of any other people in the world's history. How could it be expected that they would successfully administer a Government which in advance they had declared a failure? Our revolutionary fathers made it to endure as long as time should last. They little thought in laying the solid foundations for future empire that it would cease to endure and crumble into fragments within the first century. It did endure, answering all the purposes of a perfect Government for over eighty years, and in our simplicity, except for the teachings and practices of this new Union party, we would never have doubted its stability or endurance. Thanks to an overruling Providence and the virtue, patriotism, and wisdom of our fathers, it has so far successfully endured the assaults of open enemies and the covert embrace of pretended friends; it has endured and outlived every danger except four years' rule of the party in power, and that is truly hard to endure; and although the aspect of our national affairs looks dark, gloomy, and portentous of evil, let us never despair of the Republic, but take courage and still hope that we may weather the storm of fanaticism and passion, and live and endure to overcome and consign to the grave of oblivion, amidst the exultant shouts of a disenfranchised people, its last, most dangerous, insidious enemy.

In the present exigency of our national affairs, the practical, important question which should demand the thoughtful and dispassionate consideration of the country is how it is to be extricated from its present sad, humiliating condition; how the fell spirits of secession and abolitionism, "twin relics of barbarism" and discord, may be securely and effectually buried with the national approbation in a common grave, and "the public mind rest secure in the belief that they are in process of ultimate extinction."

Three alternatives, looking to a solution of pending difficulties, are being considered and canvassed by the people.

The first looks to a continued prosecution of the war, involving the overthrow of State institutions and governments, and the entire subjugation or extermination of the insurgents.

The second contemplates "letting the wayward sisters go in peace," division of the country and recognition of their independence, with offensive and defensive treaty stipulations and the free navigation of the Mississippi.

The third and last alternative is by means of an armistice to cease hostilities, call a national convention, with a view of amicably settling and adjusting all our differences upon the basis of the Constitution as it is and the Union as it was.

Perhaps neither of these plans are exempt from objection, but if they are the only alternatives left us we should manfully face the difficulties, calmly and dispassionately canvass them, and select the least objectionable. History and our own sad experience should admonish us that war, especially a civil war, is a fearful calamity, and should be accepted only for the most imperative considerations, after all hope of honorable, peaceful adjustment had failed. I do not hold that war is never justifiable; by no means. After the exhaustion of all peaceful remedies, as the last alternative, with all its train of evils, rather than submit to national dishonor, insult, or disintegration, we should accept the arbitrament of arms.

I have no hesitation in saying, however, that in my judgment the sanguinary fratricidal conflict in which our country is now involved might by wise and prudent means on the part of those temporarily charged with the administration of public affairs have been honorably avoided; that there has been a wanton and unnecessary sacrifice of blood and treasure, and that the war should cease whenever and just as soon as peace can be secured, with a disintegrated Government, and the constitutional rights and powers of the Federal and State Governments unimpaired.

The second alternative of separation and recognition has been espoused and plausibly sustained by leading politicians and journals of both political parties; but there are to my mind serious if not insuperable objections to the proposed separation. A treaty based upon recognition and independence would, I fear, amount to nothing more enduring than a truce; that the sanguinary conflict would be renewed along our extended borders, aggravated and intensified by heart-burnings and animosities until protracted, exhausting wars would lead to foreign alliance. I hope we may never be subjected to the humiliation of being vassals and dependents to the despotisms of the Old World. Separation affords no adequate remedy for existing evils. There is not room enough on the North American continent for two independent Governments. Give me rather the gilded hope of my youthful fancy, an ocean-bound Republic, with the adjacent islands shining stars in the effulgent galaxy of the national constellation, each harmoniously moving in its appropriate orbit around their common center. Hence I conclude that the best interests of both sections and the whole country require that we should now and forever abandon all thought of despoiling our inheritance and jeopardizing our liberties by the suicidal policy of disintegration.

This brings me to the consideration of the third and last alternative, to wit, peace and a restored Union by means of mutual concessions and a fair and just compromise. This, I am frank to say, I regard with more favor than either of the preceding alternatives. It at once affords a full solution of all our differences in the spirit and upon the basis of the original compact. It has the approving sanction of precedents, and the high authority of the distinguished patriots and statesmen whose places we unworthily fill. It has the advantage of a continued and perpetuated union of the States by consent and not by force. It stops any further sacrifice of the lives of our brave men, and the accumulation of national debt. It is more in harmony with the sublime teachings of our divine Master, who said, "Blessed are the peacemakers." It will place us beyond the contingency of danger from foreign intervention or molestation. It is, sir, the true remedy, the infallible specific for the ills by which we are encompassed. It is the road our fathers trod; let us "keep step to the music of the Union," and follow in their footsteps. Perhaps the inquiry may be suggested, how are we to attain so desirable a result? I am wedded to no specific plan; if there is a way will readily be found. Permit me, however, to suggest that we first agree upon an armistice, then send commissioners to meet on the 4th of July at Mount Vernon, around the grave of Washington, when the soul-stirring inspiration of the day, the grandeur of the place, and the solemnity of the occasion would still and subdue every selfish ambition and unholy emotion, and rekindle a spirit of patriotism and love of country in the hearts of degenerate sons. Let the commissioners fix upon a time and place for holding a national convention to finally settle and adjust in a spirit of fairness and mutual concession all our differences; then unite and consolidate the national forces, North and South, into one grand invincible army of the Republic, and vindicate the honor and insulted dignity of the nation by reaffirming the inviolability of the Monroe doctrine, reinstating free institutions wherever foreign despots have intervened for their overthrow on this continent.

But am I asked, "Suppose all efforts to compromise fail, what do you then propose?" This is impossible; it must not, cannot be. I will not suffer myself to raise the curtain and contemplate the dim vista lying beyond all hopes of settlement. This unnatural, cruel conflict is sustained and procrastinated by passion, prejudice, and hatred. Patriotism, nationality, self-interest, civilization, humanity, and Christianity all prompt a settlement. Political fanaticism, like all other virulent contagious diseases to which frail humanity is subject, will run its course. If the patient survive, reason will be restored, it may be with a shattered and broken constitution, with heavy unliquidated liabilities, with a mere skeleton of former greatness and power; but still the patient lives.

We are now passing the crucible, the fiery ordeal of this malignant disease; the hectic flush mantes the cheek, the pulse beats quick and wiry, but there are still hopes, by a change of doctors and treatment, and careful nursing, the patient may survive. If I had power to reach the mind and touch the heart of the nation, I would beseech my countrymen everywhere, North and South, to stay their hands and cease this self-destruction before it be forever too late. Why persist in destroying the best form of government ever devised by the wisdom, virtue, and patriotism of man? Why blot out the world's last hope of free constitutional liberty? The despots of the Old World have no love for our free institutions and democratic form of government; they have marked with a jealous eye our growing greatness and power; they are pleased with the manner in which we are executing a job for them which they dare not undertake themselves. If we continue to gratify them by procrastinating our civil war until our armies are destroyed and our finances collapse, they will be ready to grasp the exhausted giant by the throat, and furnish Maximilians to rule over us. I would implore the country to pause and reflect; this question of self-preservation, of maintaining our liberties and free institutions, rises infinitely above all party considerations. Save the country though political parties crumble into atoms like a rope of sand. We must not suffer this mental aberration, this quasi insanity to run on until the epitaph of suicide is inscribed on the national monument.

These suggestions in favor of an amicable adjustment will not be likely to meet the approbation of the cabinets or their special adherents at Washington or Richmond. The first would peril the nation with its thirty million Anglo-Saxons for the supposed benefit of three or four million African slaves; they would extirpate slavery at whatever cost or sacrifice of blood and treasure; they would brush Federal and State constitutions out of their way like cobwebs; they would overrun and subjugate the South and exterminate the people; they would encourage servile insurrection, and arm the slave against his master; they would make war on and starve non-combatants, women and children; they would devastate and desolate the land with fire and sword and make it a howling wilderness; confiscate real and personal property; place the negro as to civil and political rights on an equality with the whites; execute or banish the rebel leaders; exclude all others engaged in the rebellion from the rights of citizens; place the freed negroes under the control of the Secretary of War, to be worked and managed by Government overseers; keep the people in subjection by means of a standing army, and to rule and govern the country by civil and military officers appointed by the President. Now I submit whether a war prosecuted for such purposes and in such a manner can reasonably be expected to terminate short of extermination?

On the other hand, the rebel leaders and cabinet at Richmond would prosecute the war to disintegrate the Union, subvert the Constitution, and destroy the Government, under the metaphysical sophistry that a State has the constitutional right to secede from the Union. This subtle theory cannot be sustained. It is a reproach to the wisdom and sagacity of the patriotic statesmen who molded and fashioned our organic law to suppose a State could at will secede and destroy the whole system. Again, they say they will continue to wage this war because a party is in power pledged to overthrow the institutions of their States. Suppose it be admitted. They aided in bringing about the result, and are therefore particeps criminis. Let them remember the schism they caused in the Democratic party at Charleston and Baltimore, and the encouragement they gave to Johnson, Dickinson, Butler, and others of their tools and allies, to defeat the election of the Democratic nominee and thereby aid the election of the party in power; they should be quiescent at a result to which they contributed. If there is a sectional party in power hostile to their institutions they so willed it; they said they preferred Lincoln to Douglas, and got their choice; it is to be hoped they are satisfied, and will be satiated with his Administration; I think the North is already. Now, while these two war parties would continue its prosecution for entirely dissimilar purposes, they concur in saying that there is no other alternative but to fight on. It cannot be possible we are in any such extremity. If the politicians had been out of the way the people would have settled our difficulties long ago. But unfortunately for the peace of the country, the political caldron in its effervescence had spawned to the surface a brood of political tricksters and fanatical demagogues; the scum rose to the top, and floated into positions of honor and trust; without capacity or patriotism to parry the threatened danger, they recklessly involved the country in civil war.

These wiseacres tell us that peace is a myth not to be thought of, that we must fight on, kill and slaughter, give up the last man and the last dollar; that the country must meekly and silently submit to having our gallant young men, the flower and hope of the country, pitted against each other in deadly combat, and glory in the slaughter. The greedy Moloch of sectionalism is not satiated, through dripping with the blood fresh from the hecatomb of hundreds of thousands of human sacrifices offered upon its crimsoned altars. And still a confiding people are told there is no other way, no alternative left but to fight on, and on, and on. How long, O God! how long is this bleeding, dying people to be deceived and duped by political quacks and speculators in the suffering and life's blood of the nation? How long are the bulls and edicts emanating from Richmond and Washington to be potential to coerce the free people of this country to sacrifice their lives at their behest? In the parlance of the sportsman, they skillfully and adroitly "play into each other's hands" for the overthrow of the constitutional rights and liberties of the people; there is a most singularly marked coincidence in their views in relation to public policy. They agree that written constitutions and the solemn obligations of oaths have but little binding weight in time of war. The freedom of speech and the press has been stricken down. The people's writ of habeas corpus has been suspended, and its right denied to the citizen. The judicial ermine has been invaded, judges forcibly dragged from their courts and imprisoned for judicial decisions. The elective franchise has been abridged, and the voters driven from the polls at the point of the bayonet. Martial law has been declared over districts of country not in rebellion, and the military placed above the civil authorities. Free citizens, not belonging to the military or naval service, have been arrested without process, tried, and sentenced by drum-head courts-martial without counsel or jury, and exiled or incarcerated in military bastilles. These gross and flagrant infractions upon the liberties and clearly-defined constitutional rights of the people have been unblushingly perpetrated under the free institutions of the United States, in the middle of the nineteenth century, under the despotism of military necessity. O degenerate, subjugated sons of a glorious ancestry, whose cheek does not tinge and mantle with shame at the humiliating reflection?

Now, I submit to the House and the country whether the people had not better dispense with the services of officials who in the brief space of three years have reduced the country to its present humiliating condition. Power was temporarily placed in their hands to administer the Government, not to subvert it, or wrest from the people their liberties. They are the servants of the people to execute their will, not their masters to lord it over and oppress them; let them take due and timely notice and govern themselves accordingly. They contemplate, no doubt, by means of the purse and the sword and the vast patronage which they wield, to disregard the will of the people and perpetuate their power. If they succeed in establishing themselves in power by such means, the liberties of the country are irretrievably lost. It is time that the people were aroused to the magnitude and importance of the issues involved in the approaching contest.

For the purpose of rescuing the Government from their hands, preserving the Constitution, and maintaining the Union and the liberties of the people, let us for the time being, if need be, ignore party names and alliances, and unite with Union-loving, conservative men everywhere, to preserve and transmit as a precious boon the legacy of free government. The honest, confiding masses should not be deceived or lulled into false security; the greedy swarms of Federal officers, contractors, and placemen, who are hoarding their ill-gotten wealth at the expense of the toil and sweat of the laborer, will be active and unscrupulous. I fear they have selfish, ambitious, traitorous designs upon the liberties of the country.

By rejecting all propositions looking to a peaceful adjustment they have involved the country in the most terrible, gigantic civil war the world has ever witnessed. The Douglas, Crittenden, Kellogg, and border State propositions were all rejected. The leading representative men of the South offered to accept the Crittenden compromise as a finality, if tendered in good faith by the party in power. When the peace congress was in session in this city, fearing that they might be thwarted in their cherished design of precipitating the country in civil war, they wrote and telegraphed to the Governors of the States, "Send us stiff-backed men or none;" "Ohio, Indiana, and Rhode Island are caving in, and there is some danger of Illinois;" "For God's sake come to the rescue and save the Republican party from rupture;" "Without a little blood-letting the country will not be worth a curse." Now, this shows most clearly that they were opposed to compromise, and were willing to involve the country in war to save the Republican party from "rupture."

As further evidence of their premeditated designs to have war, I submit the testimony of Judge Douglas. He said:

"The South would take my proposition if the Republicans would agree to it." "Many of the Republican leaders desire a dissolution of the Union, and urge war as a means of accomplishing disunion." "We have now reached a point where a compromise on the basis of mutual concessions or disunion and war are inevitable. I prefer a fair and just compromise."

And again, on February 2, 1861, he said:

"They are striving to break up the Union under the pretense of unbounded devotion to it. They are struggling to overthrow the Constitution while professing undying attachment to it and a willingness to make any sacrifice to maintain it. They are trying to plunge the country into civil war as the surest means of destroying the Union, upon the plea of enforcing the laws and protecting the public property. If they can defeat every kind of adjustment or compromise by which the points at issue may be satisfactorily settled, and keep up the irritation so as to induce the border States to follow the cotton States, they will feel certain of the accomplishment of their ultimate design."

"Nothing will gratify them so much or contribute so successfully to their success as the secession of Tennessee and the border States. Every State that withdraws from the Union increases the relative power of northern abolitionists to defeat a satisfactory adjustment, and to bring on a war, which, sooner or later, must end in final separation and recognition of the independence of the two contending sections."

This, Mr. Chairman, is a true and faithful exposition of the animus of the party in power, drawn by a master hand; may it give them "the power to see themselves as others see them." They refused to permit the people to be heard upon the question of compromise, for fear they would decide in favor of peace and thereby thwart their cherished schemes of war and disunion. By reference to the Journals of the House of January 7, 1860, it will be seen that Mr. Clemens proposed to submit the Crittenden compromise to a vote of the people for adoption or rejection; (see resolutions offered by him;) this proposition they rejected by a party vote, many of the honorable members over the way, including the honorable Speaker, voting against it. This refusal to permit the people to be heard on the question of peace or war shows a premeditated intention to precipitate the country in civil war. And since they have succeeded in inaugurating their treasonable machinations against the liberties of the country nothing so rouses the irrepressible ire of these disunionists per se as to mention PEACE; they dread it as the devil does holy water. With swaggering, blubbery gasconade they vociferate traitor, copperhead, disloyal. This stop-thief cry of criminals lacks the merit of originality. They would divert attention and cover their tracks by charging upon others the foul and infamous treason under which their own seared and lacerated consciences are writhing. But the transparent trick, the gauzy texture will not conceal from the searching scrutiny and withering rebuke of the country the gross iniquity and dark perfidy of their crimes. The people, indignant at the imbecility and treachery of those charged with the administration of the Government, are being aroused to impending danger. The rumbling ground-swell from the disabused masses is heard in the dim distance; its audible mutterings fall like the sound of a death-knell upon the ears of the guilty plotters of treason. The "wolves in sheep's clothing" will be disrobed, and their naked deformity exposed to the indignant scrutiny of a deceived and outraged people, so that "they may be known and read of all men." Their day of reckoning is drawing near. In the midst of their public plunder, bloody carnival and bacchanalian revelings their hearts quake, knees tremble, and cheeks blanch as they read the handwriting on the wall, "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting."

Mr. Speaker, the sad, humiliating spectacle is presented to the country of its liberties being crucified and put to an ignominious death in the house of its pretended friends. They insist on giving the last dollar and the last man, but exhibit prudential caution that their dollar is the last one taken, and they the last men to go. They do not want the southern States in the Union, consequently take care to prosecute the war in such a manner and for such purposes as to prevent their return; its continuance is their political capital stock, and they would procrastinate it as long as they can hold the offices, get fat contracts, and speculate in the blood and suffering of the country. When the war is stopped there will be $2,000,000 per day less tax for the people to pay; consequently, minus that amount to lavish among the fawning minions of power, the speculation, fraud, and plunder of the public Treasury would have to cease; the Mississippi river would be opened to navigation; the railroad monopolies could no longer extort from the farmer of the West half the value of his production for transportation to market. This war has been a godsend to monopolists, speculators, shoddy contractors, Government thieves, and public plunderers generally; they are amassing princely fortunes, rolling in wealth, reveling in their ill-gotten gains; you may set them down for the war; they "will go to the last dollar and to the last man." These Shylocks will hold mortgages in the shape of Government bonds on the property and industry of the country; a bill of sale on the sweat and toil of honest labor for unborn generations.

Mr. Speaker, it is not marvelous that New England is for the war. By means of her railroad monopolies, fishing bounties, and high tariffs she impoverishes the balance of the country, and its wealth flows into the lap of her pampered aristocracy; she, as a matter of course, favors a vigorous prosecution of the war. Did you ever know the universal Yankee nation to let up with their hands to the elbows in the pockets of the people? The history of this peculiar people furnishes no such example; they are still true to their nature and their instincts. Perhaps I should notice the oft-repeated charge from the other side of the House that the Democratic party are hostile to the soldiers. No aspersion could be more groundless or ungenerous. It is true they sought and advised peace rather than to have the country scourged with a devastating civil war; they would that this bitter cup might have passed, and the country not be compelled to drink it to its bitter dregs; but when their counsels were rejected and the conflict upon us there was no factious opposition interposed to the party in power trying their plan; money and men were voted without stint; Democrats vied with Republicans in filling the ranks until the first call of seventy-five thousand has swelled to over two million, a full half from the Democratic party. Such is the case in my own State, which has always been ahead of all calls. It is true there is a deficit from the Republican districts; but they have been more than filled by the excess from ours, and in case of emergency they can easily "stamp flaming giants from the earth" to fill up their quotas.

When the tocsin of war was sounded the people rallied under the flag of the country under the assurance that it was necessary to preserve the Government, and that it was to be prosecuted to enforce the laws and suppress the rebellion, and not to interfere with or overthrow the institutions or independence of the States. I am frank to say I did not rely upon these assurances, but have no fault to find with those having more faith than myself who deemed it their duty to enter the service, and cheerfully award to them the meed of patriotic self-sacrificing devotion to what they deemed the best interest of the country, and they are justly entitled to our respect, sympathy, and support; recognizing to its fullest extent this duty and obligation, I have uniformly voted supplies, increase of pay, and pensions for our soldiers. But, sir, when and in what way have the party in power exhibited their kind regard for the welfare of our soldiers? Is it in the reckless and wanton sacrifice of their lives to the Moloch of abolition? Is it in their fanatical, radical measures which have obliterated the Union sentiment of the South and united their people against us? Is it by colonizing the North with the degraded Africans from the South, so that the soldier on returning home will have to work by his side, and compete with him for place and pay? Is it by placing the corp d'Afrique upon an equality with them in the ranks, and thereby humiliating their pride and wounding their honor? If their love for the soldier had been anything more than hollow-hearted pretense why did they remain in session over five months without reporting a bill to increase their pay? They knew that since our soldiers left home the expense of living had greatly increased; that their families had to pay double the ordinary price for the necessities of life; that labor at home was commanding from a dollar and a quarter to three dollars per day. Why, then, should the soldier be expected to endure the hardships and dangers incident to war for less compensation than his services would command at home? These exclusive friends of the soldier have reduced his rations, and in their munificent generosity and fullness of heart have actually increased his pay ten cents per day, up, up to the prodigal sum of fifty-three and a third cents a day. This lavish increase of ten cents will enable them, if judiciously expended, to purchase from one quarter to one third of a yard of calico or brown domestic to clothe their families at home, and as for such luxuries as tea and coffee, they are not to be thought of; "rye coffee is good enough if the negroes can be free."

Unfortunately for this side of the House, our estimable no-party Speaker has failed, inadvertently no doubt, to assign us any such position on committees as would enable us to exercise any controlling influence for the benefit of the soldier or the country. I believe the only chairman awarded us is that on mileage, over which my distinguished colleague, [Mr. Robinson,] honored with six years' congressional experience, presides. But thankful for small favors in our humble sphere, at the tail end of committees, we have done the best we could. Early in the session, at my instance, a resolution was adopted directing the Military Committee to inquire into the expediency of increasing the pay of our officers and soldiers, but their attention has been so exclusively engrossed in miscegenation projects for the benefit of "American citizens of African descent" that little time was left to devote to the secondary interests of mere white soldiers. Becoming impatient after waiting several months for a report, I offered another resolution instructing the committee to report a bill at an early day increasing the pay of officers and soldiers at least thirty-three per cent. This presented a dilemma; if it passed a bill would have to be reported; if they voted it down it would disclose to the soldiers and the country their hypocrisy. In their extremity they brought to the rescue the fertile resources and parliamentary skill of the distinguished member from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Stevens;] in a crisis he is their reliance to furnish brains. He arose and gravely announced a desire to debate the resolution; this, under the rules, passes it over without a vote; a complacent smile passes over their anxious countenances at the success of their tactician. The honorable Speaker has never yet been able to reach the resolution. When the Military Committee introduced their bill to reduce the rations and increase the soldier's pay ten cents per day, I appealed to the chairman to permit an amendment to be made inserting twenty dollars in lieu of sixteen dollars per month; this he peremptorily refused, but demanded, and the House sustained, the previous question, thereby cutting off all amendments and debate. Again, when the report of the committee of conference on the military bill was under discussion, I moved to recommit the bill with instructions to report it back with an increase of pay to the soldier of at least twenty dollars per month. This proposition, at the instance of a member of the committee, [Mr. Farnsworth,] was ruled by the Speaker to be out of order.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, the above facts that the country may determine who are the true friends of the soldier. They may well ask to be delivered from such friends.

Honorable members over the way tell us they have been doing a nice thing for the soldiers by the bill of this session in dividing and parceling out between them and the negroes the plantations of the South, and granting them homesteads by robbing other people of the fruits of their labor and converting them to their own use. I think they have greatly mistaken and underrated the character and pluck of our citizen soldiers if they suppose they entered the service for purposes of pillage and plunder; they are not homeless freebooters to be seduced from the paths of honor by "beauty and booty;" they left homes acquired by honest industry, and domestic associations more endearing and tempting than the steal-yourself-a-home, negro-equality doctrine tendered by the party in power. Hence I conclude that these loud-mouthed professions of love for the soldier and the Union are off of the same piece, slack-twisted, badly wove, and not large enough to cover their nakedness. The patent truth is they are not for the Constitution or the Union, but, wishing to subvert them, oppose peace and urge war; they say that a little blood-letting is healthful for the body-politic; that the tree of liberty must be watered with the blood of her citizens; that there is no remission for sins but by the shedding of blood; that we must cry havoc and let slip the dogs of war; that all great nations have had civil wars, and the time has come for ours. Sir, in an evil hour these counsels prevailed. Still they hesitated to startle the country by fully showing their purposes. In ninety days, with seventy-five thousand men, the job was to be completed and the breakfast spell over. We have now reached the fourth year of the war, and they modestly ask us to extend the time that they may continue to "peg away" for four years longer. Two millions of our young men, the hope and flower of the country, have gone into the service; two hundred and fifty thousand lives have been sacrificed; as many more with shattered and broken constitutions and with maimed and mutilated persons still linger in our midst, objects of the nation's bounty and sympathy. A fearful responsibility rests upon the guilty authors of this suffering and sacrifice of life. The full measure of just punishment would be too terrible. May neither their daily meditations nor nightly visions be haunted by sepulchral specters of departed spirits.

"Thou canst not say I did it: never shake Thy gory locks at me."

Mr. Speaker, the life of the nation is in imminent peril; the agonizing throes and death-rattle admonish us of approaching dissolution; but while there is life there is still hope. As the shipwrecked mariner seizes with dying hope to the last floating spar, so let the people rally around and cling to the Constitution as the sheet-anchor of our hope. Their duties and responsibilities are fearfully great and cannot be ignored. They owe it to their sires, the wives of their bosoms, the innocent prattlers that dandle upon their knees, to unborn generations, and to their own manhood, to preserve free government and transmit constitutional liberty as the most invaluable legacy. The Federal Constitution with all its limitations and just balances must be maintained; the reserved rights of the States and the people protected; the union of the States must be preserved and perpetuated; the personal rights and liberties of the citizen must be upheld and defended; free speech, a free press, and a free ballot, cannot be surrendered by a free people; these inalienable, clearly-defined, expressly guaranteed constitutional rights, invaluable to freemen, formidable only to tyrants, must be protected, maintained, and defended from any and every assault, from whatever source or under whatever pretext made, by every lawful means, peaceably if they can, but forcibly if they must. To slavishly surrender their priceless liberties would show them to be craven-hearted cowards unworthy to enjoy them.

The State of Illinois has furnished from one hundred and fifty to two hundred thousand of her brave sons to suppress treason in front, and could, if necessary, duplicate the number, and still has left a Democratic reserve of one hundred and fifty thousand home guards of true, reliable men, who have never bowed the knee to Baal, able and willing, if it should become necessary, to protect and defend the constitutional rights and liberties of the people against any fire in the rear by home traitors.

One of the most humiliating reflections which forces itself upon the country is its barrenness of able statesmen. The national councils are filled, with but few exceptions, (which, of course, includes this Congress,) with men woefully dwarfed in intellect and patriotism, the scum that rises and floats to the surface during the simmering blubbery of the political caldron.

In view of this patent deficiency there was an aptness and pertinence in the supplication recently offered up with great unction and pathos by the Chaplain of the Senate, which is said to run as follows: "O Lord, give us more brains we beseech Thee; more brains, Lord, more brains. Thou knowest our destitution and need of more brains." The President should without delay, by proclamation, make the matter of "more brains" a special subject of prayer. Surprise has been manifested in some quarters at the House selecting as their spiritual teacher a Chaplain who repudiates the evangelical Trinity and denies the divinity of our Saviour, but bear in mind we live in a progressive age. By the new standard of orthodoxy supplications for war and negro equality supersede the gospel of peace; the elastic consciences of the party in power are not to be hampered by the obsolete old-fogy doctrines of the old Constitution and the old Bible.

At a time like the present the utility or good taste of indulging in crimination and recrimination may be seriously questioned. It can scarcely be sanctioned in the way of retaliation, but, to refrain under such provocation would have subjected the meekness of Moses to a severe test.

Now, permit me to suggest that party and personal asperities be dropped, and we apply ourselves to the higher and nobler objects of saving the country. With this purpose in view, will honorable members over the way consent for the time being, at least, to abjure the partisan and assume the stature of statesmen? It requires an effort on your part to sever party ties and breast the dashing waves of fanaticism; there is more ignoble ease in floating with the rubbish in the current, and pandering to the passion and prejudice of the hour. You have distinguished precedents for breasting the tide, by resisting popular passion and sectional fanaticism. In 1850 our argus-eyed statesmen descried in the dim distance a small dark spot, no larger than a man's hand, lowering over our political horizon, gathering in volume and blackness; they snuffed the danger in the tainted breeze. Behold Kentucky's gifted orator and distinguished statesman as he leaves again the endearments of home and enters the arena of his former glory. For four decades his clarion voice had been the talismanic wand that stirred into quicker pulsations and thrilled the national heart; crowded, spell-bound Senates hung in wonder upon his words, entranced and electrified by the magic inspiration of his burning eloquence. He had retired from the stormy turmoil of political strife to enjoy coveted quiet amid the ambrosial shades of his own beloved Ashland. At the call of an imperiled country his stooping form becomes erect, his dim eye brightens. He again enters the Senate; party spirit and strife is hushed into silence. By common consent he is awarded the distinction of chairman of the conference committee of thirteen, composed in equal proportions of the distinguished men of both parties. For months they labored, vying with each other to avert the gathering storm, and sustaining their venerable chairman.

Illinois' favorite statesman, the lamented Douglas, exhibited in a remarkable degree the moral greatness and heroism to stem the tide and breast the dashing waves of fanaticism as its angry billows beat around the old ship of State, threatening to engulf the hopes of the nation within its yawning vortex. For his action in sustaining the committee he was denounced, persecuted, and vilified, but with the bitterest acrimony at his own home in Chicago; here the city council and clergy openly arrayed themselves against the measures of pacification adopted by Congress, and the popular frenzy was so great that he said he could travel through that part of the country by the light of his own burning effigies. Nor was Massachusetts' illustrious statesman exempt from the malignant obloquy of the viperous tongue for attempting to stay and roll back the flowing tide of political fanaticism engendered in the hot-house of abolitionism in his own State; when he returned to his constituents from the Congress in which he had taken so conspicuous a part in sustaining the compromise measures of 1850, his action was so obnoxious to the vitiated sectional sentiments that he could not have been elected a justice of the peace in any township in Massachusetts; he sought to vindicate his course before his constituents, but they tried to stifle and suppress freedom of speech. The city authorities of Boston, to their shame and reproach be it spoken, refused to permit him to speak in Faneuil Hall; its doors were shut against the defender of the Constitution, the man who had done more than any other to give a name and character to New England. Oh, shame on the base ingratitude, the dark perfidy, the bitter malignity of sectional fanaticism! The great Webster never loomed up in such grand and godlike proportions; excluded from liberty's consecrated halls, the people assemble in Boston common, and there, beneath the azure arch and starry canopy of heaven, he bares his frosted locks and massive brow to the free rustling breezes; the pure water gushes from the smitten rock in terse Anglo-Saxon words, that should be written in letters of gold, appealing to the fanaticism of New England to learn to subdue their passions.

These truly great men could soar above passion and prejudice and sever the iron shackles of party.

In 1852, through the national conventions of the two great political parties, the country ratified and indorsed the compromise measures of 1850 as a finality.

Mr. Chairman, may we not learn wisdom by the examples and experience of the past? I would implore honorable members to abjure party for the paramount interest of our common country, and respectfully commend to their favorable consideration these illustrious examples as eminently worthy of their noblest and most exalted aspirations. Their names and memories will live green and fresh in the hearts of the people, revered and venerated by the friends of personal and constitutional liberty throughout the world, while the fomenters of civil war, the bloodthirsty Marats and Robespierres, like their prototypes, will be a reproach and hissing, a byword and stench in the nostrils of honest men.

This side of the House is powerless to give relief to our bleeding, dying country. Its destinies for weal or woe, with all its glorious memories of the past and precious hopes of the future, hang tremblingly in the balance in your hands. Will you save us our liberties, and preserve us our blood-bought inheritance? This boon we demand at your hands; we demand it in behalf of thirty million free-born Anglo-Saxons, whose throbbing hearts implore and wistful eyes are anxiously turned toward this capital. This you can still do. Will you do it? We do not expect you to relieve us from the burdens of the $3,000,000,000 of national debt created by this war; this is not in your power. You cannot expiate for nor breathe new life into the two hundred and fifty thousand brave men wantonly sacrificed, I fear, by your war policy. You cannot restore them to their stricken and disconsolate friends, nor fill the aching void that pals these bereft and desolate hearthstones. You cannot close the gaping wounds nor ease the piercing agony of a hundred thousand brave men languishing on the field and in the hospitals. You cannot bind up the broken heart nor stay the gushing tear of the inconsolable widow. You cannot meliorate the piteous condition, soothe the plaintive wail, nor hush the unbid sob of the moaning, heart-stricken orphan. These things you cannot do. But you can yet give us back a free, independent judiciary, the writ of habeas corpus, a free ballot, free speech, and a free press. Give us back the old Constitution of our fathers, with all its sacred memories and cherished associations; though torn and rent and perverted as it has been, we love it still; strong arms will uphold and warm hearts cluster and nestle around it. Give us back as it was the old Union of our fathers, without a star erased or stricken from the bright galaxy of its effulgent constellation, with the old flag of our fathers with all its ample folds still floating proudly in triumph above us.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to occupy the attention of the House at this late moment, but I desire to present briefly my views on the pending question. This bill, having passed the Senate by a constitutional majority, only awaits the approval of this House. It proposes to introduce into the political contest of the present year a measure of great public concern. It presents the question, shall the Constitution of the United States be amended? In view, sir, of the present condition of the country, no graver question has ever challenged the attention of the American Congress. The merits of the amendment are of comparatively little moment. The more serious question is, shall the Constitution be amended at all? Are the times propitious for the consideration of such a question? Is it a time to weaken in the public mind, already in a state of revolution, the authority of established principles by innovation and change? I cannot but express my earnest regret that this new element of discord has been forced upon the country. Of all of the measures of this disastrous Administration, each in its turn producing new calamities, this attempt to tamper with the Constitution threatens the most permanent injury. I speak, sir, without reference to the merits of the amendment. If it were ever so wise in the abstract the present condition of the country would demand its postponement. The bitter experience of three years and a half of uninterrupted misfortune ought to have taught the Republican party the fallibility of their judgment, fatality of their policy; but the more fatal their measures the more reckless their experiments. What a series of promises and failures! The act of confiscation was to terrify the South and more than supply the expenses of the war. Yet it only impoverished the Treasury by hosts of new officers, and swelled the ranks of the rebel army.

The proclamation of the President emancipating the slaves alike of the loyal and disloyal in ten States of the South was to strike an irresistible blow. The promise was fulfilled, but the blow fell upon us, and its effect was to unite a divided South and divide the public opinion of the North. But the arming of the African would create an irresistible army eager to redress the servitude of ages; but it only deepened and embittered, if it were possible, the contest; confirmed the wavering in their disloyalty, and exhausted the public Treasury; withdrew the negro from effective labor in your service, and has failed to add the tithe of a hair to the effective force of your army. Your pet system of finance would sustain the public credit for indefinite years; and if, at the command of Hamilton, dead public credit rose to its feet, Secretary Chase was to accomplish more; yet even now the system totters to its fall. Capital riots in excessive gains; the wealth of the country rapidly centralizes, and labor already feels the weight of oppression. Over the united judgment of your opponents, and in the favoritism of wealth you ingrafted the principle of commutation in the act for the conscription of citizens in the Army, and after certain States of the East have obtained its benefits you propose its repeal. The measure was a crime or a mistake in the beginning, but its repeal would excite a just and an indignant resistance, it may be even to violence, because its enactment and ultimate repeal would create an unendurable inequality in the burdens of the war between the States of the East and the West.

But why enumerate? What measure of this Administration has failed to be fatal? Every step in your progress has been a mistake. I use the mildest term of censure. While you leave the fundamental principles of the Republic unchanged we may submit, but how can we consent that the ephemeral politicians of the hour shall assume the task of revising the grand work of the grand old master workmen? For sixty years the Constitution has remained untouched and unchanged. Not one of the vital principles has ever been impaired except, indeed, by recent usurpation. The twelve amendments made by the men who formed the Constitution were adopted in the same spirit that presided over their original counsels, were but stronger guarantees against the Federal power; stronger guarantees of the domestic sovereignty of the States, and gave such perfection to the noble instrument that for sixty years it has commanded the veneration of the American people and excited the admiration of the world; and through all of this period the eloquence of the wisest and purest statesmen has been exhausted in impressing its excellence and the duty of maintaining it on the successive generations of the American people. And how have the people illustrated in this desperate contest their devotion to this Constitution! It has inspired a heroism the most exalted, an enthusiasm as fervid and self-denying as religious faith. It has called into the field a countless army of citizens, and sanctified the grave of every hero who has fallen in its defense. It is this instrument and its sacred power over the public mind that you would impair. It is a part of the new gospel that you preach. Your deity condemns with a fanatic voice all that is sacred and venerable, and a filial remembrance of our fathers and an imitation of their example in their duty to God and their country become impiety and treason.

The mariner whose gallant vessel is driven by the storm on an inhospitable coast looks out with eager solicitude to catch the warnings of the beacon's light. If the firm rock on which the beacon stands can resist the rage of the elements, he may outride the tempest, but if the beacon light is overwhelmed, the gallant ship is left to the mercy of the storm, and must perish. The Constitution, the serene light of the past, with all of the sacred memories of the past ages clustering around it, sanctified by tradition and history, is the only power under God that can save this Republic. Its serene wisdom, its sublime principles, refuting the mad fanaticism of the hour, is the only power that will lead us back into the path of safety.

The fanaticism of the North and the madness and treason of the South have controlled the public mind but a few years. The fall of the great statesmen of the last generation was seized upon as a favored moment for the reign of faction, and its reign has been terrible, intensified by all that fanaticism could suggest and ambition inspire; and fearful, sir, as is now the condition of our prostrate country, I cannot yet believe, sir, that these mad elements are destined to totally overthrow this once noble Republic. I cannot believe, sir, that four years of pitiless and destructive war, terrible as it is, will destroy the strong foundations of this Republic; the fiery rage of fanaticism must burn itself to cinders. Ambition must expose its base aspirations to its deluded followers. The youth and vigor and intelligence of the American people must sooner or later assert their power for humanity and justice and peace. Four years of anarchy and ruin cannot obliterate the memory and tradition of ages. If fortunately the Constitution shall be left unimpaired, and in a favored moment under a wiser administration of our affairs it shall be brought forward as presenting the basis and conditions of reunion and of peace, who shall say, sir, that this monument of the wisdom of our fathers, this solemn guarantee of equity and justice, will not reunite the bleeding fragments of the Republic? If, sir, this Union is ever restored, it must and will be under this Constitution. If under the promptings of vengeance or passion, or instigated by the fierce fanaticism of the hour you amend this Constitution, you render desperate the attempt to restore the Union. The subjugation of armies will not avail; you must obtain the voluntary submission of the people. They may submit, I have ever believed they would submit to the old Government of their fathers. If you change that Government by constitutional amendment, what hope have you in the light of human experience of a voluntary submission?

To submit to the Constitution would be to submit to a Government once revered by them as by us; to submit to a Constitution remodeled by yourselves is submission, not to a common Constitution, but to you. It would be madness to overlook the pride of character that pervades and controls every part of the American people. If you amend the Constitution simply to render it hostile to the institutions of the South, you will not restore the Union. However fortunate you may be, subjugation is all that is left, and subjugation implies a standing army, a military republic, vaulting ambition, despotism. But in this march of events, with the sanctity of the old Constitution impaired and weakened in the public mind by innovation, what disintegration will occur, what frightful chasms will open, through that broad country now loyal to the Constitution. Sir, all the experience of history warns us against this suicidal act. All changes in the fundamental principles of government are perilous. A wise statesman will never attempt them except upon the most deliberate consideration, and then only when imperatively demanded and the danger more than counterbalanced by the manifest benefits. Charondas, the Locrian legislator, enacted that he who proposed a change in the laws of the republic should do so in the midst of the people with a rope around his neck; that if the change he proposed should be rejected he should be instantly hanged; and for two hundred years Locria was a prosperous republic. The rash temerity that would seize upon the moment of a nation's weakness to change the principles of government to gratify the insane passions of the hour would be lightly punished by the Locrian law. This proposition is brought forward as a measure of war. I well remember, sir, when, on the 27th day of February, 1861, a proposition to submit an amendment of the Constitution to a direct vote of the whole people was brought before this House, a measure of peace, when it was manifest that no other measure would disarm the ambitious conspirators of the South by quieting the apprehensions of the southern people. I refer to the Crittenden compromise. It was brought forward as a compromise. It was to be submitted to the vote of the whole people. It was the belief of its venerable author that it would prevent civil war. It was brought before this House by a distinguished gentleman from Virginia. The measure was defeated by 80 votes in the affirmative to 113 in the negative. Every negative vote was given by a Republican, except that of Thomas C. Hindman, now a general in the rebel army. Four gentlemen are still upon this floor who voted in the affirmative, S. S. Cox, of Ohio; ROBERT MALLORY, of Kentucky; JAMES C. ROBINSON, of Illinois; and WILLIAM S. HOLMAN, of Indiana. Among the southern votes in its favor are John A. Gilmer, of South Carolina, then, and I believe still, an earnest friend of the Union; John S. Millson, the pure and virtuous Representative from Virginia, still loyal to his country; Zebulon B. Vance, the present Governor of North Carolina; and Thomas S. Bocoek, of Virginia.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1864.

NEW SERIES. No. 186.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana what position Thomas S. Bocoek now holds. Is he not speaker of the rebel congress?

Mr. HOLMAN. He is speaker of the rebel congress. It is a striking fact, however, sir, that such men, drifting ultimately into rebellion, on the 27th of February, 1861, were eager to avoid the terrible calamities of war by voting in favor of submitting these propositions to the people, while my loyal friend from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] then voting against that measure of peace because it was a proposition to amend the Constitution, now proposes to amend the Constitution as a measure of war. The gentleman from Illinois offered a resolution in that same connection, from the committee of thirty-three, that the Constitution of the United States did not need to be amended but to be obeyed.

Sixteen gentlemen are still upon this floor who voted in the negative; one of them, at least, according to his declaration that the Constitution required to be obeyed, not amended. But that was a measure of compromise and of peace, this is a measure of war, of disintegration, of ruin. The voice of humanity and peace pleaded for the one; fanaticism clamors for the other. In behalf of peace and the Union, you would not even permit the people to vote on the question of constitutional amendment. We shall see whether, in behalf of disunion and war, you will press this amendment upon a distracted country. I have said, sir, that in the formation and adoption of the Constitution and its amendments, the last of which was adopted on the 25th day of September, 1804, there was an extraordinary unity of public counsel and a state of profound peace. Upon questions so grave and important party and faction were silent, and statesmen of diverging views, in the spirit of compromise, directed the counsels of the people. But this amendment is brought forward as a mere party measure. It is the attempt to consummate the policy of sectional domination which formed, and has ever controlled, the Republican party, the policy which armed the southern conspirators with the power by which they forced their people into revolution. You propose to effect this amendment by the power of party, by the strength, not of deliberate public will, but of party organization. You make it a plank in your political platform. The danger of attempting so grave a measure through a party organization is well illustrated by the farewell address of the illustrious citizen whom it was once our pride to call the Father of his Country. Alas! what a country now since his counsels have been spurned and forgotten! He says:

"I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the State, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you, in the most solemn manner, against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally."

"The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge, natural to party dissension, which, in different ages and countries, has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and, sooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

"Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind; (which, nevertheless, ought not to be entirely out of sight,) the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it."

Sir, if the noble figure which adorns this Hall upon your right, and which now looks down so calmly upon us, with a sheathed sword by its side, and its hand resting on "the Constitution of the United States" of America could be for a moment animated by the patriot spirit of him it represents, how would that calm eye flash upon this House! What words of fiery indignation would overwhelm the party tricksters who, having brought his country to the brink of ruin, now in the rage of party spirit assail the Constitution signed by his immortal name, the proudest monument of his wisdom and of that of his illustrious comrades! Sir, as his eye surveyed the men who, holding the destiny of his country in their hands, have betrayed their trust, and now prepare to consummate this parhizical act, how would its fiery luster terrify and alarm! Sir, he "would look on them but to blast, he would speak but to curse." He would speak as Washington alone could speak, "Lay not your hand upon the Constitution. It is the only anchor of hope that is left for you and for your children. It was formed in the spirit of fraternal concession. It embodies the matured wisdom of the Revolution. Its spirit would have preserved my country in prosperity and peace. You have rejected its wisdom and my country is in ruins. Lay not your hand upon it. It is all that is left of the rich legacy of the past; traitors assail it with open violence and you by a more deadly because secret assault. You would extinguish its vital power on the miserable pretense of reform. Let it alone; it may again under wiser counsels revive and redeem my country. How dare you attempt its amendment, you who have neither the patriotism to comprehend nor the virtue to administer it in the spirit of its authors!" Such, sir, would be the words of Washington if he could speak to this House.

But independent, sir, of the agitation of the public mind and the vicissitudes of war, are not the times inauspicious for the work of constitutional amendment, comparing the era when the Constitution was adopted and the present? In the development of the nobler attributes of mankind the era of the Revolution is the most remarkable in history. Patience, forbearance, and self-denial were the common virtues. It was the era of elevated public and private virtue, of fraternity, conciliation, concession, and over all a patriotism in which individual interests were forgotten, and all sacrificed to the public good. Armies poorly clad fought without pay, private citizens exhausted their estates in the public service, and generals and officers of every grade, following the example of their illustrious leader, spurned the thought of compensation beyond actual expenses incurred in the line of duty, and the unworthy citizen who sought to coin fortune out of the grief of his country sank under the universal scorn. Such was the spirit of the age which gave us the Constitution. And what, sir, of the age which would amend it? It is an age, sir, in which the masses of the people emulate the virtues of their fathers, but in which organized party with the insolence of a braggart and the arrogance of a tyrant usurps the supremacy of the public will. It is an era of venality and selfishness; the leaders of public opinion sacrifice their country for private end even to the baseness of self-aggrandizement, coining into private fortune the life-blood of the Republic, and the very statutes of public law look to the aggrandizement of the rich and the oppression of the poor; an age, sir, of truckling subserviency to power, when men are found base enough to "crook the pregnant hinges of the knee, Where thrift may follow fawning;"

when the venal courtier with blasphemous words dares to compare the first citizen of the Republic, but first only in position, the dispenser of millions of patronage, light and airy in the midst of the general grief, partaking in the gay and festive scenes of the capital, while the wail of grief swells up from countless fields of battle, to the immortal Washington who suffered in every grief of his bleeding country, and on his bended knees in the simple majesty of prayer stormed the very gates of heaven in her behalf. The one, sir, is the offspring of a reckless and fanatic party, the mere instrument of party power; the other, sir, was a gift of God to mankind. Washington, sir, was a type of his period, Abraham Lincoln is a type of his party. Is such a time auspicious to revise the work of the patriot fathers?

But as to the merits of the proposed amendment. You propose to invade the domestic policy of States so solemnly guaranteed by the Constitution and without which the Union would never have been formed, and abolish African slavery, a subject foreign to the Constitution, for it has no relation to domestic concerns of a State. Its purpose was to unite the States, while each as to domestic government was still a sovereign, as parts of one nation each subordinate to the Federal head. You now propose to abolish African slavery throughout the United States. I am, sir, a firm advocate of the rights of the States. I would maintain these rights with the same fidelity that I would the rights of Federal Government. I am neither the advocate nor the apologist of slavery. In a war for the Constitution and the Union I would not have slavery weigh a feather against the progress of our arms. If it went down in such a struggle, even the loyal men of the South could not complain. But, sir, the Federal Constitution is in no sense responsible for slavery. It is not for slavery nor against slavery, as it is not for or against any other domestic institution of the States. It has not the remotest connection with such questions, and even the clause for the return of fugitives from justice and labor is but a measure of comity to preserve the friendly relations of the States. The change you propose is a fundamental change of your Government never contemplated by its founders.

But, sir, what are you to gain by the amendment? In Maryland, Missouri, and Virginia, at least to the extent of the recognized powers of these States, slavery is already abolished. The President's proclamation, solemnly indorsed by yourselves and the validity of which you assert, has declared slavery abolished in every State in rebellion except Tennessee. Tennessee, then, a State full of loyal citizens, and the loyal State of Kentucky, with sixty thousand Union soldiers in the field, are the only States to be affected, according to your own theory. The slaves of the disloyal in those States have already been impressed into your employment, so that upon your own theory this provision will only affect loyal citizens who, through every misfortune, have adhered to the cause of their country. Sir, will this act of violence, this usurpation of a majority under the spur of party organization, increase the loyalty of those whose rights you impair? Is your condition such, after the terrible effects of your policy on this subject, to justify you in still further impairing your cause in the southern States? Are you so strong and irresistible, laying aside all questions of justice and good faith, that you can afford to provoke new and permanent causes of hostility on the part of men now loyal to the Union? So far as this measure affects the interests of your citizens in the slaveholding States it can only provoke indignation and bitterness. If Kentucky wishes to abolish African slavery it is well. I should rejoice to know that she regarded such to be her true policy. It is her own domestic institution; in good faith and justice it is a measure beyond your power. If consummated, it is but an act of violence. If in the reckless arrogance of political power you assume to annul rights guaranteed by your fathers and enjoyed for ages—the rights of domestic government—and provoke to just indignation a loyal people, the result of the folly should fall upon your own heads; but instead of that you will attempt to meet the consequences by new drains upon the manhood of the North. But I warn gentlemen that there is some limit to the duty of forbearance.

But what will be the effect on the negroes thus to be enfranchised? Will they increase your military power? Why, sir, by your policy you are now availing yourselves of the services of every negro within the lines of your Army. In spite of proclamations and laws three and a half millions remain passively within the rebel lines. You only reach them as your army advances, and then subject them to any service you desire. You never dream of consulting their wishes. As to them your past experience proves that this amendment would be a nullity. It would only affect the temper and spirit of men still loyal to your cause. It may do more; it may confirm in the public mind the belief that the war in the secret councils of your ruling cabal is not for the Union; that if the Union cannot be restored with slavery abolished the separation shall be eternal. I charge, indeed, that such is the purpose of leading men in the ranks of the Republican party.

But, sir, the amendment goes further. It confers on Congress the power to invade any State to enforce the freedom of the African in war or peace. What is the meaning of all that? Is freedom the simple exemption from personal servitude? No, sir, in the language of America it means the right to participate in government, the freedom for which our fathers resisted the British empire. Mere exemption from servitude is a miserable idea of freedom. A pariah in the State, a subject, but not a citizen, holding any right at the will of the governing power. What is this but slavery? It exists in my own noble State. Then, sir, this amendment has some significance. Your policy, directed in its main purpose to the enfranchisement of a people who have looked with indifference on your struggle, who have given their strength to your enemies, and then the constitutional power to force them into freedom, to citizenship. If such be your purpose, why deceive a noble and confiding people? Your purpose in this amendment is not to increase the efficiency of your Army or to diminish the power of your enemies. No, sir; you diminish the one and increase the other. You run the hazard of all that to gratify your visionary fanaticism, the elevation of the African to the august rights of citizenship. The Federal power to invade the States for this purpose, as proposed by this amendment, strikes down the corner-stone of the Republic, the local sovereignty of the States, the only resistance this day to a central despotism, the event foreseen and thus guarded against by our fathers. Not only then, sir, the time, the condition of the country, the distracted state of the public mind, the actual danger which it must provoke, the absence of any promised benefit to our arms; not only all these plead in the voice of a supplicating and bleeding country against this new act of folly and madness, but the fatal change it proposes in the relation of the States to the Federal Government cries out against it. This act, sir, if it shall have any effect at all, must be fatal; fatal to the very life of the Constitution, fatal to the fundamental principles of the Republic, the right, the irrepressible right of the States to domestic government. Policy and prudence condemn it; and if it were possible, sir, the very ashes of the Revolution would cry out against this subordination of the States in domestic affairs to the Federal power.

We entered upon this war, sir, with a united North and a divided South, with overwhelming advantages in all the sinews of war, more than twenty to one. With a patriotism never surpassed the people have given you every power you demanded both of men and money. You have had the whole vast resources of the country under your control. Congress, almost without a dissenting voice, and without a moment's delay, has passed every measure you have required; the courage and spirit of your gallant armies has been all that a patriot could desire; and yet, sir, such has been the imbecility and fanaticism of your policy that you have united the South, you have divided the public opinion of the North, and torn the country into factions; you have sacrificed a half a million of the very flower of our youth, you have imposed upon the country the most appalling debt, a debt which will crush labor for ages to come; all of this in three years and a half; and yet, sir, what have you accomplished? By directing these mighty energies to one end, the overthrow of the armed rebellion, with the rights of the States and of the masses of the South unimpaired, a year and a half of war would have seen the authority of the Constitution reestablished. Now who can predict the issue? Your policy will not save but will ruin the country, and this constitutional amendment suggests the danger that you already propose to abandon the Union as you have virtually done by your bill for reconstruction, if your policy with reference to the African shall ultimately fail. This Administration is weighed in the balance and found wanting; it inspires no further hope; under God the salvation of the Republic rests only in the hands of the people.

But I will not despair of my country. The Constitution, though trampled upon, is still unchanged. I trust in God it will stand to illuminate with the serene light of the past the darkness that gathers around us, that a people worthy of the Republic and worthy to be free will snatch it from the hands of its enemies and cling to it as the only foundation of hope.

And then, on motion of Mr. ELIOT, (at half past eleven o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 15, 1864.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. BOWMAN.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORGAN presented a petition of citizens of Ulster county, New York, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FOOT presented two petitions of citizens of Vermont, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military and naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SUMNER presented six petitions of men and women of the United States, praying for the abolition of slavery, and such an amendment of the Constitution as will forever prohibit its existence in any portion of the Union; which were referred to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

Mr. POMEROY presented the memorial of Henry Charles d'Aha, praying that certain moneys alleged to have been placed by him in the hands of the Government may be refunded; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

JUAN MIRANDA.

Mr. CARLILE. Yesterday when the bill (S. No. 238) for the settlement of private land claims in the State of California was before the body on a motion for its indefinite postponement, anxious as I have shown myself to be not to delay the business of the Senate, I did not discharge probably my duty by making a statement to the Senate in relation to it; I feel, therefore, that it is due to myself to appeal to some member of the majority who voted for the indefinite postponement to move a reconsideration of that vote. The Senator from California, [Mr. CONNESS], who differs with me in opinion about it, will at least bear me witness that I have endeavored to accommodate my action to suit his convenience; and I should be glad if the vote postponing the bill should be reconsidered, so that I could make a statement and present it to the Senate in the light in which it has appeared to me. Then let the Senate act upon it. I will not interfere with the business of the Senate by calling it up at an unreasonable hour if it should be reconsidered and allowed to remain.

Mr. FOOT. I will answer to that appeal so far as to move the reconsideration under the statement of the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered?

Mr. CONNESS. I should prefer on this motion to reconsider to hear whatever the Senator has to say additionally on the measure. I have of course the hope that the Senate will not reconsider the vote. I forbore saying to the Senate all that I desired to say when the bill was under consideration, in deference to what I knew to be the wishes of the Senate, and also with regard to what I knew to be the near approach of the termination of the session, knowing how valuable time was.

Mr. CARLILE. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him. Let the vote be reconsidered, and I will promise it shall not be called up until it suits the convenience of the Senator. I do not wish now to interfere with the morning business. It is suggested that it is unusual to make a statement on a bare motion to reconsider. If he will just allow the reconsideration to be had, I will confer with him as to the time when we can discuss it, and I promise him I shall content myself with a bare statement.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not know any reason why the motion to reconsider may not be entered as it is now; and when a motion is made to take it up, then the statement of the Senator may be made. This question is one of great importance to the State that I in part represent here. I have already caused to be read to Senators from the desk of this body the concurrent resolutions of the sovereign State of California after duly and fully considering this subject. It is a question that affects, so far as the assertion of title is concerned, the interests of over seven thousand people in the State that I represent.

Mr. CARLILE. If the Senator will allow me, I understand there are some reports to be made. Let the motion to reconsider be entered, and when we have leisure I will call it up.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CARLILE. It will leave it, then, in the position in which it was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider has been made, and it will be laid aside to be taken up at some other time.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. CARLILE. It is not that I desire it, but only to accommodate myself to the wishes of the Senate.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 281) to amend the sixteenth section of the act entitled "An act to define the pay and emoluments of certain officers of the Army, and for other purposes," approved July 17, 1862, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 271) relating to civil actions in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of Florida praying that the salary of the United States district judge for the northern district of that State may be increased, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a resolution relative to an arrangement made by the President and Secretary of War with Major Generals Schenck and Blair to receive from them temporarily the resignation of their commissions to enable them to take their seats as members of the House of Representatives, submitted a report accompanied by the following resolution:

Resolved, That an officer of the United States whose resignation has been duly accepted and taken effect, or who having been elected a member of either House of Congress qualifies and enters on the discharge of the duties of a member, is thereby in either case out of the office previously held, and cannot be restored to it without a new appointment in the manner provided by the Constitution.

The resolution lies over for consideration, and the report was ordered to be printed.

MICHIGAN JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 513) to detach the counties of Calhoun and Branch from the western judicial district and annex the same to the eastern district of Michigan, have instructed me to report it back and recommend its passage. It is merely to detach two counties from one judicial district and transfer them to the other. I ask that the bill be acted on now.

By unanimous consent the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; which thereupon received the signature of the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 293) to empower the Superannuated Fund Society of the Maryland Annual Conference to hold property in the District of Columbia, and to take a devise under the will of the late William Doughty;

A bill (H. R. No. 149) concerning certain school lands in township forty-five north, range seven east, in the State of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. No. 198) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th June, 1865, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 383) to incorporate the Home for Friendless Women and Children;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 55) granting certain privileges to the city of Des Moines, in the State of Iowa;

A bill (H. R. No. 486) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Idaho," approved March 3, 1863; and

A bill (H. R. No. 504) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the marine hospital and grounds at Chicago, Illinois, and to purchase a new site and build a new hospital.

MILITARY INTERFERENCE WITH ELECTIONS.

Mr. POWELL. I move that all prior orders be postponed for the purpose of taking up the bill (S. No. 37) to prevent officers of the Army and Navy, and other persons engaged in the military and naval service of the United States, from interfering in elections in the States.

Mr. HALE. I have not the slightest objection to the consideration of the bill; but I think we ought to have the morning hour for morning business; and I shall vote against it until we get through the morning business. If the motion is persisted in, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POWELL. I hope the Senate will now take up and act upon this bill. I have made some dozen ineffectual efforts to get it up. It was discussed for three or four days; and all I desire now is to have a vote upon it. I will agree to make no speech about it. I wish to suggest one very important amendment and then take the vote.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope at this late period of the session this bill will not be taken up for further consideration. I do not think any public interest requires it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 6, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Carlile, Davis, Nesmith, Powell, Richardson, and Saulsbury—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Doollittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Grimes, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Pomeroy, Riddle, Sprague, Trumbull, Wilkinson, and Wright—17.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FOOT. I take this occasion to say that my colleague [Mr. COLLAMER] is detained from attendance on the Senate in consequence of somewhat severe indisposition.

REPEAL OF FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.

The bill (H. R. No. 512) to repeal the fugitive slave act of 1850, and all acts and parts of acts for the rendition of fugitive slaves, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the select committee on slavery and—

Mr. SUMNER. I am instructed by the committee on slavery and freedmen to move the immediate passage of that bill. The Senate understands it; the House of Representatives has already acted on it; there is no need of debate; and I ask to have it voted upon at once.

Mr. HALE. I object; I want the morning hour for morning business.

Mr. POWELL. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER. I propose to amend that motion by moving its reference to the committee which during this session has had charge of the subject, to which, on the motion of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, it has been already referred during this session—the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the motion is not amendable, and the motion to refer to a standing committee takes precedence. The question, therefore, is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. POWELL called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Harris, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Powell, Richardson, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, and Willey—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Doollittle, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Howard, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, and Wilson—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Foster, Harding, Henderson, Howe, McDougall, Pomeroy, Riddle, Sprague, Trumbull, Wilkinson, and Wright—14.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to refer the bill to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY OF COLORED TROOPS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take this occasion to announce that he has appointed as the committee of conference on the part of the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (S. No. 145) to equalize the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, Messrs. WILSON, GRIMES, and NESMITH.

REPEAL OF FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.

Mr. SUMNER. The select committee on slavery and freedmen, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 512) to repeal the fugitive slave act of 1850, and all acts and parts of acts for the rendition of fugitive slaves, have directed me to report the same back to the Senate with a recommendation that it pass, and I ask now for immediate action.

Mr. POWELL. I object to that kind of business. We know that this committee has not been in session since that bill was referred. No member of the committee has approached the Senator, and he has not approached one of them, since the bill was referred. We want the committee to consider it. There is a member of the committee who sits near me, [Mr. BUCKALEW,] and I know he has not been consulted about it.

Mr. SUMNER. Will the Senator who sits near you answer whether he has been consulted?

Mr. POWELL. The Senator a moment ago said you had no right to make the report in that way. I happened to overhear him, and that caused me to make the objection. I object to that kind of a report being made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it is not a question for the Chair to decide upon the propriety of the report or the action of the committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the report must lie over.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suppose a committee is under no obligation to go into a committee-room to consult on a bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that that report be not accepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the report lies over for action until to-morrow.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 308) repealing so much of "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1864, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1864, as appropriates $25,000 for erecting naval hospital at Kittery, Maine; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 66) providing for adjustment of the accounts of Henry W. Diman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

DISPOSAL OF COAL LANDS.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the prior orders be postponed, and that we proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 264, for the disposal of coal lands and of town property on the public domain.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARLAN. This bill has been read through, and I suppose it is not necessary to read it again unless it be desired.

Several SENATORS. What is the bill?

Mr. HARLAN. It provides for the survey and sale of town sites that may be located on the public domain; and also for the sale of coal lands on the public domain.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Has that bill been read in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that it was before the Senate on the 3d of June, and was then read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY ROAD IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to take up the House bill granting lands to the State of Wisconsin to build a military road to Lake Superior.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senator will not press that bill this morning. We have had land bills or something about Wisconsin up almost every morning for many days. I am anxious to take up another bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think there will be no debate about this bill. It is precisely in the language of one passed the other morning to grant lands for a wagon road in Michigan. They are word for word the same. This bill was reported by the Senator from Iowa, and I think there can be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 247) granting lands to the State of Wisconsin to build a military road to Lake Superior was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARLAN. The Committee on Public Lands reported an amendment to this bill to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute. I suppose, therefore, the original bill need not be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment alone will be read unless some Senator calls for the reading of the original bill.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out all of the original bill after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That there be, and is hereby, granted to the State of Wisconsin, to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from Wausaw, Marathon county, Wisconsin, following the Wisconsin river as far as Skonowang, and from thence, on the most feasible and direct route, to a point on the State line between the States of Wisconsin and Michigan, in a direction leading to Ontonagon, on Lake Superior, every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, for three sections in width on each side of said road. But in case it shall appear that the United States have, when the line or route of said road is definitely fixed, sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of any section, or any part thereof, granted as aforesaid, or that the right of preemption or homestead settlement has attached to the same, then it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to set apart from the public lands of the United States, as hereinbefore described, designated by odd numbers, as near to said even section aforesaid as may be, and the same shall be located within six miles of said road, so much land as shall be equal to such lands as the United States have sold or otherwise appropriated, or to which the right of preemption or homestead settlement has attached; which lands, (thus selected in lieu of those sold, reserved, or otherwise appropriated, and to which the right of preemption or homestead settlement has attached as aforesaid,) together with the sections and parts of sections designated by odd numbers as aforesaid, and approved as aforesaid, shall be held by the State of Wisconsin for the use and purpose aforesaid: Provided, That the lands herby granted shall be exclusively applied in the construction of that road for and on account of which such lands are hereby granted, and shall be disposed of only as the work progresses, and the same shall be applied to no other purpose whatever. Provided further, That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by any act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of affording in any object of internal improvement, or for any other purposes, whatsoever, be, and the same are hereby reserved to the United States from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the route of said road through such reserved lands, in which case the right of way only shall be granted.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said lands hereby granted to the said State shall be subject to the disposal of the Legislature thereof, for the purposes aforesaid and no other; and the said road shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from tolls or other charge upon the transportation of any property, troops, or mails of the United States.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted to said State shall be disposed of only in the following manner, that is to say: when the said Governor shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that any ten consecutive miles of said road have been completed under the provisions of this act, and in accordance with the fourth section of this act, stating definitely where said completed section of road commences and where it terminates, it shall be the duty of the said Secretary to cause patents to issue to said State for three sections of land for each mile of road thus completed as aforesaid, and so on until the whole of said road is completed: Provided further, That no patents shall be given for any of the aforesaid lands before the completion of ten consecutive miles of road, or for any road, or for any part of any road made before the passage of this act, or for any greater quantity than thirty sections for each ten miles completed according to the provisions of this act; and if said road is not completed within five years no further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That said military road shall be constructed under the direction of such agents or commissioners as the Governor of said State may appoint, and where it passes through timbered lands shall be chopped out a uniform width of at least six rods. The road-bed proper to be not less than thirty-two feet wide, and constructed with ample ditches on both sides, so as to afford sufficient drains, with good and substantial bridges and proper culverts and sluices where necessary. All stumps and roots to be thoroughly grubbed out between the ditches the entire length of said road; the central portion of which to be sufficiently raised to afford a dry road-bed by means of drainage from the center to the side ditches; the hills to be leveled and valleys raised so as to make as easy a grade as practicable.

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly cannot be charged with being illiberal to the western States; but I think this is going a little further than we have ever gone before. It is a proposition to grant lands for the construction of ordinary highways in the State of Wisconsin. I believe something like that was done in one case. Those who were advocating a grant of land for a somewhat similar purpose to the State of Michigan came to me and said there were peculiar circumstances connected with the construction of that road; that it was absolutely important for military purposes that we should open a road to Lake Superior in the winter time when the mail cannot be carried there, and there was no chance of granting aid for the making of that road except by a grant of lands, and in that way a road would be obtained between Chicago and the upper settlements on Lake Superior. I thought the circumstances were peculiar; and I voted for the bill introduced by the Senator from Michigan. Now, it is proposed to grant lands for the construction of an ordinary highway through one of the new States. It seems to me it is carrying the joke a little too far. I would rather at once vote to grant all the lands within the organized States to the States, and be done with them.

There is one peculiar feature in this grant which Senators may not have noticed. If the lands have been heretofore granted, or have been sold or are occupied by preëmptors, so that the country is rich enough to make its own roads, as we did in Ohio, then instead of taking the land that is thus settled by preëmptors, land may be taken three miles further off by the State of Wisconsin to aid in making the road. We give the land to the preëmptors under the homestead law, and then by this bill we give the alternate sections of land within six miles to make a road for them. It seems to me that is carrying the operation of these grants further than ever has been done before. In all the grants to railroad companies we have reserved the alternate sections and doubled the price, and in that way we have recovered for the benefit of the Government some portion of the value of the lands. But this bill does not propose to do that; it leaves the alternate sections open to purchase at $1 25 an acre, and open for entry under the homestead act.

Since we passed the homestead law, a wise law, I think we ought not to have granted any public lands either to States or to railroad companies. We ought to have rested upon the system that no land should be set apart for any purpose except for actual settlement. I have been enough in the new States, and I have been familiar with the organization of the new States, to know that all sales of land to corporations, to States, and to individuals, except for actual settlement, are a great injury to the new States. If I had it in my power I would not sell any public land for any purpose but actual settlement. I would allow it to be preëmpted by actual settlers and saved for actual occupation. Every other sale of the public lands is a detriment to the nation and is a detriment to the neighborhood in which the land lies.

It seems to me that unless the Senator from Wisconsin can show that there is some absolute military necessity for the construction of this road, we ought not to carry the grants of lands any further and apply them to the construction of ordinary wagon roads.

Mr. HARLAN. Before the Senator from Ohio takes his seat, I ask him to refer again to that part of the bill which he considers peculiar or new in its character.

Mr. SHERMAN. In case land within three miles on either side has been sold, or is occupied by preëmptors, this bill allows the State to go outside of the limit of three miles on either side to take public land.

Mr. HARLAN. But within the limit of six miles.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, suppose that all the land along the river Wisconsin—because this road, I believe, is to be built near the banks of the river—is preëmpted, as it probably is by preëmptors, and settlements have sprung up there. It seems to me that these preëmptors, settlers, having received from the United States their land free of cost, ought at least to build their own roads, build their own school-houses, make their own improvements, and not call upon us to appropriate land to make improvements for them. After a while they will want land to build their school-houses, and to build their barns, &c.

Mr. HARLAN. I will make this suggestion in relation to this point: immense amounts of land warrants have been located in the western country by gentlemen living East; a very large number of the inhabitants of Ohio have located land warrants in Iowa, and do not now occupy this road. Those land-owners living abroad of course will not invest their money in the construction of the road; and if the idea suggested by the Senator from Ohio should be carried out, it would prevent the opening up of the wilderness part of the country, as it is hoped will be done by the passage of this bill. If the land shall have been thus taken up by non-residents, the State may go beyond the location of those lands, where there are vacant lands within the limit of six miles, and take an equal quantity, and the amount is only to be applied as the road proceeds. They will not be able to go in advance of the construction of the road to secure lands, but as the road progresses they take the vacant lands within six miles on each side, and thus proceed until the whole road shall be completed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there any difficulty in the local authorities and State authorities laying taxes for road purposes? I know the non-residents, complained of so much in the new States generally, have to pay three or four times as much taxes in proportion to the value of their lands as residents, some way or other.

Mr. HARLAN. The constitution of Iowa, and I suppose of Wisconsin, provides that the lands of non-residents shall not be taxed higher than those of residents.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the provision in all the new States, but in some way or other they do always assess the land of non-residents higher than that of residents, and they ought to do so. My impression is that a non-resident owner of land, who does not occupy it, does not go on it, ought to be discriminated against by legislation, and I would give the new States that power.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Senator from Ohio has not looked on the map to see where this road is located; and probably he is not very familiar with Wisconsin. It begins at a point called Wausaw, which is away up on the Wisconsin river, and goes through from there to Lake Superior. It is comparatively an entirely uninhabited region of country; it is a region of timber, and a region which has never yet been surveyed by the Government, a good portion of it, and it will not be surveyed or ever brought into market unless there is a road opened up through there; and it is for the purpose of opening up that road that we have asked the grant of these lands.

Now, let me say to Senators who are not familiar with the bills which have been passed at the present session, that the other day there was one passed to aid the State of Michigan to build two just such roads through the timber wilderness region of Michigan, one on the right-hand side and the other on the left-hand side, nearly twice the distance of this road. It would be strange indeed, if, having granted land to Michigan to aid roads through her wilderness region, we should not do the same thing for Wisconsin. The United States is the great landholder in that section. It now holds in our State millions of acres of unsurveyed lands. This road runs right through that region, and helps to develop it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I said a word or two the other day on the subject of the public lands by way of comment on a bill then pending which I did not fully understand, which made a grant of lands for several hundred miles of road. I felt that I ought to apologize, and I did apologize to the Senate, being an eastern man, for saying a word on such a subject. It seems the matter is extending a little. First, we made grants for railroads. The policy of the country was settled on that subject, and it has been very well followed up, to grant everything that was required in the shape of aid for railroads. We have had a considerable number of such bills during this session. I have not a word to say about them. I presume them to be all right.

It seems we begin a new system, and are to grant the public domain for the purpose of making ordinary roads. It is done I believe by calling them "military roads." I do not know what military purpose is to be subserved by a road from Wausaw to Lake Superior. Will my friend from Iowa explain to me what the military purpose is of a road from Wausaw to Lake Superior?

Mr. HARLAN. To enable troops and munitions of war to be transported through that wilderness to our fortifications.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is there no other way to get there?

Mr. HARLAN. I understand there is no other way to get there but by the lake, and in winter time when the lake is frozen up there is no possible way of reaching them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is it to reach any particular military post?

Mr. HARLAN. I understand so.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What one?

Mr. HARLAN. Some fortifications on the Straits, as I understand. The Senators from that State are more familiar with the locality.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not rise here for the purpose of opposing the bill; I should not think of doing such a thing; and I am astonished at the rashness of my friend, the Senator from Ohio, who suggested, in the mildest tones in the world that could possibly be used, some doubt or perhaps even an inquiry. I am rather in favor of it for this simple reason: we need a military road down in Maine very much; we are there right on the frontier, and we have been exposed to considerable danger already, and it is very difficult to get from the central parts of our State to the frontier, and we want a military road.

Mr. HARLAN. I will most cheerfully vote for an appropriation of public lands within the State of Maine for the construction of such a road.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Exactly. I was about to ask, if it is for military purposes, what would be the impropriety of granting us some lands out West?

Mr. GRIMES. I would inquire of the Senator from Maine if he does not think the $450,000 we appropriated yesterday for fortifications in Maine would be a fair offset?

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is on the coast. It is very true that appropriation was made; but I am not talking about the State of Maine particularly, but about military defenses. I go for fortifications;

I go for military roads; and if this is shown to me to be for military purposes, for the defense of the country, I have no objection, and I stated I did not rise to oppose it in any shape or form. I only wanted to say that we needed a military road down in Maine very much, and we had no public lands, and to suggest to my friend from Iowa that perhaps he would be willing, as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, to bring us in a bill granting us some lands out West for that purpose.

Mr. GRIMES. Will the Senator inform me whether the Government did not at the national expense build a national road from Bangor to the frontier some years ago?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I believe they did a long while ago, and it has been very useful; but there is no military post in that region now. We want the road in another direction.

Mr. HOWE. Would it not be satisfactory to them if we would change the direction of the fishing boats and apply them to building the road? [Laughter.]

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is another question altogether. [Laughter.] We settled that the other day, and very decidedly.

Now, I want to suggest that by and by we shall come here—and really I am serious about it, because it has been contemplated and I have been urged to move in the matter, but I have been so pressed with other business that I have not been able to attend to it—to ask an appropriation of public lands to aid in constructing a military road in Maine. We are right on the border, as gentlemen know, liable to attack, and something of that sort is necessary. With regard to opening roads, we have lands there of our own, and our mode is if they want roads to have the county lay out the road and assess the expense of building it upon the owners of land.

I do not wish my friend from Iowa or my friend from Wisconsin to misunderstand me. I do not mean to oppose this bill; I only wish to give notice that I shall appeal to the well-known generosity of my friend from Iowa, particularly in reference to these things, for I think we have a cargo of bills from his committee granting lands for all purposes, that he shall extend these grants for military purposes to some other section of the country by and by when the time comes. Our military stations are quite as definite as they are on Lake Superior. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARLAN. Perhaps I ought to state as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands that no bills have been reported from that committee at this session making appropriations of land that are not in strict accordance with the principles that have been adopted by Congress heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It becomes the duty of the Chair to arrest the debate and call up the special order, which is the bill (H. R. No. 51) to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs, the pending question being on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope the Senator having charge of that bill will allow us to vote on this question. We can do so without further discussion.

Mr. SUMNER. I am perfectly willing that the special order shall be passed over informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The special order will be passed over informally.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to know how much Wisconsin has got of the public lands by legislation during the present session; and besides the amount of public lands which she may have received, if I recollect aright she received a pretty large amount of public moneys the other day from the Treasury, to which she said she was entitled. It is difficult I know for the honorable member from Wisconsin to give a precise answer as to the number of acres of public lands that she has got, because the grants have been made of sections of lands on either side of the roads that are to be made, and if I understand the legislation they are long roads, just as long as they think proper to make them, and with as many branches as they think proper to construct, and they get upon the main stem so to speak of their roads and upon all the collateral branches sections of land; it may amount to hundreds of thousands, it may be millions of acres. I rather think that if the legislation which is now proposed shall pass, that, with the legislation which has already occurred, if Wisconsin is as diligent in carrying out this legislation as her Senators upon this floor have been diligent in getting the legislation passed, it will absorb nearly all the public land in the State of Wisconsin. What is true of Wisconsin is true in a great measure of the other States in which public lands are. If therefore the honorable member from Maine contemplates getting an appropriation from those lands for the purpose of constructing a military road in Maine, I would advise him to get it at once.

Mr. CONNESS. My friend will allow me to make a suggestion. I believe (I should like to have the information for our benefit from the honorable chairman of the Committee on Public Lands) that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company is chartered by the State of Maine, and that we are about to pass a bill giving that company some fifty million acres. Surely that would be a military road connecting the State of Maine with the Pacific ocean. I do not see but that Maine is going to take away the largest portions of land of any State of the Union.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member did not understand me as saying that the State of Maine was suffering very much for want of appropriations.

Mr. CONNESS. No. It does not appear that she is.

Mr. JOHNSON. But as the honorable member from Maine contemplated, as he said, getting an appropriation of public lands for the purpose of making a military road in Maine, I advised him that he had better begin at once or he would be too late, the lands will all be gone. And what is true of the State of Maine, (for she will not have as much before we adjourn as she is entitled to,) is true of the other States upon the Atlantic. Maryland has none, Pennsylvania has none, and the other States north of Pennsylvania have none that I know of except it be Maine; and yet these lands belong to the whole. All the States to which I have just adverted have been liberal, and the legislation of Congress has been liberal enough to the new States. We were willing to give to these new States all the land that was necessary to improve the States, when the effect was to improve the value of what was left; but as far as that ground of legislation is concerned we shall not be able to stand upon it in the future when we are not able to stand upon it in relation to the present legislation, because there will be nothing left. We cannot say that we give to Wisconsin a million of acres alongside of these contemplated roads because to do so will add to the value of a million that we have on either side of the roads, because we shall have none on either side of the roads; it will all belong to the State of Wisconsin. If the policy of the Government, as it would seem to be, is that all these lands are to be appropriated for the benefit exclusively of the States where they lie, let us give all the lands to the States at once to deal with just as they think proper. But before that policy is adopted it is well for the public councils to reflect upon the financial condition in which the country now is and is certain to be in the end. The debt will be an enormous one; and with the emigration that is flowing in upon us, and with the natural increase of population in these great western States, enterprising, successful, prosperous now, and yet to be prosperous from hour to hour, they will be able to pay a pretty considerable price for these lands to go into the public Treasury to meet the public debt. That debt may be $2,000,000,000 before we are done, and perhaps more; and if the whole of it is to be met by taxation, although I have no doubt we shall be able to meet it, it will require an effort and a patriotic effort to meet it; whereas, if we have these public lands under our control we can sell them, benefiting us by the sale, and benefiting the purchaser just as much as he should be benefited.

Mr. HOWE. Will the honorable Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. JOHNSON. I have said all I propose to say.

Mr. HOWE. If the Senator will just step and look at the map which my colleague has, and see the isolated community that this road is intended to accommodate, and if then, considering the large tract of country which the United States own, unsettled, untraversed by any track between that settlement on the lake and the settlements in the State of Wisconsin, he thinks that the United States cannot afford to give this quantity of land to open a highway up there to these people, he will not give it; that is all. It is not for the State. It is an American community that has gone up by the lakes and settled on the borders of the lakes; they have a good highway in the summer time, but in the winter they are isolated from the whole world, and you own all the lands between them and the nearest settlement in Wisconsin. The exact distance I do not recollect; the map will show at a single glance just what is asked.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is not the fault of the United States. How long has this population been there in this isolated condition?

Mr. HOWE. Ever since they went there.

Mr. JOHNSON. Of course. But how long is that?

Mr. HOWE. I am utterly unable to answer that question. In point of fact they did not all go at the same moment of time, nor on the same steamer, nor in the same year.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know. I will put my question in a different way. How long has there been a population there sufficiently large to require that the Government should make roads for them—this isolated population?

Mr. HOWE. It has been constantly increasing for the last ten or twelve years.

Mr. JOHNSON. They got along ten years ago pretty well. But it strikes me that that is a new ground upon which to ask a gift of the public lands. These emigrants went there and they settled on the lands, and bought them, and paid for them; they knew what they were about, and they got more than dollar for dollar in exchange. After they got there and got lands that were worth a great deal more than they paid for them, they say, or their representatives say for them, "Now give us millions and millions of acres of land to enable us to make roads over which we may travel from one end of the State to the other." I am speaking of it now as a mere question of justice. There are considerations of policy, I admit, that are to govern us. They are a people whom we are bound to provide for in every way, if we can do it with justice to all the other people; but if they have gone there imprudently when they could have settled this side of the point where they now stand isolated, it is their fault, and not ours.

But all that I meant to say was that we ought to come to some decided policy on the question, "What shall we do with the public lands?" If they are all to be given away in the name of internal improvements, I am for giving them away at once; and the only objection I have to giving them away for the purpose for which this bill proposes, to have a share of them appropriated or for giving them away at once in the gross, is the existing public debt, now very large, and to be still larger before we are through.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The question is asked how much lands the State of Wisconsin has already received. I grant that she has received very handsome donations from the General Government, but I do not think that should defeat this grant. The Committee on Public Lands has adopted a very liberal policy at this session, and I believe it has at former sessions of the Senate, and I think that policy in respect to the northwestern States can be well vindicated.

The Senator from Maryland will observe that the State of Wisconsin is a very large State; that much of its territory is in a northern and rigorous latitude; that it is covered with heavy timber. It is a hard country to open, a very hard country to make roads through, and it is asking but little of the General Government, inasmuch as she is the owner of a large domain there, that she shall help the enterprising men who go out into this new country, which is very hard to open indeed, in making the improvements that are necessary for the enjoyment of these lands. And, sir, it cannot well be asked by the General Government how much the State has received. When all the lands of Wisconsin that are granted and all the lands are bought that will be bought by the citizen, the account will be largely in favor of the citizen and against the Government. Has the Senator taken the trouble to estimate the cost to the General Government of the public lands? Upon one occasion I made this investigation, and found that the lands, in the extinguishment of the Indian titles, in making the surveys and the expenses of the sales cost a little less than twenty-two cents an acre. That is what it cost the General Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will my friend allow me to correct him? The States of Ohio and Indiana yielded more money to the General Government from the sale of public lands than any of the new western States have yielded, and we received less grants. I know the basis on which the account referred to was made up. Take the new western States, and I doubt very much whether the receipts from the sale of public lands in the new western States west of the Mississippi river and north of Illinois, have paid the expenses of their acquisition, and expenses of surveys and the Indian grants, &c. That account is based on the idea of taking the old sum received from Ohio and Indiana when the lands sold at two dollars an acre, when we did not get even three per cent. on the proceeds of the public lands, and when there was no such thing as land grants. The sum is made up in that way.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Ohio speaks in general terms. I was attempting to give the exact facts as I arrived at them upon an investigation made some years ago when I was a member of the House of Representatives. In extinguishing the Indian titles, in surveying the public lands, and in selling the public lands, they cost to the Government about twenty-one and a half cents an acre, and our minimum is $1 25 an acre, so that the man who enters a quarter section of land, pays for it in money, and makes his settlement, has paid to the Government a clear profit of above one dollar on each acre that he pays for.

Mr. GRIMES. Do you take into account the expenses of keeping up the land offices?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir. I take into account the expense of selling, which involves the expense of the land offices; but I do not take into account the annuities we pay to the Indians, nor is that a fair charge against the public domain. Those annuities are paid because we wish to keep on terms of peace with the Indians, and it is a part of the war policy of the Government to pay the Indians annuities, instead of a part of the public land policy; therefore that charge is not properly to be made against the public lands.

The agriculturist of the Northwest for many years, ever since the adoption of the present land system, has paid to the Government a profit of above one dollar an acre on the public land. If he pays for it in money, it is that much clear profit. If he pays for it in a bounty land warrant, it is a discharge to the Government of the obligation she assumed to the soldier for his services in the field. No odds whether it is paid in the one way or the other, it is a profit to the Government, and we may give away one half of the lands in Wisconsin to aid in the development of that hard country, and still the agriculturists of Wisconsin will be on the credit side of the account between her and the General Government. I do not listen with the greatest patience possible to this balancing of accounts and saying that the northwestern States are indebted to the General Government for these grants. The agricultural interest of the Northwest has been taxed more heavily in the purchase of the public lands than any other interest in the Government. No other interest pays five hundred per cent. upon any original cost that the Government has incurred. We foster other interests, but we charge a large speculative price to the settler upon the public land. What speculator in public land expects to make five hundred per cent., expects upon an investment of twenty-one and a half cents to make $1 03? This bill, I think, is a fair one. It tends to the development of a very hard country in a very northern and rigorous latitude, covered with dense forests, very hard to open indeed, and I think it is but fair to make the grant.

I desire to make a verbal amendment to the amendment of the committee. After the words "United States," in the thirty-sixth line of the first section of the amendment of the committee, I propose to add the words "or granted," so as to make the purpose of the committee clear.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Another verbal amendment I think is proper. I move to strike out of the fortieth and forty-first lines the words "to the United States," and to insert "and excluded," so as to read, "be and the same are hereby reserved and excluded from the operation of this act."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time. The bill was read the third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cardie, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Morgan, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Richardson, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wilson—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Grimes, Hicks, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, and Willey—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Fessenden, Foster, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Powell, Sprague, Wilkinson, and Wright—19.

So the bill was passed.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 51) to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. SAULSBURY to the amendment reported by the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is not my purpose to continue this debate if nothing further shall be said which shall call for reply, but merely to notice a little further one objection which was made yesterday to my amendment. It was objected by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WILLEY] that the amendment was not germane to the bill, and by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] that it was incongruous. Now, sir, I wish to say that there is no incongruity about my amendment, because the fourth section of this bill, which is a bill to establish a Freedmen's Bureau, applying to negroes, declares:

That the Commissioner, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall have the general superintendence of all freedmen throughout the several departments; and it shall be his duty especially to watch over the execution of all laws, proclamations, and military orders of emancipation, or in any way concerning freedmen, and generally, by careful regulations, in the spirit of the Constitution, to protect these persons in the enjoyment of their rights, to promote their welfare, and to secure to them and their posterity the blessings of liberty.

That is one section of the bill. I have offered an additional section referring to the white race; and if there is any incongruity in it, it is simply because one refers to white and the other to black men, my amendment declaring that the constitutional rights of white people in the States not in revolt shall be respected, and that no white person within those States shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property except by due process of law, reciting the words of the Constitution.

Now, sir, what is the object of my amendment? It is to secure to a portion of the people of this country the blessings of liberty which the bill under consideration proposes to secure to another class of people. It is to protect them in the enjoyment of their constitutional rights. This bill proposes to protect the negro race in their rights. It is to promote the welfare of the white race that my amendment is offered. This bill proposes to promote the welfare of the black race.

Another objection was made to my amendment, that it was confined to the States not in revolt. There is no incongruity in that, Mr. President. The bill under consideration provides, or professes to provide, for securing the rights of the black race in certain sections of the country. My amendment proposes to protect the white race in the enjoyment of their rights. There can be no incongruity in the fact that they may apply to different sections of the country.

I think, therefore, I have removed the objection raised by the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Maryland as to this amendment not being congruous to the bill, and I now present it to the Senate in this light: that while professing to pass a bill promotive of the rights and the liberty and the welfare of the black race they have an opportunity of adopting an amendment to secure to white people the enjoyment of their rights and the promotion of their welfare, and to assure to them and their posterity the blessings of liberty.

Having removed this objection, I ask the Senate to vote without attempting the intervention of any technicality, because no one will say that it is not perfectly competent for the Senate so to vote, and to vote directly upon the question whether these constitutional rights, secured to us by the fundamental law of the land, are to be respected in future. I rejoice that there is one portion of what is considered the dominant party in this Government, the party which now administers the Government, although not in my opinion numerically the strongest party in this country, that has recently proclaimed to the people of the United States that these rights shall in the future be respected. I am glad that there is a portion of the dominant party who, after witnessing the violation of these rights in the past by this Administration, have firmly resolved that in the future they will strike hands, at least so far, with that party which has always been faithful to the Constitution, to secure in future permanently the advantage of these constitutional rights. I welcome any auxiliaries, however much I may have differed from them in the past.

Mr. President, let the Senate adopt my amendment and it will cause a thrill of joy throughout the whole country; it will give assurance to the people of the whole land that the fundamental charter of their liberties is not totally forgotten, and that however much it may have been infringed in the past it shall be respected in the future; then the patriotic heart will take hope again, and we shall be enabled to march forward to a common destiny and to a common renown.

Mr. HARLAN. As I understand this proposition, it is a repetition of the phraseology of the Constitution on the points indicated. If I am right in this, I suppose a vote of Congress one way or the other will not affect the subject. Congress would have no right to repeal these provisions of the Constitution; and if we attempt to incorporate them into a law and reenact them it will give them no additional force. It seems to me, then, to be sheer folly to vote in favor of a proposition of this kind. It might convey the idea to the unthoughtful that we have a right to repeal the Constitution of the United States; and I suppose the Senator does not intend that any such inference shall be drawn if his proposition shall be rejected.

Mr. POWELL. I shall vote, sir, for the amendment of the Senator from Delaware with a great deal of pleasure. I do not think there is any force in the point which has been made that it is not germane to this bill, nor do I think it intimates directly or indirectly that we can repeal the Constitution of the country. It can do no harm to the bill under consideration if the bill is to be passed. Our ancestors saw fit to proclaim in the Constitution the principles set forth in the amendment of the Senator from Delaware; and in these times, when these great principles of civil liberty are being trodden under foot by executive power throughout the whole land, I think we should be recreant to our duty if we did not reaffirm them whenever they were presented. Our English ancestors reaffirmed over thirty times by act of Parliament the great principles of liberty embodied in Magna Charta; and why should we not now here rebuke those in authority who are putting under their feet these principles of civil liberty which we all pretend so much to cherish? I think the adoption of the amendment by the Senate at this time would be a rebuke, and a just rebuke, to the executive power, and that is one reason why I shall vote for it. I will on all fit occasions give my vote to reaffirm the great principles of the Constitution that are the very base, the foundation-stone of the liberties of this people. It can do no injury to the bill if it is to be passed. I am opposed, of course, to the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts; I think it is very odious in all its features; and I shall take occasion, perhaps, before it is put upon its passage, to state some of my objections to it; but I can see no objection to having these great principles that underlie our institutions reaffirmed here to-day by the solemn vote of the American Senate.

WAR NEWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the following dispatch from the War Department, which will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON, June 15, 7 a. m.

SIR: The movement of the army of the Potomac to the south side of Richmond, across the Chickahominy river and James river, has progressed far enough to admit of the publication of some general facts without danger of premature disclosure.

After several days' preliminary preparations the movement commenced on Sunday night. The eighteenth corps, under command of General Smith, marched to the White House and then embarked on transports for Bermuda Landing. Wright's corps and Burnside's moved to Jones's bridge, where they crossed the Chickahominy and marched thence to Charles City, on the James river. Hancock's and Warren's corps crossed the Chickahominy at Long bridge, and marched thence to Wilcox's, on the James river. The James river was to be crossed by the army at Powhatan Point.

A dispatch from General Grant, dated Monday evening, half past five o'clock, headquarters Wilcox's Landing, says that the advance of our troops had reached that place, and would commence crossing the James river to-morrow, (Tuesday); that Smith's corps would commence arriving at City Point that night, and that no fighting was reported during the movement except a little cavalry skirmishing yesterday.

On Tuesday afternoon, at one o'clock, General Grant was at Bermuda Landing. In a dispatch from him dated there of that date he says: "Our forces will commence crossing James river to-day. The enemy show no signs of yet having brought troops to the south side of Richmond. Our movement from Cold Harbor to the James river has been made with great celerity, and so far without loss or accident."

An official dispatch dated at General Butler's headquarters, 2.20 p. m., says that Smith's corps was coming in, five thousand having already landed.

A dispatch from General Sherman's headquarters, dated at three o'clock yesterday afternoon, near Kenesaw, states that the General is in front advancing his lines on Kenesaw. Another unofficial dispatch, dated at nine o'clock last night, reports some advance to-day; that Thomas has gained ground, and that one rebel brigade is nearly surrounded. It further states that the rebel General Polk was killed to-day and his body sent to Marietta.

In another part of General Sherman's East Mississippi division our forces have not met with the success that has attended competent commanders. General Washburne, at Memphis, reports that the expedition, consisting of three thousand cavalry, five thousand infantry, and sixteen pieces of artillery, sent out from there under command of General Sturgis, encountered a large rebel force on the 10th instant, under command of Forrest, at Guntown, on the railroad running south from Corinth, and after a severe fight, in which our loss in killed and wounded was heavy, our troops were worsted, and that at the latest accounts Sturgis was at Colliersville, retreating toward Memphis. He further states that, with the troops that had lately arrived, Memphis is safe.

General Sherman, having received news of Sturgis's defeat, reports that he has already made arrangements to repair the disaster, and placed General A. J. Smith in command, who will resume the offensive immediately. No other military intelligence has been received by this Department since my last telegram.

EDWIN M. STANTON.

Secretary of War.

Hon. DANIEL CLARK, President pro tempore of the Senate.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 51) to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs.

Mr. TEN EYCK. No doubt the reading of that dispatch is as gratifying to the Senator from Delaware as it can possibly be to me, because it gives a further assurance that the authority of the Constitution, the infraction of which lies so near his heart, is likely to be maintained and the men who are guilty of its attempted destruction are likely to be overcome and overwhelmed. Although he has not mentioned the circumstance that rebels in the South are guilty of a violation of this Constitution, and the whole burden of his song has been directed to the violators of it, as he charges, in the North, still I have not the slightest doubt it brings the liveliest satisfaction and joy to his heart to learn that this Constitution thus violated and thus trampled upon is likely to be placed upon a sure, stable, and firm foundation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Allow me to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. TEN EYCK. In a moment. The Senator will have an opportunity to reply when I am through. I often desire to put a question or throw in a word while a Senator is speaking, but I always restrain my anxiety until he has concluded, and then nothing can afford me greater pleasure than to give way to the Senator. The Senator from Delaware has frequently distinguished me by proposing questions. Now I will propose one to him, as a legislator, not as a politician. It is this: whether he thinks the adoption of the amendment of his upon this bill can be of any practical importance one way or the other. As I understand it, it is a reaffirmance of certain cardinal principles of the Constitution of the United States, which we are all sworn to support. If we disregard the Constitution and our oaths also—if it be true that there are men in the North who do that thing—will we be likely to reverence and respect an act of Congress upon this subject? We reverence the doings of our ancestors when we pay but very little heed to the acts of those about us—certainly not to as great an extent as the acts and deeds of our forefathers and the men who framed this charter of our liberties.

I see, then, no practical use in incorporating this declaration of wise and wholesome doctrines in this bill. But if the object is to make a speech, if the object is to attract the attention of the country, if the object is to arraign a pure and noble body of patriots in the North and to impress upon the public mind that the Administration and its friends are enemies to the Constitution, to the Government, and to the country, then I can understand why the Senator should propose this amendment and make his comments, and hail the boasted accession of strength which he anticipates as being on its way to join the true friends of the Union, of which the Senator from Delaware informs us he is one. He is welcome to all the strength he can secure from such a source as that. He can boast in his new friends, "woolly horse" and all.

Sir, I could vote without any difficulty for this amendment; but where is the practical use of it? What is the object of it? I cannot impugn the motives of the Senator; I cannot dive into the heart of the Senator from Delaware and see the motive, design, and object that he has in view; and therefore I cannot attribute motives to him. Still, I can form my own opinions of his designs and purposes; but being in the dark in relation to his object further than from his declaration that his amendment will bring a "thrill of joy" to the northern heart, I cannot fully understand him. But, sir, as necessity has compelled the Government to lay its hand on traitors and to hinder them from pulling down the fabric of our Government, I can understand that a thrill of joy might rush through the veins of these if we should pass a law to fetter the action of the Government, and to restrain it from taking up these violators of the Constitution. It may bring a thrill of joy to the hearts of such men, but it will bring sorrow and regret to the hearts of patriots who are serving in the Army, to the hearts of patriots who have lost sons and relatives in the service, and whose bodies are now festering in bloody graves.

Sir, I shall vote against this amendment for the reasons stated.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The honorable Senator from New Jersey has referred to the joy that he felt on hearing the dispatch from the Secretary of War read. He has expressed his opinion—at least he says he has no doubt—that I felt the same joy. I am sorry to hear that honorable Senator admit that at least one portion of that dispatch brought joy to his heart; for, sir, there was one portion of it that brought no joy to mine. When it was announced by the Secretary of War that General Sturgis had been defeated and with great loss, and was on his retreat to Memphis, I felt no joy; and I do not presume that it gave any joy to the heart of the honorable Senator from New Jersey. It was a word incautiously said, not properly weighed. I confess to the Senator that I felt no joy in hearing such an announcement upon this floor.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I meant the general progress and success of our arms.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have never, under any circumstances, in private or in public, whatever may be my opinion of this war and of its utility, felt any joy when those who bore the standard of the country in the field have met with disaster. Sir, I was born under that flag. I expect to live and die under that flag and under no other, provided the friends of liberty can be successful in preventing despotic power from tearing it down, and provided they can in the future, as they have in the past, cause it to be the emblem of that constitutional liberty achieved for us by patriotic sires. When that disaster shall come over my country, I shall not be found among those who raise the standard of revolt against it; should my State suffer the humiliation of continuing to be a subject province, and her sons be permanently denied the enjoyment of liberty, I will see whether an asylum of liberty cannot be found upon some distant shore; I will not seek it where that flag has been stricken down, but bidding farewell to the graves of my fathers, I will seek it across the waters, where at least I can cherish the recollection that I and my fathers were born under it and lived under it, until all the principles of which it was once the glorious emblem have been destroyed.

The honorable Senator says I do not refer to those southern men who raised the standard of revolt against that flag. I appeal to the records of this Senate whether I have had any more participation in their movement than the Senator from New Jersey. As I have before said on this floor, on the day when Mr. Buchanan sent in his last annual message and Mr. Wigfall and Mr. Iverson made their speeches, proclaiming here in their seats the intention of the South to retire from the Union, though at that time the youngest member of this body, scarcely warm in my seat, before even the Senator from New Jersey rose, I was the first man to proclaim that the State of Delaware, which always has a watchful care, I should like to have said, over New Jersey, which always respects New Jersey, having been the first to enter this Union would be the last to abandon it. We have made no attempt to abandon it even when deprived of our constitutional rights. I have seen, in violation of those principles of the Constitution, which my amendment seeks to reaffirm, my neighbors and friends, four in one day, snatched from their helpless families and carried, by order of General Schenck, to Baltimore, denied a hearing, refused a statement of the charge against them, refused a trial, and banished the same afternoon to a hostile shore. I have seen, in violation of the principles of fundamental law which my amendment seeks to establish, the constitutional rights of my people taken away of even voting for those who shall make the laws under which they shall live. Sir, the people of my State have witnessed all this, but they have never attempted to follow the leaders of secession.

Sir, it is fruitless here to be always denouncing the men who have seceded from the Union. I ask the honorable Senator what good that can do? He approves of their course as much as I do. I have but one mission now during the remainder of my brief term in the Senate. My mission is one and single: the advocacy of civil liberty, to hold up before my countrymen the example of our fathers, and on all fit occasions, if I possibly can, to induce my associates here to reaffirm those principles of civil liberty upon which were laid the deep foundations of this Government. I invite the coöperation of my honorable friend from New Jersey, the patriotic and gallant State of New Jersey, whose Witherspoon and other heroes and sages of revolutionary renown helped to frame this Constitution; I invite him to join me in this noble work of reaffirming what they did, of saying now that New Jersey, in these days when these principles are being constantly violated, will imitate the example of New Jersey's sons of revolutionary renown, and reaffirm the principles which they so fondly cherished.

But the honorable Senator asks, what good can result from the adoption of this amendment? Sir, good may result in several respects. Coming to the ear of the present occupant of the White House, who has violated every one of the articles of the Amendments to the Constitution repeatedly, almost daily, it will tell him, "Sir, you seek a recollection at the hands of the American people; we, the representatives of the sovereign States of this Union, say to you, you must not dare to repeat these infractions in the future, because if you do you are not above the Senate of the United States." It will go forth also as the voice of the Senate to the people of this country, saying to them, "Those who represent you in the highest council chamber of the nation intend to take care in the future that your constitutional rights shall be respected, that whatever may be the termination of this most unfortunate war, civil liberty at all events shall be preserved in the adhering States." What good will it do? I ask the honorable Senator whether, when the people of England demanded the reaffirmance of Magna Charta, it did no good? Is it true the good may have been temporary; but when infringed again they demanded a reaffirmance; the king had to listen; and, sir, our would-be king will have to listen to the voice of the American Senate if you adopt this amendment.

The honorable Senator says it may give joy to the hearts of traitors, but not to patriots. What, sir, the reaffirmance of the Constitution of the United States give joy to the hearts of traitors and not to patriots? Is there any provision in that Constitution of the United States which gives security or protection to traitors? Is there anything in it that a traitor loves? Is it not full of guarantees for patriots? Is there anything in it that the patriot heart will not bound for joy to hear reaffirmed? Sir, it was made by patriots. What those patriots made my amendment seeks to affirm and to maintain in the future.

This talk about traitors has become so common, so stale, that sensible men know exactly how to appreciate it, and he is most apt to be conscious of traitorous purposes who talks most loudly of his own and questions most often the patriotism of others. It has got to be common now, if a man differs with you in any matter of party policy, if any man dissents from this Administration, to call him a traitor. We heard it avowed the other day upon this floor that all loyal men were abolitionists. Why, sir, does the character of treason change so suddenly? Are its elements so suddenly changed that what ten years ago one half of the majority of this Chamber would have disowned, abolitionism, has now become the test of patriotism? I have heard some of the very gentlemen belonging to the majority on this floor deny the charge of abolitionism, and yet we were gravely told the other day that it is the test of loyalty. Let this Administration announce any heresy, however great, and immediately, while there may be some who will not say that it is a test of loyalty—I will not impute anything to honorable Senators—there will be many throughout the country who will swear that it is true patriotism, and that the contrary is arrant treason.

Mr. President, we shall settle this question of what is treason and what is disloyalty in a few months. The grand army of true patriots, the men who stand by the Constitution of their fathers, the men who intend if possible to preserve that Constitution with all its guarantees, are rallying for the struggle; and, determined as they are to have a free election this time, come what shall come, a free election or a free fight, the gathering hosts will constantly receive additional strength and march on to assured victory.

The honorable Senator says he cannot dive into the depths of my heart to inquire into my motives, but he can form his own opinions. Free thought, free speech is what I seek to reaffirm on this occasion. The honorable Senator is free in the exercise of his thought, and is perfectly free in the exercise of his speech.

But it is said these things have only been done from necessity. No tyrant ever yet attempted to trample upon the rights of a people who did not allege that it was done from necessity. But, sir, a once free people, and a people now determined to be free again, will sit in judgment upon this tyrant plea and the tyrant who seeks to justify his conduct under it very soon, when you will cease to hear, unless I mistake the indications of the times, outrages justified under the pretense of necessity.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Perhaps I may claim the indulgence and the patience of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senate for a minute while I reply to one or two of the points taken by the Senator from Delaware.

I think it was rather an unfair application of my remark by the Senator from Delaware, when he stated that he had no joy in hearing the report that General Sturgis had been worsted and was falling back on Memphis. Why, sir, the joy I felt was on account of the constant general success and progress of our armies, which, through the heroism of our noble troops, are like a great and mighty torrent sweeping away all treason and rebellion from before them. I thought it was a very little point indeed for the gentleman to seize hold of, and by way of escape, that he could not rejoice at the discomfiture of Sturgis. Sir, he did not rejoice, or at least he did not declare even in his reply that he rejoiced in the general progress of our arms; and I have never heard him on this floor or anywhere else express his gratification on that account.

The Senator professes, and I do not dispute it, that he is a warm friend of the Union and of the flag of the Union. He tells us that his ancestors were born under it; that he was born under it, and that he has lived under it. May I ask the Senator if he expects to die under it? I have not heard of his taking any step during the five years he and I have sat side by side upon this floor to maintain its supremacy over the length and breadth of the Union established by our fathers. If so, in what respect? What has he said, what has he done that he might continue to live under it, and that when the day came for him to close his eyes in death, his last faint gaze might rest upon the emblem of our sovereignty fluttering in the breeze? I do not expect the Senator to go into the field and fight; his duties as a Senator could better be performed here than elsewhere; but when did he ever raise his voice in behalf of the Army or the Navy, or the prosecution of the war? What vote did he ever give to raise a man and put him in the field, or to raise a dollar to maintain and keep him there? If he has ever given such a vote it has escaped my observation.

The Senator, in the kindness of his heart, is willing to extend the care of Delaware unto New Jersey. I thank the Senator for the warm and gushing impulses of his heart. I remember the early history of the "Blue Hen's Chickens," and it is a proud one; the record is as proud as that of the early "Jersey Blues;" but I trust the Senator will not undertake to indoctrinate our people, when he is exercising this care over them, in the sentiments he has given utterance to upon this floor. There are too many men already in the State—it is with shame and sorrow that I speak it—indoctrinated with such sentiments as the Senator from Delaware utters here from day to day. Sir, there are a few men there who refuse to give a dollar to sustain that flag to which the Senator from Delaware has alluded. There are noble, patriotic hearts in Delaware. We will unite with them in putting down this fierce rebellion, we will spare with them our last remaining man and our last dollar in this holy purpose, but Heaven preserve us from such friends as have only praise and sympathy for rebellion and denunciation and abuse for those who pass their working days and sleepless nights in noble efforts to maintain the Union transmitted by our fathers.

There is but one other point to which I will allude, and that is the utility of this amendment. The Senator thinks there is great utility in reenacting the solemn declarations of the Constitution, that it would bring joy to the hearts of the citizens of the North and send a thrill throughout their veins. If there be not sufficient loyalty to the Constitution and the Government in the people now under the Constitution, there will be not sufficient under any act of Congress that you may pass. I protest that no such violation of the Constitution has been committed by those who are charged with the public service; and, by way of "excluding a conclusion," I will say if such has been the case; if, under the stern necessity of the times, when this Government, so to speak, has been gasping for its breath beneath the bloody stabs of traitors; if under such exigencies, unusual, undefined, or unfamiliar powers, which I nowise admit, have been resorted to to save the nation's life, will the Senator from Delaware close his eyes to the great motive, and go howling through the land against the men who may have done this thing to preserve the country while traitors and traitor sympathizers have striven to destroy it, and that, too, be it said, without rebuke or even comment from the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. President, I apologize for having taken up so much time; but it seemed to me before this vote was taken upon the call of the yeas and nays, it was perhaps proper, or at least excusable in me, to state why I did not consider it necessary on this and every other occasion to reaffirm the doctrines of the Constitution framed over seventy years ago, and which our fathers and ourselves have faithfully lived up to and maintained from the day of its adoption down to the present hour.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I shall not continue this debate any further than is absolutely necessary to take particular notice of some few remarks of the honorable Senator from New Jersey. With the general spirit which he has manifested in this discussion I am pleased; and yet I have been surprised that one so familiar with the proprieties of debate should have been found using the words he has uttered in this instance. He spoke of the Senator from Delaware "professing" to be a friend of the Union, and of my "going howling through the land." The Senator is a man of taste.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I should like to withdraw that declaration. Sometimes in the hurry of debate we use expressions that we would not otherwise do. I did not propose to use that term.

Mr. SAULSBURY. So far as I have conducted this debate, in my humble way, I have made no personal allusions whatever to the honorable Senator. I am not now speaking in reference to those expressions. I do not choose to be put on trial upon every occasion by any Senator as to the propriety or impropriety of the course which I as a free American Senator choose to pursue in my judgment upon matters. But the Senator has so far again forgotten what is in issue between him and me, the discussion of principles, as to refer to our personal course since we have been Senators. He asks, what has the Senator from Delaware done since the commencement of these troubles? and he proclaims to the country the noble deeds and noble acts which he has performed. Sir, I need no trumpeter of what little fame I have got, and if I needed one I would not be my own.

But, sir, the Senator has chosen to make a contrast between what he has done and what I have done upon this floor. The Senator and myself were both Senators when these troubles commenced, before a gun was fired, before a drop of blood was shed. He cannot forget the scene that transpired in these Halls then. He cannot forget the anxiety of his countrymen from the lakes to the gulf and from ocean to ocean that these calamities should be spared to this great people. He cannot forget that from every quarter of the land there came up in trumpet tones a prayer to him, a prayer to me, a prayer to every one intrusted with the discharge of official duties, "Do what you possibly can to avert such a dire calamity as war; do not allow brethren of a common origin and of a common renown to imbue their hands in each other's blood." He recollects that responsive to that call a great statesman, a link between the glorious past and the then agitated but mighty present, a man who had seen Washington, who had been familiar with the great men who laid the deep foundations of this Government in the principles of constitutional liberty; that man, whose head was frosted with age and trembling in every limb, stood up in his hearing in this council Chamber and implored the warring sections to cease their strife. He offered an olive-branch of peace, which contained nothing but what had been judicially decided to be true by the highest legal tribunal of the country. The Senator saw the people of one entire section of the country, through their representatives, willing to receive those propositions of peace, and to accept of that olive-branch that peace might prevail in the land, that the unity of the Government might be preserved, and that constitutional liberty might be transmitted to their posterity forever. The Senator saw the tables of many of the Senators upon this floor loaded with petitions for the establishment of those principles of peace so patriotically offered. He saw the Senator from Delaware persistently and continuously, when present in the body, voting to accept that olive-branch of peace, voting to agree upon these common terms upon which brethren should live. Although that honorable Senator could not mistake the voice of the people, nor be indifferent to the anxiety of his countrymen, upon every occasion, according to my recollection, he persistently voted against those propositions. Nothing but war, bloody war, a little more blood-letting, in his judgment, could save the Union. He turned a deaf ear to their entreaties. He would not heed even the counsels of his own State; for he cannot disguise the fact, and he would not disguise it if he could—for I mean to deal in no discourteous language toward him—that the sentiment of his State was then, as it is now, in favor of those principles of peace. He thought that one section of this country, because it was numerically stronger than the other, could restore this Union and preserve our liberties by force of arms. I, in the exercise of my judgment, never, from the beginning of these troubles to the present time, have had any such faith. But because I could not believe in the potency of the means which the Senator chose to adopt for the restoration of the Union, is that any evidence that I am less patriotic than he? Is a difference in judgment as to the means of restoring this Union to be evidence of the loyalty?—Pardon for using the word—the patriotism of the one and the want of patriotism of the other? I shall go into no vindication of my votes or my record in this body. I believe that the judgment of a large majority of the people of this country now, as I know it was when these troubles commenced, is in perfect accord with my own.

But, sir, I am surprised to hear the honorable Senator talk about this war being a war for the restoration of the Union. Whatever was its original design, in view of the bill under consideration, and another bill which we have been notified is to come up for consideration on Friday next, can the Senator believe that those who are prosecuting this war—I mean those who have its management—mean a restoration of the Union and the preservation of the Constitution? I have no doubt there are hundreds and thousands of men advocating this war, who are doing it for the honest purpose, as they think, of restoring the Union and preserving the Constitution; but, sir, looking at the acts of those entrusted with the management of public affairs, the acts of this Administration, does any man believe it? If so, I ask how do you reconcile that with the fact that when the gallant and noble State of Kentucky, notwithstanding her local institutions, notwithstanding her geographical position, and the State of Maryland and the State of Delaware and other States geographically situated as they were, came honestly to tell the Executive what policy would conduce most to enable their people to support with cordiality the war for the maintenance of the Union, he turned a deaf ear to all their entreaties and set up his judgment against that of those States?

Sir, he had a policy to pursue, and he has pursued it; and now this bill, as a means of restoring the Union, I presume, is brought forward to establish a Freedman's Bureau, to take the lands away from the people whom you expect either to reconcile or conquer, and divide them out among their slaves whom you denominate freedmen; and a bill is on your table upon which I shall have something to say when it shall come up, because in its discussion will arise the great fundamental principles of government—the government of what was once the United States—which proposes to reduce at least eleven of the past creators of the Constitution and the Union to the condition of Territories, excluding almost every white man and white boy in them from any participation in the government and handing the government of these Territories, which are ultimately to be built up into States, into the hands of the servile race who are to rule over the white race. All this is done to preserve the Constitution and to restore the Union! Sir, the bare suggestion awakens a train of thought and forces upon the mind a flood of ideas the elaboration of which would take days if not weeks, and I shall forbear from entering into their further recital or discussion.

If the honorable Senator, by the policy which he pursues, shall ultimately restore the Union and preserve the Constitution—and I know of no Union except that of which the Constitution is the link, the tie, the bond—no person will rejoice more than I shall. But, sir, against the measure now before the Senate, and such kindred measures, there comes up, in my judgment, not only the blood of a murdered Constitution, but there comes up from the grave of every soldier who has fallen in battle a solemn protest. They fought and died, not for the adoption of such measures as this, not, in the language of the patriot Butler—who telegraphed only a few days ago that he had the key to Richmond, and who seems to have lost it—"to tear down the old house and build up a new one with all the modern improvements," but to sustain the old Union and the old Constitution. Sir, I say that even the blood of the fallen brave cries from the ground against the policy which the Senator is advocating and the adoption of these measures.

Mr. President, I have been led to say thus much from the personal allusions made by the honorable Senator to the course which I have pursued in this Senate. My term in this Senate is brief. I have no ambition for a new lease of that term. If I had I am very sure that the patriotic measures which the honorable Senator's Executive has heretofore put in force, and which he will try again to put in force, would preclude me from so high an honor. Whatever shall be my political fate in the future, I shall retire from this Senate Chamber with the consciousness that, whether mistaken in judgment or not, I have done the best I could, according to the best of my knowledge, faithfully and patriotically to serve my country. But before that brief term shall close, in the light of the experience which will then be afforded, perhaps the honorable Senator and myself will have another opportunity to contrast records and policies and see which would have been wisest from the beginning to pursue.

In conclusion, sir, I will say this: I had despaired of the Republic; but from the indications of the present, to which I before referred, that there are a portion of the American people, even of the dominant party, who are sick and tired at heart of these arbitrary measures which the honorable Senator denies to have ever been put in execution, and from the fact that I believe the free people of this country mean in the coming presidential election to assert their rights at the polls in defiance of military interference, if such should be invoked, I begin to have a dream of hope that the ship of State which his policy had wrecked and stranded and almost caused to go to pieces may yet be taken from the breakers, and may again be placed upon the wave of prosperity and happiness; and that as common brothers, ignoring the insane policy of this Administration, and not only ignoring it but reminding our children and our children's children forever of its utter folly, we will safely cause it to ride triumphantly over the tempestuous billows; that Peace, with her heavenly wings, may be spread over the whole of what was once a united and happy country; and that, instead of the watchword "the Constitution as it is and the Union as it was" being a term of reproach and an evidence of disloyalty, it may be held as the rallying cry of a happy and united people; and that, gathering under that same old flag of stars and stripes, and not of stars and bars, they will again throughout the whole land recelebrate an almost forgotten Fourth of July.

Mr. TENEYCK. Mr. President, I must say, in all kindness, I think I ought not to have withdrawn the word of which the Senator from Delaware complained. From the emphatic manner of his speech and style, perhaps I would not have been much amiss if I said he "shouted" instead of "howled;" but, sir, I wish to be courteous, and avoid anything that looks like personal offense even toward gentlemen from whom I so widely differ.

But, sir, I ought to say a word in relation to my State. Allusion has been made to the State of New Jersey; and although I do not care about prolonging this discussion in its personal aspects, still I should be recreant to the State I love, that I regard with the tender emotions I do the memory of the mother who bore me on her bosom, if I did not reply to a declaration of the Senator in relation to the character of my State. He says "New Jersey was always in favor of peace;" that it was the sentiment of her people; and that the Senator from New Jersey has disregarded her well-known voice. Sir, I deny that that now is or ever was the sentiment of her people. I admit that owing to certain circumstances, about the time of the commencement of this war or a little before, certain persons got possession of seats in the legislative councils of our State, and held the majority on certain political questions; and they did—I do not know whether it was under the care or teaching of the Senator from Delaware—pass certain resolutions in favor of the Crittenden compromise so called, or Crittenden resolutions. I do not refer to the resolution, also called the Crittenden resolution, introduced afterwards in the Senate by Andrew Johnson, the present candidate for Vice President, and who, with Abraham Lincoln, I believe, and trust, will be elected; but I mean the resolutions introduced by the late venerable Senator from Kentucky, one of which was designed to beat down the division line between free and slave soil, and open the free North to the slave power of the South. In my humble capacity as a Senator, without professing to have much firmness, and believing it to be a crime against both God and man, I voted against that resolution. I would have done it if an impending blow deadly as a flash from heaven had fallen on my brow the very moment that I did it.

Last year the Legislature of my State undertook to pass a set of resolutions in favor of a peace. I believe some of them were willing to send commissioners to meet others from the rebel States and desecrate the consecrated ground of Independence Square by patching up a peace upon that sacred spot with traitors and with rebels; but there were many worthy men in that Legislature who denounced and utterly abhorred the thing; and the guilty authors of that deed have most of them already heard the voices of an outraged people on the subject.

The Senator from Delaware says I have been individually opposed to peace and "in favor of blood—a little more blood-letting." Sir, I was not so much in favor of blood-letting as I was in favor of maintaining the Constitution and the laws. If it became necessary to maintain that Constitution and the laws to shed the blood of traitors, I was ready for it, and to carry on the war until the last of them succumbed. That is the way I stood; that is the way I stand to-day; and that is the way I mean to stand, "first, last, and all the time."

But the Senator says it will be seen in the future whether his policy would not have been the best and wisest to pursue, and that the people of the country will denounce the measures of this Administration. Sir, I am not afraid of that; I will accept that test.

But, Mr. President, I will say, finally, without reflecting upon the Senator, that he has, unintentionally I hope, slandered the character of the dead when he says that the soldiers who have fallen in battle, if they could speak, would send a voice from the grave in favor of peace. Sir, it is not so. Establish a peace before obedience is secured to the Constitution and the laws, and you will not only do an act of gross injustice to the hosts who now are battling in the front, and from whom we hear the shouts of victory day by day, but also an act of gross injustice to the sacred dead who have offered up their precious lives a sacrifice to this principle. So far from voices of denunciation coming from the grave in case you do not establish peace upon the terms the Senator from Delaware would have it, establish peace by surrendering your rights, by acknowledging secession, and without inflicting punishment upon criminals and rebels, and you will have a voice of condemnation coming from the beds in hospitals where on yesterday I saw our heroes in the cold embrace of death, others in their last gasp, and others suffering pain and agony without a sigh or groan. Sir, establish peace upon the principles sought by the Senator from Delaware, and you would have, if such a thing were possible, the soldiers slain in battle, whose bodies lie upon the road to Richmond, rising from their graves, bursting the crust of clay now resting on their bosoms, stalking forth upon the earth, and, with bony arms extended, denouncing fiercely all that class of men who madly talk about a "peace" before this fierce rebellion is subdued.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will simply say that if the remarks last made by the Senator afford any gratification to him, as they contain nothing to which I feel called upon to reply, I will allow him to have the last word.

Mr. CARLILE. I rose simply for the purpose of calling the attention of Senators to the fact that this is the middle of June. There is a resolution upon the table which has been adopted by the House of Representatives, the third one of a similar kind, providing for the adjournment of this body. The bill under consideration seems to give rise to a latitude of discussion that would be likely to occupy the attention of Congress, if it is indulged in, for the rest of the year. I presume Senators are anxious to return to their homes some time before the expiration of summer, and for the purpose of testing that question I shall before I sit down submit a motion, in order that business indispensable so far as the workings of the Government are concerned, may be transacted within the period of time prescribed in the resolution of the House for an adjournment.

I think it was clearly shown yesterday, by the Senator from West Virginia, that the bill under consideration is a bill which, if it should pass and become a law, will have an effect that I cannot for a moment believe was ever entertained by its author. I cannot suppose that a Senator who has expended almost the entire of his public life at least in an effort to liberate the African would be the first in this body to introduce a proposition to reenslave those whom he believes have been liberated by action to which he was somewhat at least a party. That that will be the effect of the bill I think was clearly shown by the Senator from West Virginia. If the title which he suggested yesterday should not be adopted by the Senate to the bill, if it should become a law, I will suggest one which I think will equally well define its character; and that is, "A bill to take from the individual owners all African slaves in the slaveholding States their right of property therein, and transfer the same to the United States." The bill evidently merely transfers the ownership of these slaves; and if the system proposed by it is carried out, with no interest on the part of those who are to have the management and care of these people such as the owners have now, it will perpetuate a much more barbarous system of slavery than the one which the Senator desires to get rid of. Instead of the slave belonging to an individual, and being the slave of one man, he becomes the slave of every man in the community who is liable to be selected by the head of this particular bureau as his overseer or superintendent.

I do not believe that such was the intention of the author of this bill. In order, therefore, that he may have time to prepare such a proposition as will carry out his philanthropic views, I will move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until the first Monday in December next. If that motion shall be agreed to, the time of the Senate at this session will not be taken up in its consideration, and we shall probably be enabled in December next to dispose of it properly.

Mr. BUCKALEW. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 13, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Grimes, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, Jewell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, and Willey—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Foster, Harding, Henderson, Howard, McDougall, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Sprague, Wilkinson, and Wright—13.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question returns on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. President, I feel somewhat embarrassed by my condition. I only desire to make a remark or two; but I must ask the permission of the Senate, if they will indulge me so far, to be allowed to keep my seat. My condition is such that I cannot rise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate undoubtedly will.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. President, it does seem to me as if we are consuming time very unnecessarily in the discussion of this and other subjects. Senators on both sides of me have taken their ground; but in all that has been said and done, it seems to me as if we should accomplish very little upon the subject, the all-engrossing subject with some members of the Senate. I confess that I am as tired of the slavery question at this particular juncture of time as can be any Senator on this floor; and yet there are Senators here who, it appears to me, think about nothing else. If those Senators, able and efficient as they are, would bend their energies to the putting down of this rebellion, then with that will go slavery, just as certain, in my opinion, as night follows day. And yet, sir, subjects entirely calculated, at least, to defeat the main object—the putting down this rebellion and restoring the Union—are attended to particularly by some Senators.

Sir, if they desire to be the champions of the anti-slavery party, if they desire to be the bell-wethers of the party of freedom, in Heaven's name let them proclaim it, and I am perfectly willing to concede them that position; but I protest against this consumption of the time of our constituents, hour after hour and day after day, in the presentation of this subject of slavery, a subject that must fall with this rebellion, which I trust will speedily fall. I cannot see why Senators on this floor should waste so much time or lead to the waste of so much, in discussing a subject which it is clear, to my mind at least, will end with the rebellion. Why not let well enough alone? Why throw in the subject of slavery again? While many here opposed, at least to me, in my views in regard to the condition of the country, and to what has brought this state of things upon the country, are trying to cover up the main fact, I have never lost sight of it, and I think no sensible man ever should lose sight of it: I mean the fact of the South breaking down by the unholy efforts they have been making.

They talk about "the Union as it was and the Constitution as it is." In God's name, must not every Senator understand perfectly that these people in the South have disregarded the Constitution; that they themselves have broached the subject; that when they had the power to continue things as they were, they left their seats in this Senate Chamber and in the Hall of the House of Representatives, went home, and commenced to fight? But, sir, there is nothing more clear when you come to talk about slavery. I never had but one opinion in regard to that. The poor creatures that we are wasting so much time over here are to be the principal sufferers. But, sir, it must come; and I say let it come, and the earlier it comes the better. I have been all my life since manhood a slaveholder. I have some slaves at home now acting as free people, for I pay them just as I do the free people who work for me. But, sir, as I before remarked, the thing is working well. Why not let it work? We have a convention in session in my State now that will probably in a few days—I learned so yesterday from a leading delegate to that convention—pass an act of emancipation. I have always desired that Maryland should emancipate her own slaves. I believe many of the other border States will follow. Then whether the southern States now in rebellion do so or not, they will be compelled to do so, and slavery must perish. Why any Senator here, or any one outside of this Chamber, should think for a moment of perpetuating slavery at the expense of this Government, I confess, is a thing that I cannot comprehend. I never have understood it. Sir, if I owned all the slaves south of Mason and Dixon's line, I would give them up cheerfully to-morrow rather than see this Government fall. I have no objection, but on the contrary am in favor of a freedman's commission. My sympathies have been very much wrought up in regard to these poor creatures. They have had no participation in what has brought this trouble on the country; they have had nothing to do with it; we have acted for them.

But, sir, my object in addressing the Senate was to say a few words in regard to the effort that is being made here to press this thing faster than time will allow it to come. Under the circumstances, can it be possible that gentlemen will interpose difficulties and throw barriers in the way of putting down this rebellion, a thing that every lover of the Union and every lover of the country must desire more than anything else? Why not bend our entire energies to the one point, the breaking down of this rebellion? Our brethren are falling in arms by the thousands; thousands more are coming home wounded and maimed, and will remain so to the end of their lives, many of them unable to take care of themselves or to earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brow. When they are making such sacrifices, I cannot, as I before remarked, understand why it is that gentlemen will throw difficulties in the way—for I consider everything of that sort a difficulty in the way—of the main thing, the putting down of this rebellion.

Allusion has been made to the coming presidential election and to the present Administration. Sir, I was as much opposed to the election of Abraham Lincoln as any man here. I will go for him now, if I live to see the next election, in preference to any man in this country. I believe he has accomplished more to save the border States than perhaps any other man in the country could have done similarly situated. I was not of Mr. Lincoln's party. I did not vote for Mr. Lincoln. I voted for Bell and Everett, and was anxious that they should be elected; but, as I remarked on a former occasion, I believe it was a godsend that Abraham Lincoln was elected to the Presidency of the country. I love the Union, gentlemen, more than I do everything else, and I desire to see the Union restored, and the Government of the United States to the latest moment of my life and the lives of those who may come after me preserved intact.

I have been so situated lately as not to be able to participate in the active duties of the Senate, and while absent lost a good deal of the run of the business of the Senate; but, sir, I confess my utter surprise at seeing gentlemen here, intelligent gentlemen and efficient statesmen, battling over mere matters of moonshine, things that no one need think of interfering with at this particular juncture. Put down the rebellion; that is what I desire to see above everything else; and then, though a slaveholder, I desire slavery to go just as quickly as possible. I would rather see this Government perpetuated with freedom proclaimed to all classes than to see those who have been slaves returned to slavery again. The people are becoming prepared for this by degrees. They are preparing themselves for it. I know that in my own State eighteen months ago no patience would have been manifested toward a man who would talk about the emancipation of slaves in Maryland. We have now a decided vote in favor of emancipation. Our people desire it, and the quicker it is done the better it will be for the State, and the quicker slavery is out of the country the quicker we shall have a restoration of this Union, and then we can start again upon a well-established Government, one that I hope will continue for the duration of time.

I regret that I have been compelled at this late hour in the day to make a single remark on this subject, but I felt it my duty to do so. It seems to me all this discussion is entirely out of place. I want the gentlemen who are such sticklers for emancipation and so exceedingly eager to press forward and put themselves at the head of the anti-slavery party, to let this subject rest until the proper time comes; when, without any trouble to them or to any one else, slavery will just as certainly be gone, as I before remarked, as night follows day. Sir, I shall not detain the Senate longer.

Mr. CONNESS. I will not undertake to make any speech. I only rise to express my desire that a vote shall be taken, and that we shall dispose of this measure to-day. A majority of the committee on slavery and freedmen, to whom it was referred, reported in favor of the bill now before the Senate. They gave it a great deal of attention. They believed it was the best form of measure that could be produced on that subject. They believed it necessary to the country at this time to give legality to what was being done perhaps illegally, or by mere acts of Administration. But, sir, let us come to a vote first on this amendment, then upon the bill reported by the Senator from Massachusetts from the committee as a substitute for the House bill, and then to a vote upon the House bill, and dispose of it in some manner. We can do it in a very short time.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment of Mr. SAULSBURY, resulted—yeas 8, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Hendricks, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, and Saulsbury—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Hicks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Harding, Henderson, Howard, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Sprague, Wilkinson, and Wright—12.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRIMES. The question I understand now to be on the adoption of the substitute reported from the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the question.

Mr. GRIMES. As I shall be constrained to record my vote against this proposition I wish in one or two words to state the reasons why I shall do it.

So far as it was the intention of the select committee on the part of the Senate to alleviate the condition of colored refugees or freedmen, I fully sympathize with them. I desire to do, in my individual capacity and as a Senator, anything that may be in my power to put them upon a better footing than they are now. I have no doubt that they have endured a great deal of suffering; and I had supposed that this committee would present to us a proposition in some tangible shape in which we would be able to act upon this subject. I do not think the committee thus far has presented a scheme that commends itself to the good judgment of the Senate and the country, and I am going to show why I think so.

As to the question whether this bureau, if established, should be put under the charge of the War Department or the Treasury Department, I have not a word to say at present. Senators will observe, by reference to the first section of the substitute, that it provides—

That an office is hereby created in the Treasury Department to be called the Bureau of Freedmen, meaning thereby such persons as have once been slaves.

There is no limit as to the time when they were slaves. They may have been slaves and been emancipated twenty-five years ago, but if they were once slaves, under the provisions of this bill they are subjected to the general superintendence, which I understand to mean the general control and management, of the bureau that is to be created by the passage of this bill. Sir, I am not prepared to vote that such a man as Robert Small, who has performed as gallant an action as was ever performed by any of our white officers or soldiers or sailors, shall be put under the superintendence of the Secretary of the Treasury or of any Commissioner of a Freedmen's Bureau.

Mr. SUMNER. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. Is there one word in the bill that compels him to go under any such superintendence?

Mr. GRIMES. I so infer.

Mr. SUMNER. Is he not declared to be a free man? Is he not as free as the Senator himself?

Mr. GRIMES. I think not; and I am going to try to convince the Senate that under this bill, although in terms a freedman, he is not in fact a freedman.

Mr. HOWE. I suspect the dispute between the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Massachusetts, if there is any, arises from a different construction of some clauses of this bill. If the Senator will give way, I had marked probably some of the clauses which he is about to comment upon; and I intended to offer some amendments, three I believe; and if the Senator has no objection I should like to offer them now to see if the committee will accept them. I think if they are accepted they will do away with some of the objections of the Senator to the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I have no objection to hearing what the Senator proposes to substitute as an amendment. I think I can satisfy the Senate that at present as the bill now stands, and as we are asked to vote for it, it puts every colored man who was ever a slave under the general superintendence of the Commissioner at the head of this bureau, who is to act under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. That is the provision of the fourth section.

Mr. SUMNER. Just, I take it, as the Senator himself is under the superintendence of the police of Washington.

Mr. GRIMES. No; he is not.

Mr. SUMNER. Is he not? Then the Senator is in an exceptional position. I take it that we are all under the laws of the land.

Mr. GRIMES. I take it that the deputy policemen are under the general superintendence of the superintendent of police. What does he superintend? Does he superintend the Senator, the citizens, the males and females of the city?

No; he superintends the police who are put under him as the superintendent.

Mr. SUMNER. He sees that the laws are in force for the protection of every Senator, including the Senator from Iowa and myself.

Mr. GRIMES. Exactly.

Mr. SUMNER. And that is what the superintendent here is to do with regard to freedmen.

Mr. GRIMES. If the Senator would only accompany his bill with a commentary upon it, so that we should understand exactly what he meant and what the Senate meant, there might be something practical in it; but without that commentary, without that interpretation, I think there might be a good deal of doubt as to what the bill meant; not doubt in regard to this particular phrase, for I think there cannot be any question as to what is meant by this phrase, "shall have the general superintendence of all freedmen." That means the general control, the general management, the general direction. More expressive language could not have been selected by this select committee than they did select when they drew this fourth section; and I think the sentiment of the Senate is with me on that subject.

It will be observed that the colored men who have once been slaves, as I have already said, no matter what may be their present condition, no matter where they are if they are included within any one of the departments that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to erect under the provisions of this bill, are to be under the general superintendence of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Commissioner.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Like the Indians under the Indian Bureau.

Mr. GRIMES. Certainly. The second section provides—

That the Commissioner shall have authority, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to create departments of freedmen within the rebel States.

That section has been amended at my suggestion so as to limit the number to two for each State. Then he is authorized to appoint Assistant Commissioners who are also limited to four—

With an annual salary of $2,000, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and with authority to appoint local superintendents and clerks, so far as the same may be needed.

It will be observed that there is no qualification required on the part of these Assistant Commissioners or the superintendents or the clerks who are to be appointed and to act under them; there is no obligation of an oath resting upon them; they are not required to give bonds; they are not required anywhere in this bill to make a return of anything that they may do.

Mr. SUMNER. Who?

Mr. GRIMES. None of these Assistant Commissioners, superintendents, or clerks. This bill does not require a return from them to any superior officer as to what they may do or what they may not do. They are not even, so far as I remember—

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator is mistaken—

That the Commissioner shall, before the commencement of each session of Congress, make full report of his proceedings to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall communicate the same to Congress. And the Assistant Commissioners shall make quarterly reports of their proceedings to the Commissioner, and also such other special reports as from time to time may be required.

Mr. GRIMES. Where is that?

Mr. SUMNER. In the very last section of the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I was mistaken about that. The last section of the bill, which would apparently indicate that it was an afterthought on the part of the authors of the bill—

Mr. SUMNER. It was no afterthought.

Mr. GRIMES. By the last or tenth section of the bill it is required that these Assistant Commissioners shall make returns to the Commissioner quarterly, and the Commissioner is required to make a report to Congress at the commencement of each session.

Mr. FOSTER. The superintendents and clerks are not required to do it.

Mr. GRIMES. The superintendents and clerks are required to execute no oath, no bonds, and make no returns. It will be observed also that the Commissioner and Assistant Commissioners, although the money that is to be realized from the renting of this property and the labor of these freedmen has to pass through their hands, are to give no bonds; there is to be, so far as I am able to learn from the bill, no sort of restraint that can be exercised upon them and no power—

Mr. SUMNER. The Assistant Commissioners are to give bonds. The second section, on my own motion, was amended in the seventh line by introducing after the word "dollars" the words "under bond as required for the chief clerk."

Mr. GRIMES. Of what?

Mr. SUMNER. Of the bureau. It is provided in the first section that the chief clerk of the bureau shall be "under bond to the United States for the faithful discharge of his duties;" and then in the second section it is provided that the Assistant Commissioners shall be under the same bond.

Mr. GRIMES. I am glad the Senator has made some provision in that regard. I was not aware that he had done it. It has been done since the bill has been under consideration in the Senate. But the other officers named here and the Commissioner himself are not required to give bonds. They are not even required to swear to support the Constitution of the United States. The fourth section reads:

That the Commissioner, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall have the general superintendence of all freedmen throughout the several departments.

That is all there is material in that section. The residue of the section is merely a stump speech injected into it:

And it shall be his duty especially to watch over the execution of all laws, proclamations, and military orders of emancipation, or in any way concerning freedmen, and generally, by careful regulations, in the spirit of the Constitution, to protect these persons in the enjoyment of their rights, to promote their welfare, and to secure to them and their posterity the blessings of liberty.

All there is in that section that is material is the bestowment upon this Commissioner of an unlimited control and power and superintendence of all the freedmen who may be found at the time of the passage of this act within the several departments that may be created by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SUMNER. Will the Senator indicate one word of unlimited control and power?

Mr. GRIMES. I should suppose that the words "general superintendence" meant general power.

Mr. SUMNER. Does it convey any power of control over them? Is it not a superintendence for their protection, for their improvement?

Mr. GRIMES. I apprehend there is not a man within the sound of my voice, save the Senator from Massachusetts, who does not entertain the opinion that I express. What is meant when we create a superintendent of Indian affairs? Do we not bestow upon that superintendent the control of the Indians within the jurisdiction to which we limit him?

Mr. SUMNER. For their protection.

Mr. GRIMES. For their protection and their government, for protecting them one tribe from another, for settling difficulties that may arise between the agents of the respective tribes that are within their superintendence, seeing that no harm befalls the Indians, and that the Indians perpetrate no harm upon the white man. When the Senator incorporates into his bill a phrase that has received by the common consent of the country and of our courts an interpretation, we must conclude that he intends to mean exactly the interpretation that that phrase has hitherto received.

The fifth section reads:

That the Assistant Commissioners shall have authority, within their respective departments, to take possession of all abandoned real estate and all real estate, with the houses thereon—

I do not exactly know how that was intended to be punctuated—liable to sale or confiscation, or to any claim of title by the United States, and not already appropriated to Government uses; and also to take possession of all personal property found on such estate, and to rent or lease all such real estate, or any part thereof, with the personal property thereon, and to act as inspectors of the same.

Why, Mr. President, the most extraordinary powers are conferred upon these Assistant Commissioners, who are not required, as I said before, to take an oath, who are not required to execute a bond.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon; they are required to execute a bond.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that he must observe the rules of the Senate, and not interrupt the Senator upon the floor.

MR. GRIMES. Who are not to be sent to the Senate for confirmation, who are to receive a compensation of $2,000 a year, $500 more than we pay the agents of our various Indian tribes, and who are to take possession of all the abandoned real estate and all real estate that is liable to sale or confiscation, or to which a claim of title by the United States has already been set up, or that may be set up, and to take all personal property; and what are they to do with it? They are to authorize it to be cultivated and to lease it out; and how is it to be cultivated? This section provides:

Or in case no proper lessees can be found, then to cause the same to be cultivated or occupied by the freedmen, on such terms, in either case, and under such regulations as the Commissioner may determine.

It is to be cultivated by the freedmen on such terms in either case, and under such regulations as the Commissioner may determine, not upon such terms as those freedmen may determine.

MR. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. Read the next clause and you will see.

MR. GRIMES. If the Senator will keep quiet I think I will do him justice and his bill too.

MR. SUMNER. Very well; excuse me.

MR. GRIMES. It is to be "cultivated or occupied by the freedmen on such terms in either case"—that is, whether it is rented out or whether it is cultivated and occupied by the freedmen—"on such terms and under such regulations as the Commissioner may determine." What does that mean? Suppose it stops right there—I will read the proviso presently. That these commissioners may determine the manner and the terms upon which these freedmen shall be permitted to cultivate these abandoned or other plantations. But there is this proviso, which, in the estimation of the Senator, helps the matter a great deal:

Provided, That no freedman shall be held to service upon any estate:

Mark the language: "Held to service"—the very language that is used where you undertake to convey the power to hold in bondage, either for a limited or for an unlimited period of time.

That no freedman shall be held to service on any estate above mentioned, otherwise than according to voluntary contract reduced to writing and certified by the Assistant Commissioner or local superintendent, nor shall any such contract be for a longer period than twelve months.

Now, Mr. President, that is neither more nor less in my honest conviction—I do not say that that was the intention of the chairman of the committee, nor of the committee; I know it was not; I know that they did not design any such thing—but in my opinion it is nothing more nor less than peon slavery. It confers the right to hold this man for twelve months as a slave.

MR. FESSENDEN. If he agrees to it.

MR. GRIMES. That is true; but what is going to be the condition of these men down there, without anything to eat, without anything to drink, without anything to wear, entirely under the control of these Commissioners, men who cannot either read or write? They will have to agree to it. We have not even the assurance of honesty on the part of these Commissioners that would be afforded by their being sent to the Senate and being confirmed by us, so that we may know who they are.

The sixth section of the bill contains this clause:

That they shall take care that the freedmen do not suffer from ill-treatment or any failure of contract on the part of others, and that on their part they perform their duty in the premises.

MR. SUMNER. "Their duty under any contract entered into by them." That is the language.

MR. GRIMES. I did not know that anything had been inserted there. "And that on their part they perform their duty." How are these Commissioners to see that these colored men perform their duty? Are they free men, or are they not? If they are free men, why not let them stand as free men, and let the men who have claims against them for the performance of duty enforce them as they do claims against other people? Why do you confer upon these Commissioners and deputy Commissioners the unlimited power to see to it that these colored men perform what, in the estimation of these Commissioners and deputy Commissioners, may be their duty? How are you going to enforce it? By stripes and lashes? Yes, sir; here is the way they are to enforce it. The third section provides:

That the military commander within any department shall, on the application of the Assistant Commissioner thereof, supply all needful military support in the discharge of the duties of such Assistant Commissioner, unless there are controlling military reasons for withholding the same.

These Assistant Commissioners are to see to it that these colored men perform their contracts; and they are authorized by the third section of the bill to call to their aid, in order to compel the performance of their obligations, the military force that may be within their department. And yet we are told that this bill is designed for the benefit of freedmen!

The eighth section reads—

MR. BROWN. The Senator from Iowa lays a great deal of stress upon the word "freedman." I will inquire of the Senator how much less is a man free who has his contracts enforced by a military authority than one who has them enforced by civil authority?

MR. GRIMES. It has been suggested to me to ask in reply to the Senator—

MR. BROWN. Answer my question before asking another.

MR. GRIMES. Well, Mr. President, it is enough for me to know that there is no corresponding obligation here on the part of anybody to call the military authority to the aid of the colored man if his rights are infringed. This Commissioner may profess to enter into such a contract just as he pleases; he is dealing with men who can neither read nor write; who do not understand their rights nor their obligations in a great many respects; I mean a large portion of them. He enters into a contract nominally in the name of these colored men, and he is allowed to enforce that obligation, whatever it may be, by the military authority within the department.

MR. SUMNER. The object was to guard against rebel incursions.

MR. GRIMES. I have no doubt the object was admirable. I know that the Senator wants to meet the very purposes that I want to meet, to protect these colored men. I am not talking about the intentions that he had in view, or the committee of which he is the organ. I am talking about the bill which I am asked to vote for, and which I am constrained to vote against, and I am assigning the reasons why I do so; because I suppose I shall be compelled to differ with a great many friends with whom I ordinarily act in this Chamber.

MR. HENDRICKS. With the permission of the Senator from Iowa, I wish to suggest an answer to the question asked by the Senator from Missouri. It is a pointed question, and when I read this bill the very question that he suggested suggested itself to my mind. There is this difference: if a free white man of the North makes a contract to serve another for a year, he has a right to make such a contract; but in his person he is not enforced to remain in that servitude during the year; if he fails to remain the entire year he answers in the civil courts in damages. By this provision, however, the slave is required to remain the year, and if he fails to do that duty it is the business of the superintendent or overseer to call in the military force and make him serve in person for the year. There is the difference. He owns him personally for the year.

MR. GRIMES. It is a matter of small consequence, because, I apprehend, there will not be very large receipts from this measure, but the eighth section provides—

That the Commissioner shall apply the proceeds arising from leases in the several departments to pay the salaries and other expenses under this act, so that the bureau herein established may become, at an early day, self-supporting; and any proceeds over and above the annual expense thereof shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, it will be observed that there are no bonds, no checks, no efficient responsibility in connection with this matter. All the salaries of these men are to be paid through this bureau. There is nobody to audit the accounts of these officers under this bill. But the idea is held out that this bureau is to be self-supporting. If the bill should pass, as it may pass, I hope it will be; but such would not be the prediction that I should make in regard to the self-sustaining character of this bill.

Mr. President, the men whom this bill will put under more than the guardianship of these Commissioners and deputy Commissioners, and, as I think, under the temporary servitude of these men, are the same class of men upon whom, three or four weeks ago, a portion of the members of this Senate were attempting to bestow the elective franchise. I submit that there was a very great mistake then, or there is a very great mistake now when we undertake to put under the control of general superintendents the unlimited superintendence of these Commissioners all the colored men who may be within these respective departments, and authorize the Commissioners to enforce with the military power the alleged contracts which this unfortunate and despoiled class of people may be said to have entered into. There either was a great mistake then or else we are making a very great mistake now in passing this bill.

Mr. President, I desire to unite with the majority of this Senate in passing some bill that will relieve this unfortunate class of human beings. I think they demand our sympathies, our protection, and our support. I am ready to contribute of my substance and of the substance of the people whom I represent here as liberally as any Senator upon this floor; but I am unwilling to record my vote in favor of the passage of this substitute. I think that it is violative of some of the fundamental principles of the institutions of this country; it would violate my own convictions of duty and of right; and I therefore cannot support it.

MR. SUMNER. I am sorry to be obliged to say another word in this debate. I had hoped to be excused. But the remarks of the Senator from Iowa leave me no alternative.

I am not astonished at the opposition which this bill has encountered from Senators over the way. It is their vocation to oppose every such measure, and to give it, if possible, a bad name. They believe in slavery, more or less, and will not do anything to remove it or to mitigate its terrible curse. There is the Senator from West Virginia, who gives us smooth words about slavery, with boasts of the slaves he has emancipated, and then straightway, by voice and vote, sustains slave-hunting, and, if possible worse still, startles the Senate by a menace that slaves set free by act of Congress will be reenslaved by States again restored to the Union. That this Senator should attack a bill for a Bureau of Freedmen is perfectly natural; nor am I astonished that he should misrepresent its character. But I cannot conceal my surprise at the course of the Senator from Iowa, who I know has no love for slavery, and no congenital, persistent, and rooted prejudices against justice to the colored race. If the Senator from West Virginia spoke naturally, allow me to say that my friend from Iowa did not speak naturally.

Sir, the Senator has not done justice to the bill which he undertook to criticize. It was evident that he spoke hastily, without having even read the bill. At least this is not an improper assumption when we consider some of his criticisms. It will be remembered how promptly I corrected him when he was picturing the Assistant Commissioners as so utterly without restraint that they were not even obliged to make reports. I read the clause in the bill expressly requiring not only "quarterly reports" but "other special reports from time to time." The Senator, surprised by this provision, replied that it was at the close of the bill and was evidently an afterthought. This again was a mistake. Had he read the bill carefully he would have found that whatever may be its merits in other respects everything is introduced in its proper place, and this provision is no exception. The Senator then complained that the Assistant Commissioner was not obliged to give a bond. Here again he was mistaken. By an amendment moved by myself this was required. All this was a part of the attempt of the Senator to show that the bureau had not been planned with sufficient care. Suffice it to say that there is no bureau of the Government constituted with more care or surrounded with more safeguards against abuse. Much in the last resort must be confided to the honesty of public servants, but in the present case they are all placed under the observation of their superiors; superintendents will be observed by the Assistant Commissioner; the latter will be observed by the Commissioner; and all will be under the observation of the Secretary of the Treasury, who himself is under the observation of the President; and I need not add that the whole will be subject to the oversight of a humane and enlightened people, awakening daily to a sense of obligation which cannot be postponed.

I am not wrong, then, when I say that the Senator did injustice to the bill in his criticism on its structure and the machinery which it establishes. But this was the smallest part of his injustice. He went further, and, following the Senator from West Virginia, asserted that it gave the Commissioner unlimited power and control over the freedmen, so as to hand them over to slavery under another name. I looked at the Senator to see if he were really serious as he made this strange accusation against a measure conceived in a sentiment of humanity and equity, and, by positive provisions, guarding freedmen against the very outrage which the Senator professes to fear. He seemed to be serious, as he repeated the accusation. But as he had erred with regard to the restraints upon the Assistant Commissioners, so he erred in the graver impeachment which he launched.

The Senator began this impeachment by saying that the bill, according to its definition of freedmen, was applicable to all who were "once slaves," and that even Robert Small, the patriot slave who navigated the Planter out of Charleston and gave it to us, would come under its provisions. Very well. Suppose he does. Can he suffer from it? Does he lose anything by it? Can anybody under this bill exercise any power or control over Robert Small? The Senator forgets that the bill assumes that all are free, and in every respect entitled to all the privileges of freemen; that they are invested with every right which the Senator himself possesses, and, if these rights are violated, they may look for a remedy to any court of justice precisely as he could. None of these rights are infringed by the present bill. On the contrary, the officers under it are charged to see that the freedmen are secure in their rights, so that Robert Small himself, if the occasion required, might find aid and protection under it. The bill gives no power to take away or limit existing rights; but it provides additional means for their defense, that emancipation may be perfect, so far as possible.

I do not like to take time, especially when I consider that in opening this matter to the Senate I explained the character of the bill and its necessity. I do not pretend that it is perfect; but I beg to assure the Senate that it is the result of the careful deliberations of the committee. If Senators are disposed to criticize it, or to offer amendments with a view to its improvement, let them do so. But I trust that they will not allow themselves to be carried into a general hostility to the measure, founded on a misconception of its real character. I might remind them again of the large numbers of freedmen—free, thank God! by the legislative and executive acts of the United States—but not yet introduced into the new condition appointed for them—unemployed, suffering, starving, and, with a voice of agony, calling for assistance. I might remind them of the inability of private charity, or any effort organized by private individuals, to meet all the exigencies of this unprecedented case, although the generosity of our people is overflowing. And I might dwell on the obligation of the nation, reaching everywhere with its hundred arms, to do what any inferior charity must fail to do; and I might especially show that it was not enough to strike down the slave-master, but that you must go further, and lift up the slave. But I forbear. I content myself now with reminding you that if you oppose legislation to help the freedmen in their rough passage from slavery to freedom, you hand over this unhappy people—unhappy for long generations, and not yet conducted into the full enjoyment of freedom—to a condition which I dread to contemplate. They look about and find no home. They seek occupation, but it is not within their reach. They ask for protection, sometimes against their former taskmasters and sometimes against other selfish men. If these are not supplied in some way by the Government I know not where to look for them. Surely, sir, you will not hesitate in this good work. You will not hesitate to provide, so far as you can, carefully and wisely, the proper means to secure employment for these freedmen during the transition from one condition to another, and, above all, to throw over them everywhere theegis of Constitution and law. And such, permit me to say, was the single object of the present bill, which has been so cordially misrepresented by the Senator from West Virginia and so unjustly misrepresented by my friend from Iowa.

I have said that the object was care and protection for persons actually free and so regarded, who, from the peculiarity of their condition, might not be able in all respects to secure these without assistance. To this end a central agency is proposed at Washington, with subordinate agencies where the freedmen are to be found, devoted to this work of watching over emancipation, so that it may be surrounded with a congenial atmosphere. Is not the object worthy of support? Who will question it?

The language of the bill describing the functions of the Commissioner is plain and explicit; and yet out of this language, so guarded, and so utterly inoffensive, the Senator from Iowa has conjured a phantom to frighten the Senate from its propriety. Why, sir, if there were anything which, by any possibility, could justify the fears of the Senator, if there were anything which even the most lively imagination could exaggerate into anything but care and protection, then I should be the first to denounce it, and to ask forgiveness for an unconscious aberration. But there is absolutely nothing; and if you will listen to the words of the bill you will agree with me.

I begin with the very words which to the Senator from Iowa were so alarming:

The Commissioner, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall have the general superintendence of all freedmen throughout the several departments.

Here are duties imposed upon the Commissioner; but there is no power or control over the freedmen. Calling a man superintendent gives him no power, except in conformity with the laws; but here all the laws, general and special, are for freedom. And yet the Senator has repeated again and again that here was a grant of unlimited power and control over the freedmen. To his mind here was an overflowing fountain of tyranny and wrong.

Mr. GRIMES. Will the Senator tell the Senate what is meant by it?

Mr. SUMNER. With great pleasure; and if I can have the candid attention of my friend, I believe that he and I cannot differ about it, for I will not doubt that we have the same objects at heart. Obviously the language in question indicates in a general way the character of the duties to be performed. They are duties of superintendence; but we are to look elsewhere to see the extent of these duties; and the words which follow in the same section show something of their nature. Thus:

And it shall be his duty especially to watch over the execution of all laws, proclamations, and military orders of emancipation, or in any way concerning freedmen.

There, sir, is the first glimpse of the duties of this tyrant. Mark, sir, there is not one word of power or control over the freedmen, but duties solemnly imposed, all in behalf of freedom. What next?

And generally, by careful regulations, in the spirit of the Constitution, to protect these persons in the enjoyment of their rights, to promote their welfare, and to secure to them and their posterity the blessings of liberty.

Here again are the duties of the Commissioner; but there is not one word which confers power or control over the freedmen. The main object is protection in the enjoyment of their rights, inborn but new-found. This is to be crowned by such watchfulness as will promote their welfare and secure to them and their posterity the blessings of liberty; and all this is to be according to "careful regulations." To find tyranny in this provision the Senator must be as critical as the German theologian who found a heresy in the Lord's Prayer. I do not go to the dictionary for the meaning of superintendent. This is needless. Obviously, the superintendent must superintend according to law; and since this is now for freedom, whatever he does must be for freedom likewise. He can do nothing without this inspiration. There is a superintendent of emigrants; but nobody supposes that he can do anything with regard to emigrants except in conformity with law. The mayor of Washington is, in a certain sense, a superintendent of the Senator and myself, as we walk the streets or lie down at night in our houses, to see that we are protected from outrage and robbery.

And the Vice President or the President of the Senate is a superintendent of this Chamber, to see that the rules of parliamentary law are observed. But the Senator would not think of attributing to either of these functionaries that "unlimited power and control" which he read in the superintendent of freedmen. And yet it exists in one case just as much as in the other.

I think, sir, that after this explanation there can be no difficulty in answering the inquiry of the Senator. By superintendence of all freedmen is meant that watchfulness of their rights and interests, consistent with laws general and special, for their protection, welfare, and liberty, so that they may be helped to employment and be guarded against outrage. The object is good. What other word would the Senator employ to designate it? How would he describe the humane function of the Commissioner? He is versed in language. Will he supply any term more apt? I invite him to do it, and shall gladly accept it. Since we seem to concur in the object proposed, let there be no difference on account of words. All that I desire is something which shall supply help and protection. For this I cheerfully sacrifice all the rest. And there is no single word in the bill from beginning to end which can give the most remote apology for any other idea.

But I have thus far only glanced at a single section. Look further. I skip for the moment the next section, and go to the sixth, which describes some of the duties of the "Assistant Commissioners and local superintendents." It begins by declaring that they shall act as advisory guardians to aid the freedmen in the adjustment of their wages, or, where they have rented plantations or small holdings, in the application of their labor.

Mark, if you please, the friendly service to be performed. Not in this way do tyrants or slave-masters act. Here is advice, guardianship, and the adjustment of wages—all inconsistent with slavery in any of its pretensions. What next?

That they shall take care that the freedmen do not suffer from ill-treatment or any failure of contract on the part of others, and that on their part they perform their duty under any contract entered into by them.

Mark again the friendly service required. Here is another duty cast upon these officers.

Mr. GRIMES. How is that to be enforced? Suppose they will not work—will not fulfill their contracts?

Mr. SUMNER. The duty of these officers is "advisory." They are not invested with power to enforce any provisions, unless by a court of law or some other tribunal. The freedmen are entitled to all the rights of freemen, just as much as the Senator. Curiously the Senator does not seem to have purged his mind of the idea that these men, in some way or other, have not yet ceased to be slaves—[Mr. GRIMES. No.]—an assumption which, however natural in the Senator from West Virginia, is not natural in my friend from Iowa. But let him recognize them as free, like himself, and he will see that there is no remedy open to him which will not be open to them, and that any outrage upon them will, in point of law, be the same as if inflicted upon himself.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to ask the Senator if there are courts of law in existence in these rebel States before whom the parties may appear.

Mr. SUMNER. I am afraid that courts of justice in those States are not yet in perfect operation.

Mr. GRIMES. Then I want to ask the Senator—

Mr. SUMNER. The next words of the section show what shall be done by these officers to promote the administration of justice. Thus:

They shall further do what they can as arbitrators to reconcile and settle any differences in which freedmen may be involved, whether among themselves or between themselves and other persons.

Here is the duty of arbitrator and peacemaker; but no power or control. And this duty is applicable to differences of all kinds where the freedmen are parties. Nothing can be more humane or less tyrannical. But this is not all.

In case such differences are carried before any tribunal, civil or military, they shall appear as next friends of the freedmen, so far as to see that the case is fairly stated and heard. And in all such proceedings there shall be no disability or exclusion on account of color.

If not "arbitrators," then the officers are to be "next friends" to aid the freedmen in any litigation into which they may be drawn. Very little tyranny here. And this service is to be rendered in any tribunal, "civil or military," so that where the civil courts are closed the freedmen may obtain justice in any military tribunal. But whether in a civil or military tribunal, there is to be no disability or exclusion on account of color. When we consider how this disability and exclusion have been the badge of slavery and its pretensions, we may find in their positive prohibition a new token of the spirit in which this bill has been conceived. Very little tyranny here.

Mr. GRIMES. But, Mr. President, the case that was put by me was not where there was a controversy between the colored man and some third party, but where the Commissioner attempted to enforce the obligation of duty upon the colored man. What I wanted to know was how the Commissioner was going to exercise this duty enjoined upon him in the sixth section, in these words: "and that on their part," that is, on the part of the freedmen, "they perform their duty." Now, the Senator admits that the law requires and enjoins the obligation on the part of the Commissioner to see that these colored men perform their duty. They have not got any courts in those States; the Senator admits that. They cannot enforce them in a court of law. The colored man has not got any property, and you cannot compel a specific performance of personal labor. Now, I want to know of the Senator if a Commissioner who undertakes to carry out the provisions of this bill may not, under the third section, avail himself of the military authority that may be in the department to enforce obedience; and if he thinks it would be doing justice to the colored men in the department to leave them to the military control of the Commissioner, of whom we know nothing, and about whom we do not know whether he sympathizes with the colored man or not. Is it right to leave these colored men to the military control of this Commissioner in order to enforce the obligation to labor?

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator now calls attention to another section, where it is provided that "the military commander within any department shall, on the application of the Assistant Commissioner thereof, supply all needful military support in the discharge of the duties of such Commissioner;" and he inquires if this does not authorize the Assistant Commissioner to use military power in making the freedmen work. Let me say at once that the criticism of the Senator on this point is absolutely novel. If the clause to which he refers could be employed to any such purpose, I beg to assure him it was not anticipated by the committee. The clause was intended for a very different purpose—in the interest of the freedmen. And here again let me remind the Senator that nothing can be done by any officer, military or civil, toward a freedman which cannot be done toward any other citizen. If this military power can be used against one it can be equally used against the other. The occasion for this power seemed to be obvious. It was supposed that in the rebel States there might be exposed districts where the plantations would be subject, perhaps, to incursion or ravage from the enemy, by which the labor there would be disturbed unless military protection were at hand, or that there might be cases where the control of the plantations would be prevented or interrupted. It was to remedy this evil that this provision was introduced. Such was the object sought to be accomplished. It was protection in the spirit of the whole bill, and nothing else. If by any possibility there can be any chance of any abuse of this power beyond what is incident to every trust, I shall be very glad to take advantage of the criticism of the Senator and amend the bill so that the evil which he snuffs afar shall not be permitted to arrive.

The Senator cannot bear the thought of our freedmen exposed to the tyranny of military power. But does he not forget that at this moment they are subject to this tyranny? It is to remove them from this arbitrary control and uncertain protection that we now establish a bureau, which shall be an agency of the civil power, charged to surround the freedmen with every safeguard which the Constitution and laws can supply. Show me any provision in one or the other for the protection of human rights, and I claim it at once for the freedman against any oppressor, whatever may be his office or name.

Let the Senator bear these things in mind, and give us the advantage of his counsels. I shall welcome from him any suggestion, any proposition, any criticism calculated to promote the object of the bill. The more he makes the better. Let him be no niggard. But I trust he will pardon me if I complain of a hasty assault, which, as it seems to me, can have no other effect than to injure the cause itself.

But I have not done with the criticism of the Senator. It was on the fifth section, concerning labor on abandoned plantations, that he bent his whole force. In the provisions of that section he found a new system of slavery; sometimes it was slavery outright, and sometimes it was peon slavery. Senators who did me the honor of listening to my remarks at the beginning of this debate will remember how I dwelt upon the importance of guarding against any revival of slavery under any other name, whether of apprenticeship or adscription to the soil; and they may remember, perhaps, how I explained the impossibility of any such occurrence under the present bill, and showed that the freedman was guarded at all points. And yet, in the face of this exposition and of the positive text—better than any exposition—the cry has been sounded that the liberty of the freedman is in danger. The Senator read this section over at length, and then repeated again particular clauses and phrases, striving to interpret them for slavery. I will not read it at length; nor will I dwell on the first part of the section. Suffice it to say that, so far as it describes the lands which are to be taken for occupation, it follows substantially the text of the order from the War Department, by which "all houses, tenements, lands, and plantations, except such as may be required for military purposes, which have been or may be deserted and abandoned by insurgents within the lines of military occupation," are placed under the supervision and control of the supervising special agents of the Treasury Department. Under this order the Secretary of the Treasury has been acting for more than a year; doing with regard to these lands precisely what the Senator so vehemently condemns. The present bill, so far as concerns the power of the Commissioner over the lands, has done little more than reduce the order of the War Department to the text of a statute, thus giving to it a certain legality which it does not now possess.

But passing from the lands which are to be occupied under the bill, the Senator next pictures the terrible fate of the freedmen laboring on these lands in pursuance of careful contracts. There seemed to be no limit to the Senator's anxiety lest they should be bound in slavery. I welcome his generous anxiety. But I pray that he will not allow it to mislead his judgment or prevent him from seeing the case in its true character. Surely he must have been unduly excited, or he could not have found danger in these words:

In case no proper lessees can be found, then to cause the same to be cultivated or occupied by the freedmen, on such terms, in either case, and under such regulations, as the Commissioner may determine.

"What a frightful power!" exclaimed the Senator. But why? Here is no power or control over the freedmen, but simply over the lands, which the officers are to cause to be cultivated or occupied. These officers are the representatives of the Government of the United States, to which these lands belong for the time being, and, in determining the terms and regulations under which they are to be cultivated or occupied, they do no more than is done by the Senator with regard to the lands which he is so happy as to own. The Senator determines the terms and regulations under which his lands shall be leased or cultivated; does he not? And he would be surprised if any person called in question his rights in this regard; especially would he be surprised if any person undertook to infer that the freedom of laborers upon his lands could be compromised by any terms or regulations which he might choose to adopt. But there is no power which he might exercise over his own lands that may not now be exercised by the Government. In each case, the laborer must be treated as a freeman. The Senator seems to imagine that there is a power or control over the freedman, which is conferred by these words. Here is the mistake of the Senator. The power and control are over the lands, not over the freedmen. There is not a word in the clause which can be tortured into any such idea. I challenge the Senator to point it out.

Thus far I have considered this clause, which according to the Senator is so terribly pregnant, without alluding to the express limitation which follows in the same section. Even without this limitation it is clear and blameless. But the committee, in order to make assurance doubly sure, and to setup an absolute impediment against any abuse, have added the following proviso:

Provided, That no freedmen shall be held to service in any State above-mentioned otherwise than according to voluntary contract reduced to writing, and certified by the Assistant Commissioner or local superintendent; nor shall any such contract be for a longer period than twelve months.

And yet in the face of this proviso the Senator sees danger. Nobody can be found on this land except in pursuance of voluntary contract, which must be reduced to writing and certified by an officer of the Government. Nor is this all. The contract is not to be for a term beyond twelve months; so that, by no excuse, and by no exercise of power, can the freedman be put even under a shadow of control beyond this brief term. He is in all respects a freeman, laboring on land according to careful contract for a limited period. And yet the Senator calls this beneficent arrangement slavery, and then, changing the name, peonage. Sir, the Senator has an imperfect conception of that peonage which is indefinite service, or that slavery which is service for endless generations, if he undertakes to liken an employment in pursuance of contract most carefully guarded for a term of a few months to either of these conditions.

But all this is only a part of the mistake in which the Senator has proceeded from beginning to end. I am at a loss to account for it. I do not understand it. That I regret it most sincerely I need not say. I counted upon his good will with regard to this bill. I felt sure of his sympathies with regard to its general objects. I do not renounce the hope of these sympathies now. But I cannot forbear saying that, to my mind, the Senator has thrown himself in the way of a humane undertaking, and has practically abandoned the claims of that oppressed race to which he and I both owe service. Long have they suffered; much have they been abused; wearily have they journeyed through life; and now at last, when slavery is overturned, and we seek to provide a passage from its torments to a better condition, where labor shall be quickened and protected by liberty, and where all rights shall be respected, it is hard to find our efforts arrested by a crosswind from such an unexpected quarter.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. President, the purpose, as I said when I addressed the Senate before, which the Senator desires to secure, is one that commends itself to my heart. I want to do exactly what he wants to accomplish. It is a humane purpose; but I think most conscientiously that he is not attaining that object by the passage of the bill which he seeks to have us pass; and hence, acting according to the convictions of my own heart, I am compelled to vote against the passage of the bill.

The Senator says I have proceeded upon a wrong supposition, that I, in common with the Senator from West Virginia, seem to entertain the notion that these men are not freedmen. It is because I do entertain the opinion that they are freedmen, and because I am anxious that they shall forever remain freedmen, that I oppose the passage of this bill. Why, Mr. President, according to my conviction, the only way to treat these men is to treat them as freedmen. You have got to give them alms, you have got to exercise acts of humanity and friendship to them for awhile. They will be jostled as we are all being jostled through this life, but in a little while they will settle down into the position that Providence has designed that they shall occupy under the new condition of affairs in this country. It is not by any such processes as are attempted to be enacted into a law by the passage of this bill that you are going to really alleviate the wants and difficulties under which these people now suffer.

Mr. President, the Senator started out with a declaration that I was altogether mistaken as to the interpretation that is to be put upon the fourth section of this bill. He says that the words "general superintendence" do not confer the power and the control which I said they did. Now, sir, I have an authority here, which I know the Senator recognizes as the highest in the country, Worcester's dictionary; that is the Harvard university authority.

Mr. SUMNER. The best dictionary.

Mr. GRIMES. Permit me to read: "Superintendent, one who superintends; a director; an overseer," a very unfortunate word in this connection. "Superintending, overseeing; directing; taking charge of anything."

What was it that I said was meant by these words? What was it that I said would be the legal construction of them? That they would have the control, the power to take charge of, the overseeing of these men; and it was to that that I objected. Now, look at the definition of the verb as laid down by Worcester: "To superintend; to oversee," from whence the word "overseer" on the southern plantations is derived; "to overlook; to have the care or direction of."

Mr. SUMNER. Now, let me interrupt my friend just there. The Senator hinges much on the synonym "overseer," and reminds us of the overseer on a plantation. Now, the word "overseer" in itself is not a bad word; it has a bad association. It is bad where a man is overseer for slavery; but if a man is an overseer for liberty, and if the bill charges him to oversee for human freedom and to guard sacredly all the rights of these persons, then I rejoice to call him "overseer."

Mr. GRIMES. Then I understand that the Senator virtually abandons the ground that he took when he was up before, and admits that I was right in the interpretation of the term, but he says that he intends that these men shall oversee, not for wrong but for good, that he intends to confer the power to oversee, to take charge of, to direct, to control these men—

Mr. SUMNER. Not to control.

Mr. GRIMES. To take the charge of, to take the direction of. What is that but taking the control of? He admits that it is the purpose of the bill to confer this extraordinary power, this general superintendence, this general control, this general overseeing, but he says he is going to have it executed beneficially for these colored men. If we pass this bill, that is the way that I trust these great powers will be exercised; but I am fearful that if we confer upon these officials such extraordinary powers, they may not always and in all cases exercise them for the benefit of these men.

The Senator went on and read to us the duties of these officers as they are described in the sixth section, that they "shall take care that the freedmen do not suffer from ill-treatment or any failure of contract on the part of others, and that on their part they perform their duty." Now, he says that this can be enforced in a court of justice, and yet we all know that there are no courts of justice there. How, then, is this Commissioner to perform this duty? What means does the bill place in the hands of the Commissioner or deputy Commissioner to perform this injunction of the law that is imposed upon him? There is one means, and only one means, and that is provided for in the third section, which allows him to call to his aid the military power that may be within his department to enforce obedience at the point of the bayonet; and furthermore let me remark that this military commander may be the overseer himself by the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I would call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that the word which he criticises so freely is used in our laws already. We have a Superintendent of Indian affairs who superintends the various agents; but I have never yet heard that he had authority to reduce them to slavery. He must superintend in accordance with the laws. We have a Superintendent of the Mint. I believe he superintends in accordance with the laws. In the same manner "superintendents" here means those who superintend in accordance with the purposes of the bill. Furthermore, as to the mode of enforcement, it does not necessarily follow that he must do it by means of the military power, because that is a matter which the department of course will have under regulation. It may be done by the retention of wages; it may be done by various modes, as various duties which are now enjoined upon other subordinates are required to be performed.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. President, when there is a question of human liberty presented to me for my consideration, I do not choose to submit it to the regulations of any department.

Mr. BROWN. It is not submitted to the regulations of any department. That is declared in the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. The fourth section, on which the Senator from Massachusetts has commented, provides:

Or in case no proper lessees can be found, then to cause the same to be cultivated or occupied by the freedmen on such terms in either case and on such regulations as the Commissioner may determine.

The Senator from Massachusetts insists that this does not apply to the freedmen; that it does not give the Commissioner any power or control to determine the relation that the freedmen may occupy to these cultivated or occupied possessions. If anybody will read that language critically he will observe that it gives to each of these Commissioners power, first, to lease the land to any other party; second, to lease it to the freedmen themselves and enter into a contract, himself being the agent both of the Government and of the freedmen too; and thirdly, it gives him an opportunity, if he chooses, to occupy it upon any other terms and make just such a contract as he pleases as the representative of the Government and as the guardian of these colored men in regard to that occupation; and then the sixth section authorizes and requires that he shall hold these colored men to the performance of their duty under the contract which he has thus entered into for them. I cannot approve of such a provision as that. It seems to me that the objection is radical.

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. President, I had hoped that the remarks which I submitted yesterday would have been all that it would be necessary for me to make in the discussion of this bill; and I rise now very reluctantly, but I rise under a sense of duty to myself and to the Senate, to notice some of the remarks of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. I do not exactly understand, I suppose I do not understand, that honorable Senator in some of the phraseology which he uses; and before I proceed further in my remarks I wish to understand from him what was his meaning. He seems to draw a distinction between the motives which operate upon me and the motives which operate upon the honorable Senator from Iowa in opposing this bill; and while he complains that the honorable Senator from Iowa unjustly misrepresented the bill, he alleges at the same time that the Senator from West Virginia "cordially" misrepresented the bill. I desire to know what the honorable Senator from Massachusetts meant by that qualifying term.

Mr. SUMNER. I will explain with great pleasure. Since the Senator from West Virginia has been a member of this body, I have observed his course. I find that while sometimes boasting that he has emancipated slaves he openly avows his willingness to be a slave-hunter. I cannot forget, sir, that on another occasion he shocked this Senate and the country by the open, unblushing declaration that after the emancipation of slaves in a State they might be again reenslaved and plunged into their former bondage. Who can forget the splendid eloquence with which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HALE] at once denounced the impious assumption? Sir, I was then astonished that this Capitol itself did not open "its ponderous marble jaws" and cast the Senator out; ay, sir, and ejaculate him back into that land of slavery which he seems to be so unwilling to forget. The Senator asks why I said that he cordially set himself against this bill. Because, sir, in setting himself against this bill he simply followed those instincts which his former conduct has displayed.

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. President, if I escape the ponderous jaws of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, I imagine I shall be in no danger of being swallowed up by the Capitol of the Union. [Laughter.] I do the honorable Senator the credit, however, to say that he has been very explicit, and I am happy to have the opportunity on the present occasion to pay my respects to the honorable Senator in reply to the charges which he has been making without authority upon this floor as well as elsewhere. Sir, I never advocated the reenslavement of negroes who had been emancipated. The Senator in his New York speech represented me as doing so. The record does not bear him out. It is not so, sir. But I did say that certain policies then initiated, if persisted in, would lead the States where slavery existed to the reenslavement of negroes already free; and I say to-day, in reply to the honorable Senator, that until very recently it was a matter of daily occurrence in Virginia, and I imagine all through the South, that those who had been free were reenslaved. I did not vindicate that law; I did not say it was right; but I said that the result of the policy advocated at that time would lead to such an effect in those States.

Mr. SUMNER. Did not the Senator say that it might be done, and did the Senator heap scorn and indignation and contumely on such an idea? No, sir. He named it as an argument to influence our conduct.

Mr. WILLEY. I did name it as an argument, Mr. President. I named it as an argument and a result to be deprecated, and so the connection in which I made the remark will show, not because I advocated it, but deprecating the policy and imploring Senators to desist lest those consequences might ensue which I as much as they deprecated. But, Mr. President, these remarks come with an ill grace from the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. Has he forgotten the time when I stood here on this floor solitary and alone, in the name of freedom knocking at the doors of Congress for admission into the Union, coming in the name of the first soil rescued from the rebellion, and in the name of the first soil rescued from slavery, knocking at the door of Congress for admission upon the platform of freedom? Can I forget when I stood here in that condition that I met with the persistent hostility of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, and that his vote stands to-day recorded against the admission of West Virginia into the Union? And yet he rebukes me as standing here as not being opposed to slavery! Sir, I desire to attract the attention of the country to the honorable Senator's record in that case. I wish my voice could reach Massachusetts, whose freemen he represents and whose freedom sentiments he represents, to let her know that on a distinguished occasion, when he had it in his power, practically to extend the area of freedom and to strike the shackles from more than twelve thousand slaves his vote was recorded against it.

And yet, sir, the honorable Senator says he is not astonished that I follow out my instincts! The honorable Senator smiles. I suppose that is intended for an answer to my argument and an answer to these facts. I recall the expression, Mr. President: the honorable Senator cannot smile. Sir, there is a wonderful difference between a smile and a sneer, a mere sardonic grin. One comes from the genial nature and kindly sentiments of the heart, the outkindling upon the features. The other is that kind of grim satisfaction which may be imagined to rest upon the dusky features of the inquisitor down in the dungeons of the dark ages when the logic of religion was the thumb-screw and its charity a cat-o'-nine-tails—that kind of satisfaction which rested upon the features of the gentleman's progenitors when they were cutting off the ears of the Quakers in Massachusetts or tormenting to death old women as witches at Salem.

Sir, my instincts are all the other way. My record is for freedom. The best part of my fortune has been devoted to freedom, and it is one of the consolations of my heart that when my old slaves, now walking free as God's freedmen may walk, bend each night and morning before the altar to render their devotions to their Maker, their benedictions rest upon me, not because my instincts have been adverse to freedom, but because through me they have been made free.

Mr. President, I am at a loss to understand the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. I am at a loss to understand his persistent hostility toward me as indicated by his manner, and by his style, and by his language. I have never sought occasion to give him offense. I have been desirous, as far as I could consistently with my obligations to the Constitution and the laws and obedience to my instincts of freedom, to cooperate with him in bringing about the time when the shackles should fall from the last human being in bondage, and I as earnestly desire to see the accomplishment of that as he can. What is there upon this record here that would justify any such assertion as the Senator has made on this floor to-day, made with a dictatorial air as of one having authority, but in the language and elocution of a sophomoric? The gentleman may crack his lash where he has authority. He has no terrors for me. Humble as I am, I regard myself as his peer upon this floor, and whenever I see proper to discuss a bill which he introduces I will do it fearlessly, I trust courteously, and I call the Senate to witness whether there was anything else than courtesy in what I said yesterday in regard to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that would justify the unwarrantable insinuations and imputation of improper motive which he has made against me here to-day.

Now let us look. I made a few remarks yesterday expressing my objections to this bill. The honorable Senator from Iowa to-day, with much more force, I acknowledge, rises in his place and makes the very same identical objections, and the only difference is that he puts them in a clear and strong light, much more so than I was able to do. And yet, sir, I am to be denounced as being operated upon by impure and improper motives; I am to be denounced to-day as a slave-hunter; the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, with all the bitterness which he could throw both into his manner and into his voice, denounced me here on the floor of the Senate of the United States as a slave-hunter, as having openly advocated slave-hunting. Sir, when did I do so? Where did I do so? How did I do so? I do not remember ever discussing upon the floor of the Senate or elsewhere in public the question of the fugitive slave law except the other day when the bill was up for consideration. What did I do then? I simply said that I would not enter fully into that matter, but I read the following as expressing my opinion exactly; I will read it again:

"It is scarcely questioned that this provision"—

Referring to the clause of the Constitution relative to fugitives from service—

"was intended by those who made it for the reclaiming of what we call fugitive slaves; and the intention of the law-giver is the law. All members of Congress swear their support to the whole Constitution—to this provision as much as any other. To the proposition, then, that slaves whose cases come within the terms of this clause 'shall be delivered up,' their oaths are unanimous. Now if they would make the effort in good temper, could they not, with nearly equal unanimity, frame and pass a law by means of which to keep good that unanimous oath?"

Who uttered that language?

Mr. SUMNER. Is not that a vindication of slave-hunting, and has not the Senator voted for slave-hunting in this Chamber during his short presence here?

Mr. WILLEY. Well, sir, we will see how I voted. I just now remarked that I am in very good company if I did so vote, the majority of the Senate having voted the same way that I did. I ask again who used this language? It was the present Chief Magistrate of the United States; and why does the honorable Senator here pour out his violence and his spleen upon my humble head, when he has a man worthy of his ambition and worthy of his mark whom he may denounce? Sir, does the honorable Senator intend to vote for this slave-hunter? Is this the first tocsin of war against Abraham Lincoln that he is not worthy to be the next President of the United States because he is a slave-hunter? The gentleman asks if this is not the language of slave-hunting. Be it what it may, it is Abraham Lincoln's language; and if Abraham Lincoln is a slave-hunter for using this language, so am I for adopting the language as my own, not otherwise. I said on that occasion, after quoting this language:

"I think the case is very plainly stated, sir, and therefore I shall conclude my remarks on that branch of the topics which I propose to discuss to-day by simply saying that I cannot vote for any repeal of our fugitive slave law until there is another law proposed accomplishing the same result in a better and more humane manner. If the honorable Senator from Massachusetts had introduced a law to supply the place of this, so that we might keep our constitutional obligation, and if that in its terms had been efficient and more humane, it would give me great pleasure to vote for it; but while this obligation rests upon me as a member of the Senate, while I am one of those who have taken that 'unanimous oath,' I shall feel as long as there is a slave remaining with the shackles on him, however much I may detest slavery in the abstract, that it is my solemn duty to make a provision to carry into effect the plain requirement of the Constitution."

That is my offense constituting slave-hunting! My offense was adopting the language and sentiment of the present excellent Chief Magistrate of these United States. Am I to be condemned for entertaining such sentiments? What was the result of that discussion? The honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] proposed an amendment that the fugitive slave law, as it is called, of 1850 should be repealed, leaving the law of 1793 still as the law of the land. In obedience to the very sentiments that I uttered, I voted with a majority of the Senators upon this floor for the repeal of the law of 1850, leaving the law of 1793 as the law of the land.

Are we all slave-hunters that voted for that proposition? Is the distinguished Senator from Ohio a slave-hunter because he voted for and moved that proposition? Are other distinguished Senators that I see on the other side of the Chamber also to be denounced as slave-hunters because they adopted that policy and voted for that proposition? Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts is welcome to all he can make out of this record.

Now, sir, it seems that I have not yet recovered from the influence of slavery; it was "natural" for me to vote against this bill! How inconsistent is that? It was because I believed the operation of this bill would be prejudicial to the freedom of these freedmen that I opposed it. It was because I believed it would initiate a policy that would lead to their ultimate reenslavement that I opposed it. It was because I believed it was giving an arbitrary authority over the person and over the labor and over the rights of these unfortunate beings that I opposed the extraordinary provisions of this bill. And yet I am to be charged with obeying my natural instincts and education and going against freedom!

But, sir, asking pardon of the Senate for these personal observations, I desire to avail myself of the floor while I am up to notice one or two other considerations which I think it would be well for the Senate to observe.

I want to put this question to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts who has this bill in charge: to-day how much territory in the South, if this bill were a law, how many counties in any one body anywhere in the States whose people are in rebellion, could be brought under the operation of this law? Take Virginia, for instance. Our armies are now beyond Richmond or near Richmond in one quarter; they have moved upward Charlottesville or Staunton in another; they have left half the territory of the State behind them within what are called our lines. I ask the honorable Senator to-day if he had his Commissioner appointed, in what single county in that scope of territory dare he go and stay all night this night twenty miles from Alexandria or ten miles from Alexandria? How long would a parcel of these freedmen placed upon a plantation be allowed to labor in any of that section of country before Mosby and his guerrillas would be upon them? And is it not so everywhere else? Does not the same condition of things exist to a very considerable extent everywhere in the States in rebellion?

But it will be argued that this cannot last always, that the rebellion will be crushed. Why, sir, when the rebellion is crushed, then let the State authorities be reorganized and revived and take charge of these matters, as the only proper and legitimate authority to do so. Until then it will be impossible, even if this bill become a law, to carry this complex machinery into effect with any degree of efficiency; and what will be the result of that? We shall have a Commissioner at a heavy salary, and his clerks at heavy salaries, and his Assistant Commissioners at heavy salaries, not in the territory of the rebel States but in Washington city, or at their homes, afraid to go there, paid by the Government of the United States as mere sinecures. I put it to honorable Senators to say whether that would not be the condition of things. To-day I ask where you can get a respectable scope of territory sufficient to compose a district, where you can get not merely half a State, but the one fourth, or one tenth, or one twentieth part of any State in rebellion in which you could establish this system? Sir, if there be such a territory I do not know where it is.

And now, sir, a general remark in regard to the bill, further. This bill has few or no checks upon the operation and conduct of these Commissioners and subaltern officers. They are invested with most astonishing control and power, both over the property which they are to take into possession and the labor of the freedmen whom they are to control. We have already complaints, I am afraid too well founded, of corruption and speculation on the part of the Treasury agents, and it seems to me that the wit of man could not devise a more efficient system for speculation and corruption than is devised by this bill, a more efficient agency to operate in that direction, with fewer checks and balances, and no pains and penalties whatever anywhere in the bill to check or to punish those who are guilty of speculation under its provisions.

With such a bill, the principal result of which will be to introduce a system of peonage or reenslavement of these Africans that will necessarily lead to corruption and speculation, if it lead to anything at all, that will very probably only result in creating some twenty or thirty officers to be paid heavy salaries while they remain at home, I ask whether at this hour and under existing circumstances the interests of the country; the justice of the case demand at the hands of the Senate any such legislation.

Sir, I scorn and repel any imputation, come from what quarter it may, that indicates immediately or remotely that I am actuated in my conduct upon the floor of the Senate here otherwise than by the purest and holiest instincts for freedom. I may err in my judgment; but, as God is my judge and will be at the final day, I desire from the depths of my heart universal emancipation as soon as it is practicable, and I am for the manner and way that will bring it about most speedily and most judiciously. The whole tenor of my life gives the direct denial to the imputations of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. My private and my public record do not bear him out in casting such imputations. I have differed with Senators here in regard to their policy. I have thought that sometimes the policy would lead not to the liberation of the slave, but would absolutely lead, perhaps in the free States—I thought so in the beginning of this controversy—to the reenslavement of the negroes that were there already free; that it might do so; that probably it would do so, that such would be the result. Circumstances have changed very much since that time. I do not now believe that such will ever be the case. Such an onslaught has been made upon slavery that no possible reaction, it seems to me, can ever recover it from the final destiny of universal emancipation to which it is tending.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from West Virginia has again repeated the charge that the bill under consideration creates a system of peonage. Does he know what a system of peonage is? If he does, then he does not know what the bill is.

Mr. WILLEY. Does the honorable Senator know what the bill is?

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly I do.

Mr. WILLEY. Then he knows what peonage will be if it be adopted. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER. That indicates, then, the precise difference between the Senator from West Virginia and myself. However, sir, I do not wish to be carried into any verbal dispute with that Senator or with any Senator on this floor. Candidly and sincerely I seek the truth, and I regret any difference with anybody, and let me say in all frankness that since I have been on this floor there has been much in that Senator which has interested me, and yet there has been something which has pained me; but when I was pained I always tried to remember that he had unfortunately been brought up under a system of slavery, and I have been too intimate, from long experience on this floor, with the operations of slavery on character not to recognize the unhappy circumstances by which the Senator had too obviously been surrounded. It takes long to recover from slavery, and the unconsciousness of its influence is one of the characteristics which appear in those who have been exposed to it.

The Senator was able to rise on this floor and deliberately to state without putting his heel upon the idea that men once emancipated might under the operation of State laws be reenslaved. He now seeks to explain it away. The Globe, sir, is the perpetual record. Here it is. I have sent

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1864.

NEW SERIES... No. 187.

for it. On April 10, 1862, the words were said, and on that day they were happily denounced by the Senator from New Hampshire. The Senator from West Virginia proposed as an amendment to a pending proposition that provision should be made for the "deportation or colonization of all other persons of the African race who are now free in any of the United States." That was his policy, deportation, colonization, applicable on a gigantic scale, and the Treasury of this country was to be taxed to carry out that idea. How did he enforce the idea? By developing at some length that persons of African descent could not be allowed to continue in communities where they had been emancipated, and he wound up as follows:

"Here you are surrounding us"—

"Us" slave-masters—

"by an impassable barrier of constitutional interdictions against the diffusion of this population, while at the same time you want to manumit our slaves and throw them broadcast on our community. Sir, the evil will be unendurable, and the result will be the reënslavement of the slaves thus manumitted, as well as those already free in our State."

And having given utterance to that most atrocious sentiment, he took his seat.

Mr. WILLEY. Did I indorse—

Mr. SUMNER. Excuse me; I have the record here; it will all appear. The Senator from New Hampshire was happily in his seat, and he rose at once and said:

"Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have not said a word upon this bill, and did not intend to, and I do not know that I shall now; but I declare I cannot sit still and hear such sentiments as those that have just been uttered by the honorable Senator from Virginia without an attempt to rebuke them. The honorable Senator intimates, of course not offensively, but in the way of a threat, that ultimately the State of Virginia and possibly the State of Maryland and the State of Kentucky may be compelled, in consequence of a system of legislation indicated by this bill, to reënslave their colored population, to tear the colored freemen of those States from the little portion of right which they enjoy, and bind them again in the chains of bondage and slavery."

Mr. WILLEY. I hope the gentleman will permit me—

Mr. HALE. I shall get through in a minute, and then I will.

Mr. WILLEY. Simply an explanation. The gentleman misconceived my remark.

Mr. HALE. I think I did not misunderstand the remark?"

The remark was as plain as day; I have read it—

"I certainly would not misrepresent the Senator. The intimation was that they would be compelled, as a matter of necessity, to reënslave the colored population that are already free and those that would be made free under this bill. Now, sir, I recollect, as long ago as the last war with England, after the victory of General Jackson at New Orleans, hearing a famous song which was sung all over the country in praise of the hunters of Kentucky. I have as high regard for the chivalry, bravery, and the power of Kentucky, Virginia, and Maryland, and any of these States as any man has; but I tell them, and I tell the Legislature of every State in this Union, that when they undertake that they undertake a job that they cannot do; they set themselves in opposition to the moral sentiment of the country and of the world. There is not a monarch to-day on the throne of any of the kingdoms of Europe situated there so firmly that he dare to set himself in opposition to the moral sentiment of mankind. I take it, sir, that it is neither fanaticism nor superstition to say that when the Creator of the earth made the earth, and the same Power made colored men, He intended that the colored men He had made should dwell upon the earth that He had made; and that when the broad earth was subjected to the servitude of man and the flat went forth that by the sweat of the brow of man should his living be obtained from the earth, it was a universal edict, irrespective of complexion, and that the earth is subject to the servitude of supporting the black man as well as the white. I laugh to scorn all attempts and all threats at reënslaving this people. I tell you it cannot be done. I believe, sir, that the Almighty, sitting on the throne of eternal justice, would proclaim in thunder tones, that States no less than individuals would hear, that the great and eternal principles of fundamental justice could not be outraged against a whole people and a whole class so grossly as that without a vindication on His part of the eternal laws which He has promulgated."

That, sir, was the deserved rebuke which the Senator from New Hampshire gave to the Senator from West Virginia. There is a long explanation that follows, which the Senator may read if he sees fit; I certainly cannot congratulate him if he thinks that it contains any apology for the sentiment which he uttered. Sir, I come now to one other point—

Mr. WILLEY rose.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator will bear with me; I shall not be long. One other point. The Senator is unwilling to be called a slave-hunter. Let him not, then, in any way sustain the hunting of slaves. Sir, I use plain language, and I always have used plain language ever since I have been on this floor, especially when slavery in this terrible form was under consideration. A man who hunts slaves is a slave-hunter. A man who authorizes another to hunt slaves is a slave-hunter. If slavery be a crime, then is slave-hunting something more, for slavery never appears in so odious an aspect as when it assumes the form of slave-hunting. And yet the Senator now to-day openly avows himself a slave-hunter; and satisfies his conscience by referring to others who do the same thing. Sir, each man must stand or fall by himself. If the Senator from West Virginia chooses to vindicate or to sanction in any way the hunting of his fellow-man, I know no term of our common language which more aptly designates the function which he undertakes than that which I have employed. If the term be offensive it is not so offensive as the thing.

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts still persists in denouncing me as a slave-hunter in a manner and in language not to be misunderstood by the Senate, and to which I dare not be indifferent if I could. It is designed to carry with it reproach. It is designed to carry with it something of the particeps criminis, something humiliating, something dastardly, something mean. Now, Mr. President, how far do I go for the fugitive slave law? No further than the Constitution of the United States in express terms provides. Who made it? George Washington. He is one of the authors of the fugitive slave law; he is a slave-hunter! James Madison too is a slave-hunter! I suppose their ashes will not be much disturbed to-day, after the accumulated glory of half a century resting on their memories, by the traducing epithets of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, who denounces them far more than he does me. If I had been in their place, with my present feelings, it is very probable that I never would have consented to the introduction of such a clause into the Constitution. Perhaps, actuated as they were by a spirit of compromise, in order to make a Union and to perpetuate it, I might be induced to do so, but from no other consideration. And because to-day I desire upon the obligation of the oath which I took at your desk to carry out in good faith that oath and to see that the Constitution is preserved and maintained and its laws executed—a Constitution formed by George Washington and James Madison and the brightest intellects that ever adorned humanity—I am to be denounced in the contemptuous language of the Senator from Massachusetts as a slave-hunter. Sir, every Senator upon this floor must judge of his own constitutional obligation in the light of his own conviction, but with my conviction of my duty under the oath which I took to support the Constitution, if I did not go for carrying out that clause in some form by some law or other, as humane as possible, I should regard myself as worse than the vilest slave-hunter and slave-driver that ever cracked the lash over the back of a slave—a perjured man, unfit for earth and unfit for heaven.

But then, sir, the honorable Senator thinks I do not understand what a "peon" is. From his expression I am pretty certain that he does not. It has several significations. We understand it best in this country, I suppose, from the example nearest to us in Mexico. A "peon" is thus defined by Worcester: "In Mexico, a day laborer, usually a laborer held in servitude until a debt is discharged;" not for life; "a bondman for debt." Now, if this bill is not pretty much peonage according to this definition, I do not know what peonage is.

Now, sir, a word in regard to my remarks made some two years ago which have been read by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. The honorable Senator evidently conveyed, or his language was calculated to convey, the idea in the first place that I had advocated the reënslavement of those who had been emancipated, that it met my approbation. He read the record, and I ask Senators to observe whether there was a word in it that sustains the honorable Senator in that view of the case. I was using it as an argument that this terrible consequence would ensue, a consequence which in the very terms I used I deprecated, as the result of the policy that the honorable Senator was then pursuing. I did then think that peradventure the result of that policy would be the reënslavement of emancipated negroes. Sir, I thought that reënslavement would come from another quarter. I supposed the reënslavement of the poor negroes who have been emancipated by this war would take place by their original masters. I never expected that the first act and movement for their reënslavement would come from the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, as we have it in this bill here to-day.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 15, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. CHANNING.

By unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.

The House then resumed the consideration of joint resolution of the Senate (No. 16) submitting to the Legislatures of the several States a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to discuss directly the question before the House, I wish to devote a few moments in replying to some remarks which fell from the lips of my colleague [Mr. Ross] last evening, and incidentally to remarks which have been uttered by other gentlemen since this debate commenced. I was surprised at the speech of my colleague last evening. In the whole course of a prepared speech of an hour's length, scarcely one word did he utter by way of rebuke of the rebels and traitors of the South. The entire burden of his speech, with a very small exception, from beginning to end was abuse of the Administration and of the Government, misrepresentation as to the manner in which the war had been conducted, and allegations against the Union men of the country that they had produced the war and were continuing it with a view to self-aggrandizement. It is true that he did for a very few moments, in a very mild and gingerly manner, take issue with Jeff. Davis and his crew upon the dogma of the right of States to secede from the Union under the Constitution; but it was done in a very deferential and careful and tender manner. To the balance of his speech it was like a grain of wheat hidden in a bushel of chaff; you may search for it all day, and when you find it it is not worth the seeking; or like Falstaff's bill at Mrs. Quickly's tavern, a penny-worth of bread to an enormous quantity of sack.

My colleague said that he and the party with which he acts are the friends of the soldier, that he himself introduced into the House a resolution to instruct the Committee on Military Affairs to increase the pay of officers and soldiers thirty-three per cent., but that instead of the committee reporting a bill to increase the pay of officers and soldiers of the Army thirty-three per cent. they had only reported a bill to increase the pay of the soldiers ten cents a day, while at the same time they reduced his rations.

Now, what is the truth about this? A bill has been reported and has passed this House to increase the pay of soldiers from thirteen to sixteen dollars per month. It is true that that bill also provided for the repeal of part of the act of 1861, which act largely increased the rations of the soldier. And why? Because it was found that the soldier did not require these rations, and did not consume them. It was found that the rations provided by law for the soldiers in the field were sufficient to support a frugal family of a man, wife, and three children. The surplus rations were wasted, or their proceeds went into the pockets of commissaries and quartermasters, or were wasted. No soldier has complained of the reduction of his rations. I defy my colleague or any other gentleman on this floor to point to the case of a single soldier in the Army of the United States who complains of the loss.

True, my colleague did introduce a resolution, as he says, to increase the pay of officers and soldiers thirty-three per cent., but I think a few moments' examination of the votes of my colleague and the party with which he acts on other questions will not only convince the House and the country but the soldiers also, that those measures are not introduced by him from any friendly motive or feeling toward the soldier.

What has been the course of that gentleman and his party on this floor in regard to voting supplies to the Army? What has been their course in regard to raising money to pay the Army? His vote will be found recorded in almost every instance against the appropriation bills, against ways and means for raising money to pay the Army. It is only a week ago last Monday that a bill was introduced here to punish guerrillas, to punish those men who infest the woods and highways, playing neutrals when our Army comes along, and then prowling along the highways to shoot the wounded soldier who is dragging his weary footsteps to the rear to a hospital; and how did my colleague vote? Against the bill. First, there was a motion made to lay the bill on the table, and my colleague voted for that motion. On the passage of the bill, when the yeas and nays were again ordered, my colleague voted in the negative. And yet he is the friend of the soldier! I submit on this point an extract from the Globe of the proceedings of June 6:

"Mr. GARFIELD. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back bill of the House No. 429, to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes.

"The bill was read in extenso.

"Mr. ANCONA. How does that bill come in under this call.

"The SPEAKER. Under the call of States for resolutions bills may be introduced. That has been the uniform practice of the House.

"Mr. GARFIELD. I call for the previous question.

"Mr. LE BLOND. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

"The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order during the demand for the previous question.

"Mr. LE BLOND. Is a motion to refer to a standing committee in order?

"The SPEAKER. It is not now in order.

"Mr. LE BLOND. I move, then, that the bill be laid upon the table.

"Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

"The yeas and nays were ordered.

"Mr. ELDRIDGE. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays to see whether the previous question is seconded or not.

"The motion to lay upon the table was disagreed to.

"The House was then divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 35.

"So the call for the previous question was seconded.

"Mr. ELDRIDGE moved that the bill be laid upon the table.

"Mr. BLAIR, of West Virginia, demanded the yeas and nays.

"Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

"Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ELDRIDGE, and COLE of California, were appointed.

"The House was divided; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty five.

"So (more than one fifth voting in favor thereof) the yeas and nays were ordered.

"The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 35, nays 67; as follows:

"YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Bliss, James S. Brown, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Grider, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Hutchins, William Johnson, King, Le Blond, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McDowell, James R. Morris, Morrison, Noble, Pendleton, Perry, Robinson, Rogers, Ross, Scott, Chilton A. White, and Joseph W. White—35.

"NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Bailly, John D. Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Jacob B. Blair, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eliot, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Huburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Littlejohn, Longyear, Marvin, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, Thayer, Tracy, Upson, Elihu

B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—67.

"So the bill was not laid upon the table.

"The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was on the passage of the bill.

"Mr. ALLER called for the yeas and nays.

"The yeas and nays were ordered.

"The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 72, nays 37; as follows:

"YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Bailly, John D. Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Jacob B. Blair, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eliot, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Huburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Littlejohn, Longyear, Marvin, McIndoe, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, Thayer, Tracy, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—72.

"NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Bliss, Coffroth, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Grider, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Hutchins, King, Knapp, Le Blond, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McDowell, Morrison, Noble, Pendleton, Perry, Robinson, Rogers, Ross, Strouse, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Chilton A. White, and Joseph W. White—37.

"So the bill was passed."

On the subject of arming slaves, of putting negroes into the Army, how has my colleague and his party voted? Universally against it. They would strip from the backs of these black soldiers, now in the service of the country, their uniforms, and would send them back to slavery with chains and manacles. And yet they are the friends of the soldier!

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Illinois is not discussing the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The constitutional amendment opens a very wide range of debate. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. Ross] to whom he refers followed the same course of debate last evening, and it was tolerated.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. My colleague [Mr. FARNSWORTH] is only replying to the speech of my other colleague [Mr. Ross] who spoke last night, and on whom no point of order was raised.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not attempted to confine gentlemen very closely in debate, for the proposition certainly opens up a very wide range.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the point of order will not be pressed. But I trust that he will not charge that the Democratic party has, by any declaration, favored the returning of slaves to rebel masters.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. On the vote to repeal the fugitive slave law how did that side of the House vote? Does not the fugitive slave law affect the black soldier in the Army who was a slave? That side of the House are in favor of continuing the fugitive slave law, and of disbanding colored troops. How did that side of the House vote on the question of arming slaves and paying them as soldiers? They voted against it. They are in favor of disbanding the colored regiments, and armed with the fugitive slave law, sending the men back to their masters. I do not charge this on the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] I think he does not vote invariably with his party. He has too much sense and too good a heart for that.

Another objection to this proposition, made by my colleague, [Mr. Ross,] and also by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD,] and by the other gentleman from New York, [Mr. PRYOR,] is that it strikes at property; that it interferes with the vested rights of the people of States in property. What constitutes property? I know it is said by some gentlemen on the other side that what the statute makes property is property. I deny it. What vested right has any man or State in property in man? We of the North hold property, not by virtue of statute law, not by virtue of enactments. Our property consists in lands, in chattels, in things. Our property was made property by Jehovah when He gave man dominion over it. But nowhere did He give dominion to man over another man. Our title extends back to the foundation of the world. That constitutes property. There is where we get our title. There is where we get our "vested rights" to property.

In these points are summed up pretty much all the arguments made on the other side of this House against the passage of this bill, and I will occupy no more time in answering them.

Mr. Speaker, at the time of the organization of this Government there were but about fifty thousand slaves within the limits of the United States. When our fathers rose out of the clouds of the Revolution and formed this Constitution, which I trust we are about to amend, no one of them dreamed that slavery in this land would continue until this time.

This fact may be gathered from the writings of the men who wrote and from the speeches of the men who spoke in that day. Why, sir, immediately after the Revolution, Congress issued an address to the people in which occur these memorable words:

"Let it be remembered, finally, that it has ever been the boast and pride of America that the rights for which she contended are the RIGHTS of HUMAN NATURE."

This language was deliberately adopted and addressed to the people of the United States. This was after the Declaration of Independence, wherein they had declared as self-evident facts that all men were created equal, and endowed with the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. And when they followed this by the adoption of the Constitution the greatest care was taken that no words should be incorporated into that instrument which would imply that "man could hold property in man." I use the very language of James Madison, a member of the Convention which framed the Constitution. He objected to incorporating the word "slave" or "slavery" into the Constitution, for the reason, as he said, that he would have nothing put into it which would recognize the right of a man to hold property in man. And you may search through the Constitution from the beginning to the conclusion of it, and no stranger to the fact that slavery has existed in the United States would believe for a moment that slavery could exist under it.

Let that Constitution go before a court which is a stranger to the fact that slavery has existed here, and let it be construed as courts are required to construe written instruments, by itself, without looking to the facts of contemporaneous history, and no judge thus construing the Constitution would say that slavery could exist under it.

Our fathers were thus careful in framing the Constitution so that when slavery should be entirely abolished, and when their posterity should come to look in there, they could find nothing to mar its beautiful symmetry. That was the object, that when future generations came to look at that sacred instrument they should not find anything in it to indicate or imply that slavery ever existed in this land. Why, sir, they believed that slavery was going to die out speedily. Already steps had been taken in several of the States toward the abolition of slavery, and several of the States abolished it soon afterwards. There were, as I said before, but fifty thousand slaves in the Union. The raising of slaves for market was unprofitable. The old fathers who made the Constitution, the men who fought the battles of the Revolution, fought for the rights of human nature, and they believed that slavery was at war with the rights of human nature. Of course such men, who had just gone through the fires of a seven years' war for those principles, and who framed the Constitution upon such a base, believed that slavery would die, and that speedily. Mr. Jefferson, in his Notes on Virginia, says:

"In the very first session held under the republican Government the Assembly [of Virginia] passed a law for the perpetual prohibition of the importation of slaves. This will in some measure stop the increase of this great political and moral evil, while the minds of our citizens may be ripening for a COMPLETE EMANCIPATION OF HUMAN NATURE."

Why, sir, it has been said by gentlemen over the way, if not now I have heard the sentiment uttered before on that side of the House, and by men of that party, that the "human nature" referred to in that address of Congress was not meant to apply to black human nature; that that only meant white men, Anglo-Saxons—Anglo-Saxon human nature! But Mr. Jefferson declares that the abolishing of the importation of slaves may prepare the way for the "speedy emancipation of human nature." That shows what was meant and how those words were understood

I said I thank God that this nation at last has recognized the manhood of the negro. It did that when it put on him the uniform of a soldier of the Republic, and put him into the field to defend the country. His rights and his manhood were recognized, and nobly does he vindicate himself. Sir, I know something of the good faith, of the reliability and nobility of the negroes, and of the faithfulness with which they assist us. The very first information that the army of McClellan had of the approach of Jackson from the Shenandoah toward Mechanicsville was given by a contraband who came into my lines a little above Atlee's station. When I had examined him I sent him to headquarters, with a note stating that he possessed and had given me valuable information. Porter sent him back to me with directions to send him through my lines again for more information. That very night he passed through the picket lines of the enemy, and in twenty-four hours returned with information of the exact position of Jackson and his army, and of his designs. And yet, according to the doctrine of my colleague, I should have put chains and manacles on that man, and with stripes sent him back to his master. What right had he there? Set at him the blood-hounds of the fugitive slave law; "the Constitution guarantees slavery; you are agitating the rebels and making them worse." Irritating them; yes, sir, that is the expression. I irritated that man's master by not sending him back. Was not that man more valuable to the Government than Jeff. Davis and his whole crew ever were? Was he not better entitled to respect from the white men of this nation than any man now in the rebel ranks, or who sympathizes with them, no matter what his position or wealth?

Mr. ROSS. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he thinks the white man is equal to the negro.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, that is a silly question which it is useless to answer. I think some white men are better than some other white men. I think some white men are better than some negroes, and that some negroes are better than some white men, especially those of the copperhead persuasion.

Mr. Speaker, upon every battle-field where the black troops have had any chance to show their gallantry and bravery, they have vindicated the high estimation which has been placed upon them and the confidence imposed in them in elevating them to the position of soldiers. I know it used to be said when the idea of arming the blacks was first broached that white soldiers would not fight by the side of black men. Go to the Army to-day and witness the charge of a black brigade, and then come back and tell me whether the white soldier is not willing that the black man shall fight by his side. Witness the shouts and plaudits and cheers which ring out from the throats of the white soldiers as the black men march steadily up to the serried lines of the rebels, and then come back and tell me if the white man is not willing that the black man shall help him to fight the battles of his country.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of finishing this business entirely and finally now. No child is so simple as not to know that slavery is the cause of this war; that it is the source of all our woe. Then why not finish it? It has spread the land with weeds and mourning. It has hung the very heavens with black. It has disgraced and dishonored us long enough with the other nations of the earth, and God is now chastising us for the sin.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to detain the House at this late period of the present discussion with any protracted expression of my views in regard to the measure now before the House. I rise merely to make one or two suggestions in reply to the line of argument which was pursued yesterday upon this question by gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, and to give my reasons why I believe it to be the duty of every man who has the welfare of his country at heart to vote for the joint resolution now before the House. With that class of thinkers who agree with the member from the fifth congressional district of New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] that slavery is the best possible condition for the negro race, or for any race, I do not intend at the present time to enter into argument. Sir, I would consider it derogatory to the representatives of a free people to enter into a deliberate argument to refute a proposition so monstrous and so barbarous as that enunciated by the gentleman from New York. Humanity and civilization revolt against a sentiment so inhuman in itself, and so debasing to the mind that holds it, as the sentiment which we listened to yesterday, that slavery is the best possible condition of the negro race.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I reaffirm it.

Mr. THAYER. I am willing that he shall reaffirm it. Let that record which he here reaffirms to-day go down to posterity in the history of this country, and let those who act with the gentleman from New York assume the responsibility of that sentiment before the country if they dare.

Sir, the gentleman from New York has a right to his sentiments. He has a right to express them. While I find no fault with his expression of them I can only say that for myself I would not hold or avow a sentiment so barbarous, so cruel, and so inhuman in its character as that for all the wealth and honor that are embraced within the four quarters of the world.

I do not intend, sir, to enter into an argument to show that the negro is not a brute but a man. I will not insult the presence in which I stand by entering into an argument to prove that which every man's conscience, which every man's humanity, must or ought to admit without argument. I have said, sir, that I do not intend in the few moments during which I shall occupy the attention of the House to deal with that kind of argument. I content myself here with simply denouncing such sentiments as those expressed by the gentleman from New York as barbarous, inhuman, uncivilized, and unchristian. I am willing that the record which he has made shall go down to posterity as he has chosen to make it yesterday and to reaffirm it to-day.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. That is why I did it, for posterity, not for this House, nor for the fanaticism of the day.

Mr. THAYER. I pass from that. I have nothing to say to men who hold sentiments of that character. In my opinion it is too late in the history of the world, and too late in the history of this country, for it to be necessary to enter into any argument to prove the falsity and the inhumanity of a sentiment like that to which I have referred.

But, sir, I pass to some objections which were urged to the passage of this joint resolution on the ground of a want of power in Congress to pass it. It was said by the gentleman from New York from the fourteenth district [Mr. PRYOR] that we had no right—at least I understood that to be the line of his argument—to provide for an amendment of this character to the Constitution. He referred to the fact that all the amendments of the Constitution that have hitherto been adopted were restrictive in their character. And, if I understood him, he meant to build upon a statement of that fact an argument that we had no right so to amend the Constitution as to enlarge the powers of the General Government. I take issue with the gentleman on that argument. I stand on the Constitution when I say that the people of the United States have by the forms and instrumentalities prescribed in the Constitution an unlimited right to amend that instrument, except in the particulars in which they are prohibited by the fundamental law itself. When I find in an instrument like this a power given to amend in every respect except in certain specified particulars, on what has an argument to stand which says that you can only amend it in one direction, that you can only amend it in a manner that shall restrain and contract the powers originally granted, and that you cannot amend it in a direction that will enlarge its powers or improve its character? Such a principle as that conflicts with the very foundations of liberty. Upon what ground, I ask, are the people of the United States to be told that they cannot, if they choose, improve the fundamental law of their Government? Suppose the people of the United States were to propose to amend the Constitution so as to enlarge the presidential term of office to six years, would that be a restriction of the rights already granted? Undoubtedly not. And yet, according to the theory of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. PRYOR], they could not so amend the Constitution. So if the people should choose to alter the Constitution in regard to the length of service of their Representatives in Congress, or to enlarge the powers of Congress, they clearly may do it. I suppose there is no one on this floor who would deny that proposition. And yet such an amendment would be in direct contravention of the principle laid down by the gentleman from New York, because it would not be a restriction or limitation of the rights already granted, but an enlargement of them.

I might multiply these illustrations indefinitely, but there is no necessity to do so. The fallacy of the argument is as clearly demonstrated by one example as it would be by a hundred. The truth is that there is not the slightest foundation for the principle laid down by the gentleman from New York.

The people have, in making the Constitution, reserved to themselves a right of amendment unlimited, except in the particulars in which they have chosen, in the fifth article, to restrain themselves from amendment, and those are so clearly defined that it is impossible to fall into any mistake in regard to them. You cannot alter the equality of suffrage in the Senate without the consent of the State to be affected thereby. You could not, prior to 1808, prohibit the slave trade or alter the proportion of direct taxes to the census as prescribed in the ninth section of the first article. These were fundamental points which the framers of the Constitution declared should not be changed. In no other respects was the will of the people to be restricted. In all other matters the power of amendment is unlimited. In all other matters three fourths of the States may amend, revise, restrict, enlarge, or correct, as it may suit their own judgment.

Sir, this is a matter for the people of the United States. We are not amending the Constitution. We do not propose to amend the Constitution. We propose by this joint resolution to afford the people the opportunity of amending their Constitution if they see proper to exercise that power. When the Legislatures of the several States shall act upon the amendment proposed to them by Congress in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, they will act as the representatives of the people. The votes which they will give for or against any such amendment are the votes of the representatives of the people. Their voices are the voice of the people. If then, sir, the people have an unlimited right of amendment of their Constitution except in so far as they have chosen in the fundamental law to restrain themselves from the exercise of that right, the only question which remains is whether it is proper at the present time to afford the people the opportunity of so amending the Constitution of the United States, if they shall see proper so to do, as to prohibit slavery forever within the territory of the United States.

But here we are met with the objection that the time is not auspicious for such action; that it is not a proper time to amend the Constitution in this respect. Why, sir, what time could be more opportune for effecting this great national reform than the present time? What hour is more proper for the punishment of a great State criminal than the hour in which he is found engaged in the commission of his crime? This institution, sir, has waged war against the life, the liberties, and the Government of the nation; and this institution for this crime deserves to die. It should die in the commission of its great and unpardonable crime. No more proper time could be fixed for inflicting the punishment than the time in which it is engaged in carrying on this desolating war against the very existence of the Government.

But we are told that this will exasperate the people of the South; that we should act calmly upon so grave a measure; that it will drive the South to fiercer resistance. Sir, if a smile were not out of place in the discussion of a subject so terrible and so distressing in its character as the war which now rages in this country, surely such an argument as this would justify it. The atrocities committed by the traitors in arms have been so many and so great that it is mere folly to speak of increasing their hatred or exasperation. To the ferocity and vindictiveness of those who, for the extension and perpetuation of this cruel and remorseless institution, have commenced and are now carrying on this war against the Government of the United States, you can add nothing by any legislation which you may propose here; you can add nothing to the hate which these conspirators against public liberty entertain against the free institutions of the United States and the people who are in arms to defend them.

I repeat, sir, that now is the time to uproot and destroy forever this prolific cause of all our sufferings. Let the institution of human slavery, which has set on foot this diabolical war and filled the land with desolation and sorrow, perish from the earth. It alone stands between our country and its future greatness, prosperity, and glory. Let us so act to-day that its injustice, its cruelties, and its bloody footprints shall speedily and forever disappear from the soil of America.

Mr. MALLORY. I not only take issue with the gentleman from Pennsylvania who just addressed the House, on his assertion that this is preëminently the time to amend the Constitution, but, sir, I believe the calm reason of the House, if they would submit themselves to their calm reason, and the calm reason of the country, will bear me out in declaring that of all the times, from the foundation of the Government down to the present moment, for taking into consideration the Constitution, that great instrument of organic law, for the purpose of alteration and amendment, this is the most inopportune and unfit. That instrument, sir, was given us by a band of men the like of whom I believe has never been seen in this or any other country; men of wisdom unparalleled; men of almost more than human wisdom, for I believe I shall be sustained in the declaration which I now make in the full view of history and of the great events in which they lived, those noble sires, when they gave us that great instrument, spoke almost as men inspired with wisdom from on high.

Do you tell me, when the passions of the entire country are swayed to and fro by the civil war now raging in our midst, when the public passion and feeling are upheaved from their lowest depths, that we are fit, calmly and deliberately, to act on the work of those great masters and say in what particulars it should be changed? Sir, the declaration is one of arrogance and presumption, against which I offer my solemn protest. Who are the men who are to take into consideration and pass in review this wonderful work of those mighty men? Where are the giants of the present day to correct the work of the giants of the past? Do we see them in this Hall? I cannot see them. Do we see them in the Senate of the United States? That was a great body in former times. They are not there. Are they to be found in this country, either in high official position or in the walks of private life? If they are, I have failed to find out where and who they are.

Sir, when you compare the pigmies who undertake to trifle with the Constitution and the legislation of this land upon this floor to-day with the great men who framed and expounded that Constitution in the earlier and better days of the Republic, it is like comparing Hyperion to a satyr.

No, Mr. Speaker, this is not the time for changing the Constitution of the United States. When men return to their reason, or when reason returns to men, when passion has subsided, when this civil war has ended, and peace spreads her wings over this land, will be time, if there be a necessity for it, to consider this great system and attach to it such amendments as the calm wisdom of that day shall adjudge proper. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] feel that he is competent to examine and analyze and alter and amend this great instrument? Has he the conscious power?

Mr. THAYER. In this particular I think that we are all fitted.

Mr. MALLORY. In this particular! Why, sir, in this particular you are less fitted to act than in any other particular that can be imagined. You cannot reason about the institution of slavery. You cannot judge about it. You run a "muck" whenever the question is introduced into this Hall. No word of reason, no word of judgment, and no word of sense scarcely falls from your lips when the subject is mooted. Yet in this particular you feel yourselves competent to do better than the great men who framed this Government have done!

The provisions of that great instrument in relation to the subject of slavery were the result of compromise, without which this Government never could have been framed. To that Constitution, with that and other compromises embraced in it, every State in the Union gave not only an implied but a direct and express assent. We are informed by the best writers on the science of government, at least they have consented to the truth of the aphorism, that "all government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed." Even now in this time of war, in this time of passion and excitement, to change the Constitution on a vital point, when eleven States are not here to consult and act with us, and when their assent to this altered Constitution is not expressed and cannot be implied by any sort of forced construction, and say that they shall be subjected to it, is in utter violation of this great and just principle. They do not compose a foreign country and a foreign Government, as so many on that side of the House have asserted. They are States of the Union yet, who have formally given their assent to the Constitution which you now propose to amend. If you change it in their absence what right have you to declare that they shall abide by it? If all Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, when you have amended this Constitution what right have you to say to those States in revolt, who are not here to-day to engage in your deliberations, that they are bound by that Constitution to which they have given neither assent or dissent?

Sir, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] urged that this amendment is necessary; ay, in that new language which the President of the United States has put into their mouths, I suppose he and his party would say indispensable in order to preserve the peace of this country and the integrity and perpetuity of the Government. It is necessary, it is indispensable in order to effect these great objects that slavery now, when you have the power in the absence of those States, should be stricken from existence. And they say this is necessary because it is impossible to continue this Government of ours any longer with slavery in it. It is such a disturbing element that peace and slavery are incompatible, and through all time, if you permit this crisis to pass without exterminating it, you will have this disturbing cause to produce civil war in this country.

I deny that theory. From the commencement of this Government down to this time—a period of seventy-five years—slavery has existed in the United States, and I defy the most astute man upon that side of the House to point to a nation that has progressed like ours in everything which makes a nation great, prosperous, and happy, in the same space of time. It was not until you undertook to strike down this institution that it became a disturbing element, and agitation to restrict and destroy it, commenced by the North, and for its extension by the South, have produced the effects from which we are now suffering. Slavery inconsistent with the republican liberty which we have enjoyed under the Constitution of the United States! Slavery inconsistent with peace! An irrepressible conflict between free and slave States in the same Confederacy! The absurdity of the doctrine is proved by the inexorable logic of history; by proof incontestable and absolute.

Where do those who differ most widely upon the subject of slavery live? On the Gulf of Mexico, and away up in the cold region of New England; States not in contact; States as wide apart almost as the poles; in South Carolina, from which a slave rarely ever escaped, and Massachusetts, into which one scarcely ever fled, whose people rarely met, and knew little of each other. But in the border States where I live, where free and slave States come in contact, a different state of feeling prevails. Take the immense strip of country where this contact exists along the Ohio river; take Kentucky on one side and Indiana on the other; Kentucky on one side and Illinois on the other; Virginia on one side and Ohio on the other; Missouri on one side and Illinois on the other, and Missouri and Iowa, and I defy any man to point out any portion of the people of this country who have lived in more perfect peace and accord and harmony. The southern portion of those free States bordering on the slave States, along the Ohio, have never objected to the institution of slavery. They have agreed with us socially; they have had constant friendly intercourse with us as neighbors; they have returned our property, and the most friendly relations have existed between those portions of the free States and the slave States along the Ohio.

But when you go further north you find a people who are constantly exciting the public mind by inflammatory writings and speeches, and by everything calculated to arouse a feeling of hatred against the people of slave States. There is no irrepressible conflict between the free and slave States; no want of homogeneity in the people of those States in which slavery exists and those in which it does not exist; and there is no enmity except that which has been engendered by the teachings of the enemies of our country North and South. An aspersion of this kind is a mere pretext; it has always been such, and it has nothing to warrant it. Did not the States which adopted this Constitution, did not the State which I represent, and of which I am proud, when they gave their consent to the Constitution of the United States, pledge themselves that every State should be preserved—not particularly in the right to hold slaves, for I do not want to talk about the matter in that limited and confined view—but did they not pledge themselves that every State should have the right to the unfettered control of their own domestic institutions in their own way? If we were disposed not to value slavery and cared nothing about it, yet we ought to stand in solid phalanx protesting against this infringement which, if not rebuked, will reduce us to abject submission and slavery. Give up our right to have slavery if we choose, submit to have that right wrested from us, and in what right are we secure? One after another will be usurped by the President and Congress, until all State rights will be gone, and perhaps State limits obliterated, and a grand imperial despotism erected on the ruins of our rights and liberties. It will matter very little whether this is accomplished by amendments to the Constitution, or under the plea of military necessity, or under the claim that whatever is indispensable is lawful, even though clearly in violation of the Constitution. Against this consummation I will speak, and, if necessary to prevent it, I will fight.

Kentucky, sir, protesting here on this floor, protesting by her people, protesting through her press, protests against amendment of the Constitution at this time, and does not hold herself bound to a Constitution that you change in spite of her protest and in spite of the absence of those States which would aid her in preventing that amendment.

You say that slavery is incompatible with peace, and fealty and allegiance to the Constitution dangerous to the Union. Sir, did the existence of slavery in Kentucky, Missouri, and Maryland lead those States into rebellion against the General Government? Did it induce them to follow the lead of South Carolina into rebellion? Yet slavery existed there. It exists in those States now. How then can you, in the face of this proof, say that slavery cannot exist in States and those States be loyal? Why persist in the declaration that it is impossible to preserve the Union and let slavery exist? In making this declaration you give the lie to your President and his prime minister. Seward, in his letters to Dayton and Adams, says, "Slavery will remain whether the rebellion succeeds or fails." Ah, Mr. Speaker, slavery is not properly a ground or a cause for a dissolution of this Union, for civil war, or for disturbance. But I am very much afraid that the party upon the other side of the House, aided by the present Administration of the General Government, may make slavery the cause for the disruption of this Union. You have changed your whole policy in regard to the war. You have converted it from a war to preserve the Union, as you acknowledge and boldly declare, into a war for the abolition of slavery, because you say that is the only way to preserve the Union. What has been the effect of your course? You have united the people of the southern States in solid phalanx and divided the people of the North, and alienated to a great extent the people of States who were almost undivided at the commencement of the war. By your peculiar policy, the confiscation bill, the freedmen's bill, and now by your proposed amendment to the Constitution, you have made the South a unit against you, where at the commencement of the war there was a divided opinion.

Sir, I remember a remarkable statement made of the great man who now heads the Administration of this Government, and whom you are trying to make your President for the next four years on this subject. On the Sunday preceding the day on which the extra session of Congress was to adjourn in 1861, I called upon the President by appointment in company with two of my colleagues, now dead, the lamented Crittenden, and Jackson who fell so gallantly at the battle of Perryville, and my colleague from the Maysville district, [Mr. WADSWORTH.] Congress had passed the confiscation bill, limited in its operation and scope, confiscating only the property of rebels used in the rebellion and emancipating the slaves so used. We thought we saw in that measure the commencement of this emancipation policy of the Government which would lead to disastrous results. We visited the President with a view of trying to induce him to forbid that law. We had a long and free conversation with him. He left the impression on my mind and on the minds of my colleagues that he would not give his sanction to that law. He said that he was opposed to this whole system of legislation, and left the impression on us, although he did not say so in express terms, that he would veto that bill. In the course of that conversation he turned to me and, addressing me personally, said: "Mr. Mallory, this war, so far as I have anything to do with it, is carried on on the idea that there is a Union sentiment in these States, which, when set free from the control now held over it by the presence of the confederate or rebel power, will be sufficient to replace those States in the Union. If I am mistaken in this, if there is no such sentiment there, if the people of those States are determined with unanimity, or with a feeling approaching unanimity, that their States shall not be members of this Confederacy, it is beyond the power of the people of the other States to force them to remain in the Union;" and said he, "in that contingency—in the contingency that there is not that sentiment there—this war is not only an error; it is a crime." That was his declaration at the commencement of this war. Since then he has been induced to change his policy by his friends on the other side of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MALLORY. I have only forty minutes, and must decline to yield.

Mr. STEVENS. I dislike to raise a point of order on the gentleman; but if he will not let me ask my question, I shall have to do so.

Mr. MALLORY. Go on and make your point of order. I do not yield under a threat.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not threaten; and if the gentleman takes it unkindly, I will withdraw the request. I thought he was going on out of order.

Mr. MALLORY. If the gentleman asks me in that way I will yield to him. I did not wish to yield under a threat.

Mr. STEVENS. Oh, no; I meant no threat. I withdraw the request.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Speaker, from that time to this—I charge here—the President of the United States, after having made to me this declaration, and his aiders and abettors on that side of the House have persistently, constantly, and with diabolical ingenuity, struggled by their legislation and policy to crush out the Union sentiment existing in the southern States. I go further, and say that I believe that by that harsh policy they have accomplished their purpose. I go still further, and say that I believe, with many a man on that side of the House, this was designed and looked for and intended. They wished to crush out Union sentiment in the South, and to have nobody there their friend. They wished to pursue that whole country with a sword in one hand and a fire-brand in the other, burning and destroying as they went, in order to do—what? To wipe out the white people of the country and supplant them by black free men, whom they are going to make American citizens, to be controlled and governed by the northern emigrants whom they may think proper to send there from New England.

I am very much afraid, Mr. Speaker, as I charged a few moments ago, that by that policy, by that persistent effort to exterminate slavery by means of cruel and unconstitutional acts, they have succeeded in rendering a continuation of this Union impossible, and they may in that way have made slavery the cause of the dissolution of the Union. I deplore it, sir. This Union is the very life-blood of Kentucky, and I deplore its destruction. I will raise my voice and do any act to prevent a consummation which we in our State would deplore as one of the greatest, if not the greatest, evil that could befall us. If you say to those rebellious States, "Submit to the authority of the Federal Government, yield obedience to the law," they have the right to ask you what they are to expect if they comply with your demand. And what is the reply? "You are to expect that you shall be stripped of every particle of your property. You have to expect that the right of self-government will be taken from you. You have to expect that the President and Congress will frame and impose on you such form of State government as they may think proper; that the President shall indicate not only the men who shall vote in the elections for members of Congress and of the State Legislatures, but shall also indicate the men who shall be elected to those offices, and the peculiar qualifications of electors and office-holders in those States. You have to expect nothing better than that. You are to expect, if you come back, to come back the abject and submissive slaves of the conquering power."

Sir, in the most arrogant days of the Roman empire, when, after a province was subdued, the conqueror came back to Rome with a long train of captives following his chariot and forced to pass sub iugo, there never was presented a spectacle more mournful and degrading than that which you propose to subject this people to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is impossible.

Mr. MALLORY. I believe it is impossible, it cannot be done until all spirit and pride are crushed out of a gallant and proud race, and that can only be done when they are exterminated.

Mr. Speaker, what is the necessity for this constitutional amendment? Why do gentlemen of the Republican party want to tamper with the Constitution? The Baltimore convention indorses every act of the President of the United States; and the President says in his letter to A. G. Hodges, of Kentucky, that while there is a step to be taken indispensable to save the nation he will take it, although he knows it to be in violation of the Constitution, and that he has a right to do it, and that such step is lawful. Lawful to violate the Constitution which he has taken a solemn oath to protect and defend! Lawful to violate that in order to preserve the nation by the commission of any act he may deem indispensable to such preservation! Oh! what fidelity to the Constitution rests on the conscience of that great man! What a law-maker, what a law-giver, what a law-enforcer he is! Would he not be a pretty amender of the Constitution of the United States framed by Washington and Hamilton and Madison? Why do you want to change it?

The President strikes down the writ of habeas corpus, the safeguard of personal liberty, and says that is indispensable and is right. And you support him in it. He abolishes trial by jury, and says that it is indispensable to do it in order to get at traitors; and you say so, too, and that he has a right to do it, because he deemed it indispensable. He has arrested without "warrant" and condemned without "due process of law" hundreds of our citizens, and confined them in prisons and forts, who have been ascertained to be guiltless of any crime, and you approve it. He has subjected hundreds of free citizens not in military service to be tried by military tribunals, and punished by martial law, and you indorse it. He struck down slavery, as he himself acknowledges, in defiance of the rights of the States to control their own domestic institutions. He says it was in violation of the Constitution, and that he knew it when he did it. You say it was indispensable as a war measure, and, constitutional or unconstitutional, it is right. Very well; why, then, do you want to tamper with the Constitution? Why do you want to change the Constitution? Why do you want to exercise this power through the Constitution to accomplish that which you say the President has already done with your consent, in spite of and in violation of the Constitution? The Constitution is no impediment to the President or to you.

Sir, in discussing this question I feel for my country, I feel for those who framed the Constitution, I feel even for you gentlemen upon the other side of the House, for I do not want to see inflicted upon any portion of my fellow-citizens the contempt of the country and of the whole civilized world, such as will be visited on your heads for the tergiversation you have practiced since the commencement of this war. You have broken faith with the country; you have broken faith with States still loyal to the Constitution; you have broken faith, and you now propose to break faith by taking to yourselves the control over an institution which not only the requirements of the Constitution but all the dictates of reason and justice join in urging should remain under the control of the several States.

I ask gentlemen, if they will not regard the dictates of conscience and reason in this matter, to consider what a precedent they are setting. We are now carrying on a war which I believe, so help me God, unless the policy upon which it is being carried on is changed, will render any other result than the total destruction of the Union impossible. You are heaping up a national debt of four to six thousand millions, which will in future be represented by the bonds of the United States. You are heaping up this debt at a fearful rate for the benefit of shoddies and the manufacturers and capitalists in the eastern States. Suppose you do as you profess to believe; after carrying on the war until you have heaped up the public debt to five or six thousand million dollars, wrung from the labor and sweat of the people of the whole country, and especially of the West, by taxes, by which those colossal fortunes in the East have been reaped, suppose you bring it to a close by crushing out the power of the South, have you ever reflected on what is to follow? Have you ever reflected what a precedent you are setting by the acts of broken faith you have heretofore perpetrated and are now enacting? When this public debt of five or six thousand million dollars, held by eastern men, shall come to stare the nation in the face; when the men of the West shall be called on to have wrung out of their scanty earnings the amount required to pay the interest on that debt, and when the price of their products shall have been reduced, as they will be in that day, these men, with starvation before them, will be driven to say they will no longer submit to these exactions, they will be no longer responsible for the public debt. You will say, "That is a breach of the public faith; your faith was pledged to pay this debt; you will be disgraced in the eyes of the civilized world if you repudiate it." In that day of your terror and your alarm, in that day, when these millionaires, these men of opulence, are being reduced to poverty and want, I will not laugh at your calamity, I will not mock when your fear cometh; I will mourn with you in your affliction.

But if the people of this country, following the wild precedents you have set them, and are proposing to set them to-day, swear that they will not submit to be impoverished by exactions to swell the bloated coffers of the eastern millionaire enriched by sucking like a vampire the blood of his country, and in the exercise of their power wipe this debt, and the barnacle fortunes that hang to it, out of existence, it will not be for you to complain. It will not become you to cry out, Broken faith!

Now, let me ask you a practical question. What do you intend to do with the slaves you propose to set free? What are you going to do with the elephant when you get him? [Laughter.] Has anybody attempted to furnish a solution of this question? Yes, sir, a solution has been attempted; I will examine it. They propose to put those of them capable of rendering military service into the Army to fight the battles of the country. They have been placed in the Army to the number of one hundred and thirty or one hundred and fifty thousand. Where, in your armies, have you placed these men? Have you placed them as a shield between the enemy and your white troops? A gentleman in this House in the last Congress declared he was willing a black soldier should stand as a shield between his son and the bullets of the enemy. No, sir; these black men have not been placed in that position; they have been placed behind fortifications and out of the reach of the guns of the enemy. You make them equal to white soldiers in pay, clothing, rations, and position; you make them superior in position to white soldiers by saving them from danger and wounds and death. You degrade the white private soldier to a level with or below the negro; but the officers you make a privileged class. You make the black private soldiers equal to the white, but you will not allow your white officers to be degraded by allowing the negro to become his equal in position as an officer in the Army of the United States. Why do you not do that? You assert that Bob Small and Fred Douglass and others are equal to white men in gallantry and intelligence, and all the elements of the military leader, and yet refuse them positions commensurate with their asserted merit. Why is this?

Do you say in reply, "We want to use these officers, we want to keep in their good graces. We will not debase them by saying that a negro shall be their equal. Our officers are gentlemen; they would be offended if we raise the negro to their level or degrade them to the negro's level, though he shall be the equal of the contemptible scum that composes the rank and file of the Army." That is your policy, is it?

You will not put the negro forward to share the dangers of the white soldier. I ask you why? You say that he is a good soldier. Lorenzo Thomas, suspected of being a rebel at the commencement of the war, who has gone throughout the South to organize the negro forces, says that he is a better soldier than the white man, because he has a musical ear that enables him to keep step better: I suppose to the music of the Union. He says that he is a better soldier, because he has been accustomed to be commanded and readily obeys. There it is: he obeys without questioning, and therefore you want to save him from the ravages of war. You want to see that one hundred and thirty thousand negro soldiers spoken of by Mr. Lincoln increased to three hundred thousand. You do not want the number diminished. You want to save them from the bullets of the rebels. This obedient, submissive race, when this war is over, may be needed for some other purpose. They have had this class of soldiers in Europe. There they have had hired soldiers known as Swiss, ignoring home and country, with no local attachment. Like the dog, they follow and obey their master; dependent for their pay and subsistence upon their employers, they know and obey no one else. We do not want that class of soldiers in the United States. History points them out as the tools used to crush out the liberties of the people and to preserve and defend despotic power. If you want them, for what purpose do you want them? Sir, this is a pregnant question; it is not answered here. I hope that history may not write the answer in blood, in the destruction of our Government and liberty, in the erection of a despotism on the ruins of our Republic.

What do you propose to do with those you cannot use in the Army—the women and children and worn-out men? Three years ago I asked that question in this House, and the answer by the leading abolitionists then was, "We will colonize them." I stated then that this would not be done, that the country would never consent to add to its debt twelve or fifteen hundred million dollars for such a purpose. I said truly. You have abandoned the idea of colonization. Numbers of the free States by law prohibit their immigration within their limits. You are afraid as yet to resist the exercise of this right in despite of that prohibition, although you dispute it. You cannot send them into those States; but you propose to leave them where they are freed, and protect them in their right to remain there. You do not intend, however, to leave them to the tender mercies of those States. You propose by a most flagrant violation of their rights to hold the control of this large class in these various States in your own hands. The abolitionists of New England, by means of a majority which they hope to secure in Congress and an Administration they expect to retain in office in some way, intend to govern thousands of these creatures in my State and the other border slave States, and exempt them from the operation of the laws of those States. They intend to establish an "imperium in imperio" in all those States. Do you expect that the States will submit quietly to this outrage? You are not so infatuated. Do you expect then to force obedience to your will, to coerce obedience to the regulations of the "Freedmen's Bureau" by means of negro soldiers to be garrisoned in these States to overawe the people? Do you intend to "quarter a standing army on us without our consent?" Our history teaches a lesson on this subject which I commend to your consideration. You have brought thousands of these unfortunate wretches from the fields of Grant's operations to your Freedmen's Village, around Arlington, at the public expense, and in boats which ought to have been used for the transportation of wounded and suffering soldiers, to be maintained at the expense of the national Treasury, in this way adding millions to the already intolerable public debt, taxing the already overtaxed people of the country for a purpose never contemplated by the Constitution. And are they freed? No, sir; no, sir. You still govern and control them. They do not govern themselves. You regulate their conduct, you prescribe their work, you determine what to give them, you control their actions. They are still slaves, by whatever name you may call them. You have kidnapped them from their masters in Virginia and made them your slaves.

How have you freed them in Louisiana? Banks, with the consent of the President, has established a system of slavery there, better for the master and worse for the slave, than any that I have any experience of. By it the master is relieved of the expense of rearing the slave until he is capable of performing profitable labor, and released from all obligation to maintain him after he has become unfitted by age or disease to render remunerating service. Nor is there the least freedom conceded to the slave by this system, unless it be the liberty to wander off, when overtaken by death, and die like a dog on the first dung heap untended and uncared for by a kind and Christian master. He has not the liberty to work where he pleases; he is confined to the limits of a particular plantation. He has not the right to work when he pleases; his hours of labor are prescribed. He has not the right to demand such wages as he may think his services worth; his wages are fixed for him. He has not the privilege of expending his earnings as he pleases; this is done for him by regulation. And I make the declaration that the compensation he is forced to labor for is not near equivalent to what a slave in Louisiana received under the slave system, which these wise humanitarians, Banks and the President, wish to supplant by their system of free labor. God save the mark. Mr. Speaker, by such a change as this you do not abolish slavery, but you rob it of all its humanizing and redeeming characteristics. By destroying all interest of the master in the preservation of the health of the slave, you diminish his care and kindness and indulgence to him. The watchful care of the intelligent and interested master over the young is lost, and they are left to grow up uncared for except by the negro father and mother, whose ignorance and indifference to the welfare of their offspring are matters of common notoriety.

Mr. Speaker, I will not touch this subject in its connection with political economy. I will not argue that African slave labor is the most profitable labor for the land-owner. I would never propose that African slavery should be introduced where it does not exist. I would leave all people in all States free to have it or abolish it, as a regard to their own interests may prompt them. I will not assert that African slavery is best for the white man. I may be in doubt as to that. But this I do say, in view of an experience and observation of a lifetime, and in spite of the horror excited in the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] by the declaration of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD], that the condition of slavery existing in my State and the other slave States is the best condition in which the African has ever been placed on the continent of America; I mean the best for the negro as it regards his physical, moral, and intellectual wants.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude what I have to say with the assertion that I believe that the only way to preserve this Union is to stand by the Constitution as our fathers made it; not to change it; to preserve its great safeguards of liberty from destruction or violation; to return to the original policy of this Government, indorsed by the President and his Cabinet, by Douglas and Crittenden; the policy of conciliation and coercion which has received the name of border State policy—the policy of conciliation and coercion going hand in hand. I was always for it—I am for it now. While I would put down the military power of the South by force of arms I would "still carry in my right hand gentle peace;" I would hold it out to them; I would persuade them by every inducement I could offer them as erring men and brothers to abandon their bloody rebellion. I will not denounce them as devils. I would not say that I will exterminate you if you do not submit, and strip you of all you have if you do; but I would say, "Come back, and I will forgive you as freely as the Son of man ever forgave repentant sinners."

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, madness and despair rave, and I shall consume none of the brief time allotted me by following the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MALLORY], who has just taken his seat. Nor do I avail myself of the floor in the hope that I can say anything which will change the mind of the House on the question now before it; but, sir, the privilege is not often given to men to perform an act the influence of which will be felt beneficially by the poor, the oppressed, the ignorant, and the degraded of all lands, and which will endure until terminated by the wreck of matter and the crush of worlds. And I rise that I may thus publicly thank God and the good people by whose suffrages I am here to-day for the golden opportunity afforded me of doing such an act.

When the proposed amendment to the Constitution shall have been adopted and approved by the Legislatures, as I hope it will be, that instrument will be perfect as the genius of man can conceive. Experience, as the ages roll away, may, it is true, suggest improvements, but my poor imagination presents none. We were asked this morning whether we are wiser than the framers of our Government. I utter no word, I think no thought of disparagement of those great men. They were good men and were wise in their day and generation, but all wisdom did not die with them, and we are expiating in blood and agony and death and bereavement one of their errors—the unwise compromise they made with wrong in providing for the toleration and perpetuation of human slavery. The Convention which framed the Constitution unwisely compromised with wrong, and the bill before the House proposes to submit their work to the people through the States for revisal in this particular. It was not unknown to many of them that evil must result from their action. They knew and said while in the Convention that right and wrong were in eternal conflict, and that the avenging God was ever on the side of right.

In proof of this I turn not to the remarks of men from New England, not to those from dear old Pennsylvania, but of those who represented Virginia in that august assemblage. I hold in my hand the third volume of Eliot's Debates of the Convention which framed the Constitution of the United States, and I quote from Mr. George Mason, of Virginia, when speaking, June 15, 1788, on the first clause of the ninth section of article one of the Constitution:

"Mr. Chairman," said he, "this is a fatal section, which has created more danger than any other. The first clause allows the importation of slaves for twenty years. Under the royal Government this evil was looked upon as a great oppression, and many attempts were made to prevent it; but the interest of the African merchants prevented its prohibition. No sooner did the Revolution take place than it was thought of. It was one of the great causes of our separation from Great Britain. Its exclusion has been a principal object of this State, and most of the States in the Union. The augmentation of slaves weakens the States, and such a trade is diabolical in itself and disgraceful to mankind; yet by this Constitution it is continued for twenty years. As much as I value a union of all the States, I would not admit the southern States into the Union unless they agree to the discontinuance of this disgraceful trade, because it would bring weakness and not strength to the Union. This detestable kind of commerce."

As he proceeded he spoke of "this detestable kind of commerce," and said "I have ever looked upon this as a most disgraceful thing to America. I cannot express my detestation of it."

Mr. Tyler, of Virginia, in the discussion of the same day, as I find on the very next page, "warmly enlarged on the impolicy, iniquity, and disgracefulness of this wicked traffic. He thought the reasons urged by gentlemen in defense of it were inconclusive and ill-founded. It was one cause of the complaints against British tyranny that this trade was permitted. The Revolution had put a period to it; but now it was to be revived. He thought nothing could justify it."

Thus all the wise and good men of that period denounced the system of unpaid labor and property in human beings as wicked, infamously wicked, and the trade in men, women, and children as diabolical. We who advocate this amendment do but propose to consummate that which the wisest and best men of that day wished to do in the Convention. We do but propose to advise the people to listen to their counsel and perfect their great work.

But the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Mallory] says the season is inopportune. Sir, justice is ever in season, and it is never inopportune to do right. But he also says that the rebellious States are in the Union, and yet we do not propose to allow them to vote on this measure. The people of those States are probably not aware of the fact that they are in the Union. They believe themselves to be out of the Union, and if they only knew as well as the gentleman from Kentucky does that they have a right to be represented here as well as at Richmond, I doubt not they would have their Representatives here to oppose our action on this question. If in the Union, why are their Representatives not here? Who expelled them from this House or the Senate Chamber? If the Constitution be amended by default of their votes there will be no ground for a motion to open or set aside the judgment, as, to say the least, the default is the result of their voluntary absence. Sir, he who does not sustain this resolution is recreant to the teachings of the fathers of our country; and did I not sustain it I would be especially false to the traditions of the great State which I have the honor in part to represent. In the course I pursue I am guided by the wise counsels of Benjamin Franklin and the men of Pennsylvania who with him carried that State through the revolutionary war, and gave form and spirit to her free institutions. While yet the revolutionary war was pending—more than three years before our national independence was acknowledged—on the 1st of March, 1780, in view of the fact that they then had “every prospect of being delivered” from British thralldom, they “extinguished and forever abolished” slavery in Pennsylvania. Time will not permit me to read the noble preamble to that act of Christian statesmanship; but I will hand it to the reporter that it may appear as part of my remarks in the Globe. Its spirit is that of the gospel, and its grand sentences seem to have been plucked from John Milton's noblest essays:

Preamble to an act for the abolition of slavery in Pennsylvania.

When we contemplate our abhorrence of that condition to which the arms and tyranny of Great Britain were exerted to reduce us; when we look back upon the variety of dangers to which we have been exposed, and how miraculously our wants in many instances have been supplied and our deliverance wrought, when even hope and human fortitude have become unequal to the conflict, we are unavoidably led to a serious and grateful sense of the manifold blessings which we have undeservedly received from the hand of that Being from whom every good and perfect gift cometh. Impressed with these ideas we conceive that it is our duty, and we rejoice that it is in our power, to extend a portion of that freedom to others which hath been extended to us, and release from that state of thralldom to which we ourselves were tyrannically doomed, and from which we have now every prospect of being delivered. It is not for us to inquire why, in the creation of mankind, the inhabitants of the several parts of the earth were distinguished by a difference in feature or complexion. It is sufficient to know that all are the work of an Almighty hand. We find in the distribution of the human species that the most fertile, as well as the most barren, parts of the earth are inhabited by men of complexions different from ours and from each other, from whence we may reasonably, as well as religiously, infer that He who placed them in their various situations hath extended equally His care and protection to all, and that it becometh not us to counteract His mercies. We esteem it a peculiar blessing granted to us that we are enabled this day to add one more step to universal civilization, by removing, as much as possible, the sorrows of those who have lived in undeserved bondage, and from which, by the assumed authority of the kings of Great Britain, no effectual legal relief could be obtained. Weaned by a long course of experience from those narrow prejudices and partialities we had imbibed, we find our hearts enlarged with kindness and benevolence toward men of all conditions and nations, and we conceive ourselves at this particular period extraordinarily called upon, by the blessings which we have received, to manifest the sincerity of our profession and to give a substantial proof of our gratitude.

Sec. 2. And whereas the condition of those persons who have heretofore been denominated negro and mulatto slaves has been attended with circumstances which not only deprive them of the common blessings that they were by nature entitled to, but has cast them into the deepest afflictions, by an unnatural separation and sale of husband and wife from each other and from their children—an injury the greatness of which can only be conceived by supposing that we were in the same unhappy case—in justice, therefore, to persons so unhappily circumstanced, and who, having no prospect before them wherein they may rest their sorrows and their hopes, have no reasonable inducement to render their service to society which they otherwise might, and also in grateful commemoration of our own happy deliverance from that state of unconditional submission to which we were doomed by the tyranny of Britain.

Sec. 3. All persons, as well negroes and mulattoes as others, who shall be born within this State, shall not be deemed and considered as servants for life, or slaves, and all servitude for life or slavery of children, in consequence of the slavery of their mothers, in the case of all children born within this State from and after the passing of this act as aforesaid, shall be, and hereby is, utterly taken away, extinguished, and forever abolished.

Scarcely had the Congress of the United States assembled, when, as the president of an abolition society, Benjamin Franklin was admitted to the bar of the House of Representatives, that, bowing under the weight of honors and more than four-score years, he might present the petition of the people of Pennsylvania praying Congress to follow the benign example of that State and abolish slavery. It was on the 12th of February, 1789. He drew the petition, which grateful thousands thronged to sign. And, as truth is immortal, let us listen to those words, and now, when we can aid in doing it constitutionally, grant, so far as in us lies the power, their prayer, by submitting the proposed amendment to the people. It reads as follows:

“To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:—

“From a persuasion that equal liberty was originally the portion, and is still the birthright, of all men, and influenced by the strong ties of humanity and the principles of their institution, your memorialists conceive themselves bound to use all justifiable endeavors to loosen the bands of slavery and promote a general enjoyment of the blessings of freedom.

“Under these impressions they earnestly entreat your serious attention to the subject of slavery; that you will be pleased to countenance the restoration of liberty to those unhappy men who alone, in this land of freedom, are degraded into perpetual bondage, and who, amid the general joy of surrounding freedom, are groaning in servile subjection; that you will devise means for removing this inconsistency from the character of the American people; that you will promote mercy and justice toward this distressed race; that you will step to the very verge of the power vested in you for discouraging every species of traffic in the persons of our fellow-men.”

Let us, I repeat, heed, and, so far as we may, grant that petition. Who shall complain that the Congress of 1864 responds to the prayer of the men who secured our freedom and elaborated our institutions? Who shall induce us to pause in this great work till millions of rebels return to loyalty and their soldiers lay down their arms and come to contest the policy of the act? Sir, they will probably be here before the Legislatures have all passed on the question. The dispatch just read told us that Grant is to the east of Richmond, and we know that Hunter's artillery thunders to the west of that doomed city. I apprehend legislation at Richmond is not done calmly to-day. We may deliberate, but they who address the Richmond congress most probably echo the ravings of the gentleman from Kentucky. Sir, what is it that we propose to do? Is it an act of doubtful power? No. It is simply to execute the fifth article of the Constitution of the United States, which provides:

“Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified by three fourths of the Legislatures of the several States, or by conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress.”

We propose to submit to the wisdom, patriotism, and humanity of the people of the States of this Union an amendment in accordance with this article, and for that we are denounced by those who in the name of Democracy plead for the perpetuity of slavery as violating the Constitution. I repeat the question of my friend and colleague, [Mr. A. Myers,] do gentlemen upon the other side know of any one act done against this rebellion that has been done constitutionally? Have they any other prayer than a prayer for the success of the rebellion, which will, in their judgment, save the Constitution by perpetuating and extending the area of human slavery? Their love of Democracy and the Constitution finds expression in degrading the laboring man to a thing of sale upon the auction-block, in shutting out from more than half our territory schools and churches and civilization in all its aspects, whether it be religion, science, art, or social life.

Sir, I arraign slavery as the efficient cause of every national evil we have endured. It put the vice with which we are now contending into the Constitution; it commenced a war upon the dignity of labor and the freedom of conscience and thought the very day our Government was organized; it inspired and gives physical power to the rebellion we are crushing at such fearful cost of vigorous life; it is, as it has been, the fruitful source of all our national woes.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] as usual avoided the subject under discussion, but cried out for the right of asylum. Sir, this sacred instrument, the Constitution of the United States, provides, section two, article four, that “the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.” Does he not know that for more than thirty years those dear friends of his, for whose institutions he and his party plead so fervently, have, notwithstanding this right so specifically guaranteed, denied not only the right of asylum, but the right of transit through their States to us, who doubted the wisdom or divinity of chattel slavery? He prates in behalf of the right of asylum for a slave-dealer, a slave-trader, one whom the civilized world brands as a pirate. I have not studied the Arguelles case, but if it be bad as his partisan rhetoric paints it, it is but a returning of a “poisoned chalice” to “plague the inventor.” The offspring of robbery, its life one continued crime, its only support despotic power, slavery has impaired the national regard for the rights of the individual. It was slavery that denied the right of asylum to the beautiful and accomplished daughter of Samuel Hoar, of Massachusetts, and expelled that venerable scholar, jurist, and statesman from the limits of South Carolina, who went to argue a great cause in her courts. It was slavery that did not deny the right of asylum to William Lloyd Garrison, but offered $20,000 to the man who would kidnap him and carry him to that State, that its humane dealers in the bodies and souls of men might flay him alive, or slowly burn him at the stake, as they sometimes did a refractory slave, or put him in a barrel with holes bored in it, that he might retain his consciousness while slowly starving to death, as he drifted in the river to which they might commit him, as other poor devotees of freedom had done when treated thus by them.

It was slavery that by threats and demonstrations of violence twice banished that friend of the Union and of mankind, George Thompson, from the limits of our country. And it is rather late to prate with lips that have praised all these acts of the right of asylum to a stealer of men and a violator of the laws of nations, which make the slave trade piracy. Devotion to slavery alone can prompt such mad garrulity. The gentleman from Kentucky said that we have made the South a unit. I deny the proposition. Sir, I believe that when the calamity of Ball's Bluff occurred we were contending against a unit. I believe that we encountered a unit at Bull Run. But it is so no longer. We have dispelled the vain pride of the South and broken its unity of purpose. We have conquered its contempt for the northern Yankee, and at no day since this rebellion began were so many southern men coming into our lines to rally around the old flag as there are to-day. You cannot get information from one of our armies, be it where it may, on any day that does not tell you of the tens and hundreds of deserters that come into our lines claiming the protection of the Constitution and restoration to the privileges and blessings of citizenship. I speak not of black men, but of white men. You cannot pass through the streets of this city any day without meeting southern people who have fled from the despotism for the perpetuation of which the leaders of the Democratic party plead to the freedom and security of the Constitution as administered by Abraham Lincoln. We make the people of the South a unit! We will indeed soon make them a unit if Grant and Sherman and the proudly victorious armies of freemen who bear their standards go on as they are going, and the bond of Union will be gratitude to those who will have freed them from a fearful despotism and secured to them and their posterity the enlarged blessings of American citizenship.

The gentleman from Kentucky also said that we do not use our colored soldiers to fight, but pet and save them at the expense of our white soldiers. Did we save them at Fort Pillow? And let me pause to ask who crucified the men at Fort Pillow, and why was it done? But that your infernal institutions had taught the people of the South to look upon men, women, and children as cattle, soulless beings, things to be scourged as you would scourge an unruly and dangerous animal, that horrible chapter would never have disgraced American history. It is not for you, the champions of slavery, to complain that the negro is not exposed sufficiently to the dangers of war, for your myrmidons have fled before them in many battles, and when they have overmastered them have tortured, burned, and crucified them under the teachings of that system of which we propose constitutionally to purge the Constitution of our country. Did we save the negroes at Port Hudson, Fort Wagner, Olustee, and Plymouth; or did you at each of these places illustrate the morality of your system? Your former colleagues are the defenders of slavery in arms, you are its defenders in this Hall to-day, and for the same reason; that is, because slavery is the strength of the rebellion, the power that is assailing our country, the only means by which the masses of white men whose toil is their only wealth can be reduced to ignorance and want, and the only possible means by which you can hope to restore to power that political organization which under the name of Democracy sought to subvert our free institutions.

What, asks the gentleman, are you going to do with the freed negroes? I will tell that gentleman a secret confidentially. Above us all there is a God—slave-owners have not generally known the fact—who will take care of His children. I will trust the freed negroes to the care of God, under our beneficent republican institutions. We are told that the cries of the laborer whose hire has been kept back by fraud enter into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth; and if the State of Kentucky is to-day desolated by contending armies, it is because the Lord of Sabaoth is avenging the wrongs of His poor children, made dumb and voiceless by the atheistic laws of that State. It is the work of a just and avenging God punishing even in the third and fourth generation the wrongs done by your fathers and which you have not repented. And when the iron shall have so entered the soul of the aristocracy of the slave States as to make them feel in their despair that "verily there is a God" who controls the destinies of men and of nations, and when they will trust to Him, in His righteous power, the care of His children, this war will cease and peace again bless our nation. When we break every yoke and let the oppressed go free, the broad fields that war has desolated will again blossom as the rose and reward the labor of the husbandman.

Let us protect our posterity against the possibility of a recurrence of these fearful evils. Let us not be content with crushing this rebellion. Let us not be content with producing all over the country loyalty to the flag. Let justice to all men be our aim. Let us establish freedom as a permanent institution, and make it universal.

I appeal to those gentlemen on the other side of the House who shrink from the abhorrent doctrines of the leaders of their party; to those of you who have read the Beatitudes and remember that at your mothers' knees you lisped a prayer that God would deal gently even with those who had trespassed against you, to vote with us, and not withhold from the intelligent people of this country the right to pass upon this question so fraught with blessed or fearful consequences. We do not make the amendment. We cannot make it. We can but initiate it. Gentlemen, you who profess to have such abiding confidence in the people, will you let them have an opportunity to say whether the Constitution shall be constitutionally amended? In their name, in the name of Democracy, in the name of Humanity, in the name of Christianity, I pray you for once to make good your professions and confide in the people sufficiently to permit them to say yea or nay on the question whether they will peaceably and constitutionally extinguish the scourge and disgrace of our common country, human slavery.

Mr. EDGERTON. Mr. Speaker, having on the question of its second reading voted for the rejection of the joint resolution now before the House, and intending to vote against it when put upon its passage, I desire to state some of the reasons that influence my vote.

In so far as the anti-slavery sentiment which now exists in the United States is based in sincere moral and political convictions, free from the taint of passion and fanaticism, I sympathize with and respect it, and I find fault with no man for opinions intelligently and honestly entertained. A large majority of the people of the United States who have had their birth and education in non-slaveholding States, whether American or foreign, are not in favor of negro slavery. They regard it as an evil to be deprecated, not as a good to be fostered and perpetuated; and when we look back upon the history of our country from the organization of the Union until now, and see how much the question of slavery has had to do with the political agitations and sectional and partisan animosity that have culminated in disunion and civil war, few candid men can hesitate to believe that it would have been far better if negro slavery had never existed on this continent. Say what we can in its favor, its existence and history afford no bright pages in the annals of our country. For one, sir, I would rejoice to know that by the free, peaceful, constitutional action of the people of the slaveholding States, manifested through their own constitutions and laws, slavery had ceased to exist in all those States, and that the word slave could never again be truly applied to a human being within all the broad territory of the Federal Union; but I will not permit my opinions against slavery to lead me into hatred of slaveholders, nor into a lawless zeal to violate rights conceded to them by the Constitution of my country; and, in my judgment, so long as the Federal Union exists there is not and should not be any political power short of the free consent of each slaveholding State that can rightfully abolish slavery in the United States.

Negro slavery existed in all the States of the Union but one when the Federal Constitution was formed. It was a subject considered and earnestly discussed in the Convention that framed the Constitution, and the southern States, most largely holding slaves, were very sensitive and jealous as to any interference by the Federal Government with the question of slavery in the States. The Federal Constitution, therefore, accepted and recognized slavery as a fact and a legal relation under State laws; but it left it where it found it, subject to those laws. It neither in terms nor by implication assumed any control over the subject, except in three particulars:

1. It recognized and guaranteed the right of the States to import slaves until 1808.
 2. It provided that in the basis of representation and direct taxation in the Federal Government five slaves should count as three free persons.
 3. It provided, in substance if not in words, for the surrender to the owner or master, of any slave escaping from a State, where held as a slave under the laws thereof, into another State.
- It is indisputable, therefore, that the Federal Constitution went into operation in 1789 as the bond of union and the supreme law for all national purposes expressed in that Constitution of free and slaveholding States, and that there was nothing in the Constitution to abrogate or impair the right of a slave-owner to the person and service of his slave in a slaveholding State any more than there was in it anything to impair the right of a father to the person and services of his minor child in any non-slaveholding State.

Under the peaceful protection and fostering care of this Constitution, which, in the language of its framers, was "the result of a spirit of amity and of that mutual deference and concession which the peculiarity of our political situation rendered indispensable," States that were slave States when the Constitution was adopted became of their own volition, by their own legislation, and in their own time and way, without interference, let, or hindrance from the Federal Government, free States. Other original States of the Union continued to hold their slaves. Territory was acquired and organized as slaveholding territory. New States, formed from national territory acquired by cession from the original States or by purchase or annexation, as in the case of Texas, were admitted into the Union, some as slaveholding, others as non-slaveholding States; and on the 20th day of December, 1860, when South Carolina passed an ordinance of secession from the Federal Union, of the thirty-three States of the Union fifteen were slaveholding States.

It is needless to comment on the growth and prosperity of the Union from its organization up to the time of the attempt at its dissolution. It is enough to say, what we all know, that its history demonstrated that a Republic of Federal States, part slave and part free, could grow and prosper, and become great among the nations, and diffuse unexampled freedom and happiness among its people. Left to its peaceful, healthful action, the Federal system, committed to our care by our fathers, did not dishonor their wisdom or patriotism.

It is undoubtedly true as a fact of history that the Union could not have continued, nor the Constitution as it now is have been adopted; if the northern States had insisted upon the prohibition of slavery in the Constitution, or in providing for power in the Federal Government to control or abolish it. It was a local State institution, analogous in its legal features to the domestic relation of parent and child, guardian and ward, master and servant, one of the class which, by the theory of the Union, was reserved from the control of the Federal Government; and to have conceded the right of the Federal Government to control it would have been to concede a principle of Federal intervention with the internal polity of the States that would have been fatal to the peace and permanence of the Union. By the confederation of July 9, 1778, each State retained its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right not expressly delegated to the United States; and if not in similar language, the Federal Constitution in its tenth amendment contains, in spirit and substance, the same reservation of rights to the States or their people. From the beginning of the Government until the commencement of civil war for its destruction it was the received interpretation of the Constitution of the United States by all political parties having any claims to numbers or respectability that the right to control or abolish slavery in the States was not in the Federal Government, and it was because of this absence of power in that Government, and of its supposed obligation to protect slavery, that a small party of the zealots of anti-slavery pronounced the Constitution itself to be "a covenant with death and an agreement with hell." It was for that cause they hated it and cursed it, and worked for its destruction by poisoning the mind of the people with their traitorous heresies.

In so far as the present Administration and its party are concerned, I presume they will not deny, in reference to this question of State control over the institution of slavery, the authority of the fourth resolution of the Chicago convention of May, 1860, in these words:

"That the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depend."

Again, on the 11th of February, 1861, pending the efforts at compromise in Congress and in the peace conference consequent upon the threatened dissolution of the Union, the House of Representatives in the Thirty-Sixth Congress by a vote of 116 yeas to 4 nays adopted this resolution:

"Resolved, That neither the Federal Government nor the people nor governments of the non-slaveholding States have a purpose or a constitutional right to legislate upon or interfere with slavery in any of the States of the Union."

On the same day this resolution was amended and passed by a unanimous vote of one hundred and sixty-one members, so as to read as follows:

"Resolved, That neither Congress nor the people or the governments of the non-slaveholding States have the right to legislate upon or interfere with slavery in any of the slaveholding States of the Union."

But again, on the 4th of March, 1861, President Lincoln, under the obligations of his official oath, and under circumstances, if ever, demanding truth and patriotism, reaffirmed the fourth resolution of the Chicago convention, and declared it to be his law, accompanying it with this declaration:

"Apprehension seems to exist among the people of the southern States that by the accession of a Republican Administration their property and personal security are to be endangered. There has never been any reasonable cause for such apprehension. Indeed, the most ample evidence to the contrary has all the while existed and been open to their inspection. It is found in nearly all the published speeches of him who now addresses you. I do but quote from one of those speeches when I declare that 'I have no purpose, directly or indirectly, to interfere with the institution of slavery in the States where it exists. I believe I have no lawful right to do so, and I have no inclination to do so." Those who nominated and elected me did so with the full knowledge that I had made this and many similar declarations, and had never recanted them. And more than this, they placed in the platform for my acceptance, and as a law to themselves and to me, the clear and emphatic resolution which I now read."

Here the President read, as his law, the fourth resolution of the Chicago platform.

It would be incredible, Mr. Speaker, except for the reason that it is a fact of history admitting of no question, that the author of the above declaration is also the author of the emancipation proclamations of September 22, 1862, January 1, 1863, and of the amnesty proclamation, so called, though it more properly deserves the name of the tyrant's and usurper's proclamation, of December 8, 1863.

Again, who would believe, sir, except because we knew from history and experience the power of fanaticism and party spirit in overthrowing reason and corrupting morality, that the same party and the same political leaders who on the 10th May, 1860, adopted the fourth resolution of the Chicago convention, and on 11th February, 1861, voted for or approved the resolutions of the House of Representatives just read, would, on the 8th day of June, 1864, in the face of the intelligence and public conscience of the American people and of the intelligent judgment of the world, have the assurance to publish to the world as articles of their political faith the resolutions I now read, namely, the third and fifth resolutions of the self-styled Union convention lately held in Baltimore, namely:

"Resolved, 3. That as slavery was the cause and now constitutes the strength of this rebellion, and it must be always and everywhere hostile to the principles of republican government, justice and the national safety demand its utter and complete extirpation from the soil of the Republic; and that while we uphold and maintain the acts and proclamations by which the Government in its own defense has aimed a death-blow at this gigantic evil, we are in favor furthermore of such an amendment to the Constitution, to be made by the people in conformity to its provisions, as shall terminate and forever prohibit the existence of slavery within the limits or jurisdiction of the United States."

"Resolved, 5. That we approve and applaud the practical wisdom, the unselfish patriotism, and the unswerving fidelity to the Constitution and the principles of American liberty with which Abraham Lincoln has discharged, under circumstances of unparalleled difficulty, the great duties and responsibilities of the presidential office; that we approve and indorse, as demanded by the emergency and essential to the preservation of the nation, and as within the provisions of the Constitution, the measures and acts which he has adopted to defend the nation against its open and secret foes; that we approve, especially, the proclamation of emancipation and the employment as Union soldiers of the men heretofore held in slavery."

Mr. Speaker, when American citizens, public men, the leaders of a great political party, can thus stultify themselves and insult the truth of history; when they can thus prove their lack of all political integrity; when their "candied tongues" can thus lick the feet of power and "applaud" the destroyer of constitutional liberty, we have indeed reached a mournful era in our history as a nation, and there is cause for the hope of the patriot's heart to fail.

In answer to the wild ravings against slavery, and the revolutionary measures attempted in regard to it by the Administration and its party, I think I may safely appeal from the present testimony of that party, now thoroughly lost to reason, and infidel to its own plighted faith, to its testimony at Chicago and in Congress, which I have quoted, when under the name of the Republican party it was comparatively clothed and in its right mind.

I will assume, sir, for charity's sake, that the resolution of the Chicago convention, and the declarations of Mr. Lincoln's inaugural, and the resolutions of February 11, 1861, honestly expressed the opinions and purposes declared in them. We thus find the party now in power then affirming and committed to two cardinal principles:

1. Absence of power in the Federal Government and in the non-slaveholding States to legislate upon or interfere with slavery in the slaveholding States.

2. The right of the State governments to control their own domestic institutions, including slavery, and that the maintenance of this right "is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric [meaning of course the whole system of Federal and State government] depend." This proposition of the Republican party of 1860 and 1861 of course involved as its logical consequence the further proposition that to take from any State "the right to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively" would be to destroy that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of the Union depend. In other words, when the right of State self-government as to its domestic affairs is taken away, the Union ceases to be perfect and will not endure.

We have no better proof of this fundamental truth than the present condition of our country. Disunion and civil war attest the danger of disturbing the balance of power in our Federal system. Out of their own mouths and by their own professed principles are the party in power convicted and condemned.

Thus stood the case as to Federal power over slavery when civil war was commenced.

We all know that one and the chief cause of that war, so far as the southern States were concerned, was jealousy in those States of the growing and overshadowing political power of the northern States, and fear that that power, in the hands of a party hostile to slavery, determined in some way to abolish it, and pledged to exclude it from all the Territories of the United States, would soon be exercised to reach and abolish it in the States, by amendments of the Federal Constitution, or some other exercise of political power by the free States. The people of the southern States, after the election of November, 1860, felt that the power of the Federal Government had substantially passed into the hands of an aggressive anti-slavery or abolition party, and that in so far as their own peculiar domestic institutions were concerned the southern States were no longer able to protect them within the Union, and had therefore ceased to be equal States in that Union. Whether well founded or not, we know that this belief, this jealousy and fear prevailed in and excited the southern States to war against the Federal Government.

The closing weeks of the Thirty-Sixth Congress will ever be memorable in the history of this country for the struggle between the radical or revolutionary and the conservative and constitutional elements of which that Congress was composed. During the same period a similar struggle between the friends of the Union and its enemies was going on in the peace conference held in this city. On the one side, both in Congress and in the conference, were the desire and effort to avoid the impending peril of civil war, and to restore the Union and its harmony by conciliation and compromise. On the other side was the evident determination to yield no point of the anti-slavery policy which had carried the Republican party into power, but to press that policy even to the extremity of the shedding of blood. The only substantial result of the effort to meet the southern States in a spirit of conciliation, and to settle the question of slavery so as to allay their fears as to further interference with it within the States by the Federal Government or the free States, was the joint resolution of Congress, approved March 2, 1861, providing for the submission to a vote of the State Legislatures of an amendment to the Constitution, in these words:

"No amendment shall be made to the Constitution which will authorize or give to Congress the power to abolish or interfere within any State with the domestic institutions thereof, including that of persons held to labor or service by the laws of said State."

This resolution passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 133 against 65, and the Senate by a vote of 24 against 12. What there was of wisdom in this action of Congress came too late. Whether because the southern people saw in the negative vote of the radical Republicans in Congress upon this resolution the evidence of a determination still to agitate the slavery question and to continue anti-slavery aggression, and therefore did not consider it as offering any security to them, or whether because they were determined that the Union should be broken at all hazards, it is certain that the joint resolution of Congress failed to stop the progress of disunion or to stay the coming of war. I refer to the resolution now as additional evidence to what I have already cited of the opinion of a large majority of the people, as expressed through their representatives at that time, that the right to legislate upon and control slavery should not exist in the Federal Government nor betaken from the State governments. The resolution itself, in fact, expressed no more than what was the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution as it now is; and the southern people so understood it, and did not therefore accept it as any substantial concession by the non-slaveholding States.

The assertion of power or right in a majority of the States, either through the legislation of the Federal Government or through amendments of the Constitution, to interfere with or control the domestic institutions of a State, such, for example, as slavery, essentially repudiates the principle upon which the Union was formed, namely, the political equality of the States. Such a right or power conceded places the minority of States at the mercy of the majority. A Federal State to which the Constitution affords no guarantee that its domestic institutions shall not be changed by other States nor by the Federal Government, loses the very essence of its freedom, independence, and sovereignty.

The arguments against the proposed joint resolution arise, first, from the character of the proposition itself; and, secondly, from the time and circumstances or the condition of public affairs in which it is presented.

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to consider in detail all the objectionable features which this proposed amendment to the Constitution presents. I am, sir, at a loss for words wherein to express my sense of its true character. It assumes the name and form of liberty and the functions and power of free government to perpetrate and cover up a great public wrong. It is not the only instance in history of an attempt to prostitute liberty to unholy purpose and malignant passions. "O liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!" was the last exclamation of Madam Roland—herself a true lover of liberty—as she stood upon the scaffold, amid the demoniac yells of a Parisian mob, the zealots of "liberty, equality, fraternity."

I shall notice in general terms some of the cardinal objections to the joint resolution:

1. It proposes a revolutionary change in the Government. It seeks to draw within the authority of the Federal Constitution and the Federal Congress a question of local or internal policy belonging exclusively to the slaveholding States, and is in conflict with the principles on which the Union was originally formed, and with the whole theory and spirit of the Constitution as to the rights of the States. It means that three fourths of the States may dictate to the other one fourth what shall be their domestic institutions, and how they shall govern their internal affairs, and that even the right to govern as to such affairs may be taken away. It means that three fourths of the States may at pleasure, by a constitutional amendment, appropriate without compensation or confiscate the property of the other one fourth. In its present form the resolution is aimed at slavery; but it might, with equal propriety, be aimed at any other local law or institution of a State. It might as well propose that freedom of religious opinion should be abolished, and one form of religious worship only prevail in all the States; or that marriage should not take place except between certain classes and at certain ages and otherwise define marital rights, or be extended to regulate the relations of parent and child, or the canons of property, or the elective franchise. The principle of the proposed amendment is the principle of consolidation, and cannot be drawn into precedent without a final subversion of our constitutional Government. It is absurd to call a Federal Union wherein such a principle of consolidation has been introduced into its fundamental law a Union of free and equal States. The minority would be ever the subjects, not the co-equals, of the majority of the States.

2. The amendment proposes to change the constitutional basis of representation and taxation. By the Constitution as it is five slaves count as three free persons only in the apportionment of Federal Representatives and direct taxes. The effect of the amendment, therefore, will be to increase southern representation, based upon the negro population, to the extent of two fifths at least of that population; and no man who knows the motives and policy of the party in power questions but that their object in part, by the proposed amendment, is to make the negro population not merely a passive but an active basis of representation in the Federal Government. First, the negro a citizen of the United States; secondly, the negro a free citizen of the United States, protected everywhere, in defiance of existing State constitutions and laws, as such citizen; and thirdly, the negro a voting citizen of the United States, are all propositions logically involved in the proposed amendment. The same revolutionary power which enfranchises negroes by presidential edicts of emancipation, or by constitutional amendments, carried, as this would be, in the southern States, if it receives the two-thirds vote of this Congress, so as to be submitted to the State Legislatures, by fraudulent elections and by duress of arms, would soon admit negroes to the elective franchise in all the States, and negro representatives in Congress would speak the voice of southern if not of the northern States. This is the designed effect of the proposed amendment in its change of the constitutional basis of representation.

In its operation upon the basis of taxation in the southern States, the effect of the proposed amendment would be to increase their quota of direct taxation while it diminished their wealth and ability of payment: first, in the direct loss of the value, equal perhaps to $2,000,000,000, of all slave property, by the act of abolition without compensation; second, in the diminished value of all southern agricultural lands, consequent upon the destruction of the organized system of labor that has made them productive and valuable; third, in the diminution, resulting from the same cause, of the products of all farm or plantation property. Whatever might be the remote and ultimate effects of abolition upon the wealth of the southern States, no man can doubt that its immediate effect would be to immensely reduce their aggregate wealth and to overburden with taxation and impoverish the present owners of property in those States.

3. The effect of this amendment would be to turn loose at once, without preparation or education for freedom, without property or the means whereby to live, and without the guidance, restraint, and protection of the superior intelligence and forethought of their masters or owners, the whole slave population of the southern States, numbering from three and a half to four million persons. A change so sudden and so radical in the industrial and social system of States, and especially in the condition of such a class of persons as the negro population of the southern States, is without precedent or justification in history; and we have no warrant for believing that it would be a benign and healthful change. On the contrary, we have the testimony of one who, although an instrument, and an active instrument, in bringing about this great social revolution, has declared—but in this as in many other instances proved false to his own opinions—that “gradual, not sudden emancipation is better for all.” All who know anything of the negro character know this to be true. Sudden freedom to the negro, without the capacity to appreciate and improve it, has proved not a blessing but a curse. On this point let tens of thousands of homeless, diseased, demoralized, starving, naked, helpless “contrabands” bear testimony.

4. This proposed amendment is designed to be the coadjutor and crowning effort of that stupendous system of confiscation or legalized plunder by which the party in power propose to restore the Union. They have already gone as far as they could do by acts of legislation and executive edicts of emancipation to seize and appropriate the property and free the slaves of those in arms against the Federal Government and to partition the southern lands among negroes, and now the final act of confiscation in the shape of this amendment is proposed to operate upon friend and foe, Union man and rebel alike, in the appropriation to public use without compensation of the entire slave property of the United States.

We have hitherto considered it a fundamental principle of civil polity, as it is a provision of our Constitution, that private property cannot be taken for public use without just compensation. This proposed amendment ignores and tramples upon that principle. If the public good really demands that the slave-owners of the South should surrender their slave property, is there any principle of constitutional freedom or of public justice that justifies the demand for that surrender without making adequate compensation? None, sir; and it is the plunder of despotism, not justice nor constitutional liberty, to take the property without making the compensation. There was a time, sir, when the President of the United States, now in office, and many of his friends in the Thirty-Seventh Congress, thought that slaves were property, and that if they were emancipated for the public good the United States should co-operate and help to pay for them. I refer for evidence on this point to the various messages and resolutions comprising his compensated emancipation scheme sent to the Thirty-Seventh Congress by President Lincoln, and to the action of that Congress on the subject. In this, as in most other cases, the President and his party have been false to their professions. What they once thought should not be taken without being paid for he, by his emancipation proclamation, and they by their proposed amendment to the Constitution—which he no doubt will approve if it passes this Congress—propose to take by the strong hand of a despotic majority without payment or compensation.

Again: if the proposed amendment be based upon the idea of punishment to slaveholders for their rebellion, then is it evidence of an attempt to punish a whole class for the crime of a part, the innocent for the guilty. If the slaveholders of South Carolina, for example, have rebelled and forfeited their slaves to the vengeance or justice of the law, they, and they alone, should be punished according to the law; but, sir, should the slaveholders of Kentucky, who have not rebelled nor forfeited any constitutional right, be swept into the same great revenge which it is proposed to visit upon the slaveholders of South Carolina?

“Slavery has committed the unpardonable sin and it must die” is a declaration, in substance if not in words, uttered in this Hall. It is the shibboleth of the party in power, the key-note of their policy; and in the consummation of their purposes they ruthlessly trample upon constitutions, laws, instincts of race, the love of kindred, and even the common feelings of humanity. What matters it, sir, to the zealots of the anti-slavery idea that a white man of the South, his wife, his children, born perhaps to affluence and educated in all the refinements of social life, should be driven from their inheritance and become homeless, houseless wanderers, and even mendicants, before their own slaves, so long as the negro, without intelligence, without education, without capacity for self-government, can be installed as owner of the soil from which his master and protector has been driven, and become a political instrument whereby the party now controlling the Federal Government can perpetuate their hold on public power? What matters it that our land is drenched in blood, our people demoralized, oppressed, impoverished, and grinding taxation makes the labor of our once thrifty husbandmen a struggle only for the means whereby to live, and drives forth to the labor of the fields, like the slave women of the South or the serfs of European despotism, our white women and children, so long as slaveholders and “slavemongers” are crushed, and negroes are free, owners of southern soil, voters at elections, statesmen in Congress, and companions and equals at our firesides and in our marriage beds? This joint resolution is the legitimate fruit of that hatred toward the slaveholders of the South and to the Union and the Constitution which found expression in the publication known as the Helper book, and in the declaration of Garrison, “The Constitution of the United States, a covenant with death and an agreement with hell.” The abolition of slavery and the destruction and impoverishment of slaveholders, “the ruffians, outlaws, and criminals” of the southern States, feed fat the grudge of northern abolitionists; and what matters it that the Union and Constitution perish in the flames if the fanatics of abolition can but dance around the holocaust of negro slavery?

On the issue that the principles and policy of the abolition party now in power inevitably involved a revolutionary change in our Federal system; in other words, in fear that the Republican party, if not in other apparently less legitimate ways of carrying out their anti-slavery policy, would do it by amending the Federal Constitution and coercing the minority of States to accept the amendment, eleven of the southern States declared their independence of the Federal Government, and have attempted to establish that independence by war.

In the midst of this war, gigantic, barbarous, unnatural, filling the land with sorrow, and swiftly leading the Republic on the road to its ruin, while mighty opposing armies confront each other, and almost every day witnesses the slaughter of hundreds, if not thousands, of our heroic young men, and while the results of the war in the restoration of a divided Union and the preservation of the Constitution are yet unknown and uncertain, this revolutionary proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States by introducing into it the very principle against the establishment of which eleven States have seceded and appealed to arms, is brought forward for agitation among the people—brought forward, too, as I believe, when its advocates well know that it cannot receive the constitutional two-thirds vote of this Congress to warrant its submission to the Legislatures and people of the United States.

There can, therefore, it seems to me, be no practical purpose to be accomplished by this attempt at constitutional amendment at this time, except to indicate to the world, and especially to the men in arms against us, that the war on our part is to accomplish the very purpose with which they charged us in the beginning; namely, the abolition of slavery in the United States, and the political and social elevation of negroes to all the rights of white men. If this Congress desires to prove to the people of the southern confederacy that they had a cause for beginning a war for their independence, the proof cannot more effectually be made than by the passage of this resolution. It is a plain, undisguised attempt to indicate what the Administration and party in power intend shall be the result of the irrepressible conflict they have declared and invited even to the extremity of civil war.

Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to discuss the right or policy of slavery at this time. It may be a sin; it may be impolitic; it may be unprofitable. Arguments on both sides have been and can be made, and radical differences of opinion exist on the subject, and neither the power of a political majority nor the power of war can determine the abstract right or wrong of the opposing opinions. I am not the apologist nor friend of slavery, but no abstract or theoretical opinions about slavery determine my vote on the question before the House. If so be that slavery is dead, as the result of civil war, as many say, not of the emancipation proclamation, which the author of it has himself aptly termed brutum fulmen, I have no regrets for it; no tears to shed over its grave; its own advocates have done their part to slay it; let them reap as they have sown; I have no desire to revive or restore it. If, however, slavery be wounded nigh unto death, but not slain, if for one will not, for the sake of giving it its death-blow, either swear to or admit the right to abolish it by executive edict, or introduce into the Constitution of my country, by way of amendment, a principle and a precedent that may in an evil hour of excited passion like the present put the dagger to the heart of the freedom and independence of my own State, and make me the serf of a despotism. Better, sir, for our country, better for man, that negro slavery exist a thousand years than that American white men lose their constitutional liberty in the extinction of the constitutional sovereignty of the Federal States of this Union. Slavery is the creature of the States alone, not of the Federal Union; they made it, let them unmake it. If the States wherein slavery still lives, a mangled, bleeding, prostrate form, see fit to give it the final blow that shall make it a thing of the past, let them do it in their own time and way. If, however, they see fit to nurse it into a further brief vitality, let them do it; it is their ward, not yours nor mine.

My arguments against the joint resolution are in substance as already indicated:

1. That it seeks to draw within the authority of the Federal Constitution and Congress a question of local or internal policy, belonging exclusively to the slaveholding States, and that it is therefore in conflict with the theory and spirit of the Constitution, and subversive of the principles and basis of the Union.

2. That it is a scheme malignant in its motives, and essentially unjust and dishonest in its purposes. In cannot on any principle of constitutional or public law be justified as an act of punishment; and as a scheme of virtual appropriation of private property without compensation, it is equally repugnant to the principles of free and just government.

3. That the tendency of the resolution, offered at this time especially, is to strengthen the resistance to the restoration of the Union, and to render such restoration improbable if not impossible.

4. That even if the proposed amendment were just and politic in the abstract, it should be brought forward at a time when it can be fairly and calmly discussed, and passed upon by a full and fair expression of the opinions of the people of all the States; and we know that no such full and fair expression of opinion can be obtained at this time, or pending this war. The work of remodeling the Constitution, if that be necessary, is a work for the calm thought of times of peace, not for the excited passions of war. It is said "the laws are silent in the midst of arms," and we know by a painful experience that this is too true, even in our own States that have been far removed from the theater of the war, and where the civil courts should be open for the free operation of the laws in the punishment of offenders and for the protection of the innocent.

In confirmation of this statement, sir, I need but mention that a true American patriot and statesman, known to us all—the peer in patriotism and statesmanship of any man upon this floor—still lives in exile, a banished man, the victim of lawless oppression, because the laws he honored and obeyed were silent and impotent in the midst of arms, and he appealed to them in vain for justice and protection. And, sir, I would here say, because it is due to truth to say it, that so long as that flagrant and shameless act of despotism, the banishment of Vallandigham, remains unrebuked and unpunished by the American people, they claim without truth the title of freemen, and their boast of constitutional liberty is a boast and nothing more. But more is it true that laws are silent in States occupied and overrun by the opposing armies. There law and reason alike are voiceless and powerless, and freedom of speech and of suffrage, the basis of all true political freedom, is subdued by arms. It is mockery and insult to talk of submitting to the people of the seceded States questions of amendment to the Federal Constitution when they are under the duress and subjected to all the calamities and excitements of war.

Again, sir, I would ask, is it right, is it wise, is it magnanimous, is it in accordance with the principles of our Federal system, that this Congress, in the absence virtually of the Representatives of eleven States, parties to the Constitution, while the places of those States are vacant, and their voices not heard in our Halls—except I might, perhaps without exaggeration, say, in the thunders of their warlike array, protesting against our policy of aggression and usurpation—is it right or wise, I ask, that we, a fraction of the constitutional representation in Congress, should attempt to provide for a fundamental change in the Government that will overturn their social and industrial systems, and affect for all time the absent and protesting States? I freely say that there is neither wisdom, justice, magnanimity, nor humanity in the attempt of this Congress, at this time and in this way, to innovate upon the Constitution. Let us first determine how much of the territory that once acknowledged the Constitution of the United States as its supreme law is our territory, and whether or not that Constitution is to remain the supreme law of the land, before we attempt to amend it. Let us reconcile those in arms against it to the Constitution as it is before we attempt to incorporate into it a provision they have denounced, and we have no right to impose without their free consent.

I have watched with the anxiety due to their importance the proceedings and legislation of this Congress, and noted well the spirit and purposes of the majority that control it. The majority here seem to me to be governed by the spirit of revolution, not of conservation. They do not believe in the Constitution of the United States as its framers made and interpreted it. They do not believe in the Union as the fathers made it. They do not propose to restore that Union nor to retain the Constitution in its integrity. Co-workers with and copyists of the revolutionists of secession, this Administration and this Congress have abandoned the old Union and Constitution—our surest hope and our best defense—and adopted the dangerous experiment of revolution against revolution. The party of secession would disintegrate by revolution; this Congress would consolidate by revolution. The one by force of arms would make a new nation of slaveholding States; the other by force of arms and by force of revolutionary and unconstitutional legislation would make a new nation, a regenerated Republic, as they are pleased to style it, without slavery, but in truth States emasculated of the manly freedom that was once the pride and boast of the people of all the United States.

It is vain, sir, for gentlemen of the majority here to claim that they are the friends of peace on the basis of the Union and Constitution as they existed before the war began, or to deny that they are the advocates and instruments of revolution. The records of this Congress, with daily accumulating evidence, falsify the claim and the denial. You desire no peace, and you do not intend, if you can help it, to accept peace until you have abolished slavery; deprived if not robbed by confiscation the property-holders of the South of their rightful inheritance; made negroes socially and politically the equals of white men; and remodeled the Constitution to suit your own political purposes. Your ears are deaf to appeals and arguments for the old Union, and you speak of it as a hated thing of the past. You openly scoff at the Constitution, and the ablest among you denounce it as "an atrocious idea." You do not seek the ways of peace. Your policy is subjugation, not restoration. The instruments by which you work are the instruments of vengeance and despotism, not of humanity and justice and constitutional freedom. Your records show no resolves or enactments for conciliation and peace and reunion, but for conscription, wherein you attempt to legalize the slavery of freemen to a military power that acknowledges no limit but its own will; confiscation by whose agency revenge, avarice, and fraud combine for plunder; inordinate taxation that borders on confiscation; proscription of your political opponents; proscription of the press, of free speech, and proscription of freedom of debate, even in these Halls consecrated to it by the Constitution and by every hope of a freeman's heart. You openly justify wanton acts of executive usurpation, and violations hitherto unprecedented of constitutional liberty.

While hundreds of thousands of your kindred, of patriots whom you have lured into war under the solemn pledge that it should be a war to restore the Union and Constitution with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired, are slaughtered by the demon of war, and the people groan under the burdens you have laid upon them, and are still exerting your skill in devices of taxation to increase, with eager haste you counsel together and legislate for the division among negroes of southern lands, on which you cannot and dare not set your feet. You are arrogant in your present power and despise your enemies without cause. You exasperate while you should conciliate; you threaten where you should negotiate, and work for vengeance where you should labor for peace. You openly declare your purpose to treat as devils those of your kindred race whom you have exasperated to madness; those who have been your fellow-citizens, and who, however malignant and inhuman your purposes concerning them, you must in the end treat as men and equals, if not as fellow-citizens and brethren.

Mr. Speaker, the line of policy which this Administration and its party and the majority in this Congress have adopted toward the people of the southern States, and toward the Democratic party of the North, is the dictate of passion and partisan spirit, and indicates more the arrogance of power than of patriotic statesmanship. That line of policy will not succeed. The experience of history and of human nature teaches us it will not succeed. The work of this Administration and Congress is the work of disunion, not of Union.

It will destroy, not build up. It is fruitful of evil, not of good, and must and will be changed—peacefully and in the methods of the Constitution, so far as the northern Democracy are concerned, so long as they are left free to use the methods of the Constitution, but forcibly if need be when an oppressed and indignant people have no other remedy for the preservation of their constitutional rights but to rise in the majesty of their strength and assert and maintain them by the strong arms of freemen.

If we are to restore the Union with the seceded States and save the Constitution, other arguments than war and denunciation and insult and the invocation of the spirit of revenge and plunder must be used. It was not in that way the Union and Constitution were formed, nor can they thus be saved. In persisting in your policy, of which the joint resolution now before the House is but one expression, you are but paving the way for the division and dishonor of your country, and for your own dishonor, when impartial history shall sit in judgment upon the men and events of these perilous days.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I regret that this late day of the session compels an abridgment of discussion upon a subject of such overshadowing importance, yet I cannot let the occasion pass without briefly giving my reasons for voting for this constitutional amendment.

SHALL SLAVERY STILL LIVE?

Slavery is to-day an open enemy striking at the heart of the Republic. It is the soul and body, the spirit and motive of the rebellion. It is slavery which marshals yonder rebel hosts which confront the patriot armies of Grant and Sherman. It is the savage spirit of this barbarous institution which starves the Union prisoners at Richmond, which assassinates them at Fort Pillow, which murders the wounded on the field of battle, and which fills up the catalogue of wrong and outrage which mark the conduct of the rebels during all this war.

In view of all the long catalogue of wrongs which slavery has inflicted upon the country I demand to-day of the Congress of the United States the death of African slavery. We can have no permanent peace while slavery lives. It now reels and staggers toward its last death-struggle. Let us strike the monster this last decisive blow.

The Thirty-Seventh Congress will live in history as the Congress which prohibited slavery in all the Territories of the Union, and abolished it at the national capital. The President of the United States will be remembered as the author of the proclamation of emancipation, as the liberator of a race, the apostle of freedom, the great emancipator of his country. The Thirty-Eighth Congress, if we pass this joint resolution, will live in history as that which consummated the great work of freeing a continent from the curse of human bondage.

Never, since the day when John Adams plead for the Declaration of Independence, has so important a question been submitted to an American Congress as that upon which you are now about to vote. The signing of the immortal Declaration is a familiar picture in every log cabin and residence all over the land. Pass this resolution, and the grand spectacle of this vote, which knocks off the fetters of a whole race, will make this scene immortal.

Live a century, nay, a thousand years, and no such opportunity to do a great deed for humanity, for liberty, for peace, and for your country, will ever again present itself. Pass this joint resolution, and you win a victory over wrong and injustice lasting as eternity. The whole world will rise up to do you honor. Every lover of liberty in Germany, France, Italy, Great Britain, the world, will rise up and call you blessed. The gallant soldiers in the field who are giving their lives for liberty and Union will call down upon you the blessings of Heaven. Let the lightnings of God (fit instrument for the glorious message) transmit to the toiling and struggling soldiers of Sherman and Hunter and Butler and Grant the thrilling words, "Slavery abolished forever," and their joyous shouts will strike terror into the ranks of the rebels and traitors fighting for tyranny and bondage. The thousands of wounded in the hospitals around this capital would hail the intelligence as a battle fought and a great victory won.

This constitutional amendment has passed the Senate, long regarded as the citadel of the slave power; how strange if it should fail in the popular branch of Congress! The people and the States are eager and impatient to ratify it. Will those who claim to represent the ancient Democracy refuse to give the people an opportunity to vote upon it? Is this your confidence in the loyal masses?

The passage of this resolution will strike the rebellion at the heart. I appeal to border State men and Democrats of the free States; look over your country; see the bloody footsteps of slavery; see the ruin and desolation which it has brought upon our once happy land; and I ask, why stay the hand now ready to strike down to death the cause of all these evils? Why seek to prolong the life, to restore to vigor, the institution of slavery, now needing but this last act to doom it to everlasting death and damnation?

Gentlemen may flatter themselves with a restoration of the slave power in this country. "The Union as it was!" It is a dream, never again to be realized. The America of the past is gone forever. A new nation is to be born from the agony through which the people are now passing. This new nation is to be wholly free. Liberty, equality before the law is to be the great corner-stone.

Much yet remains to be done to secure this. Many a battle on the field has yet to be fought and won against the mighty power which fights for slavery, the barbarous system of the past. Many a battle has yet to be won on the higher sphere of moral conflict. While our gallant soldiers are subduing the rebels in the field, let us second their efforts by sweeping from the statute-book every stay and prop and shield of human slavery, the scourge of our country, and let us crown all by incorporating into our organic law the glorious prohibition of slavery. For myself, I mean to fight this cause of the war, this cursed cause of all the expenditure of blood and treasure from which my country is now suffering, this institution which has filled our whole land with desolation, sorrow, and anguish; I mean to fight it until neither on statute-book nor in Constitution shall there be left a single sentence or word which can be construed to sanction the stupendous wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I thank God and a liberty-loving constituency for the privilege of voting for this constitutional amendment, for universal emancipation throughout our country. Let us now, to-day, in the name of liberty, justice, and of God, consummate this grand revolution. Let us to-day make our country, our whole country, the home of the free.

I conclude, in the language of the President:

"So much good has not been done by one effort in all past time as in the providence of God it is now your high privilege to do. May the vast future not have to lament that you have neglected it."

Mr. INGERSOLL. Mr. Speaker, having very recently taken a seat in this body, it was my intention to have contented myself with voting for all such measures as I believed to be just and expedient, and against such as I believed to be unjust or inexpedient without taking part in the discussion of such measures. But in justice to the liberty-loving and Union-loving men who sent me here, and in justice to myself I ask the indulgence of the House for the few minutes which have been generously given me by my friend, the honorable gentleman from California, [Mr. SHANNON,] out of his hour, in which to discuss the joint resolution now under consideration.

I have the proud honor to represent a district in which a very great majority of the people are thoroughly and unalterably anti-slavery. They are in favor of justice and against oppression and wrong everywhere and in every form. There are two grand objects for the accomplishment of which they have already freely given of their best blood and treasure, and stand ready to-day to give much more of both, if necessary, for the absolute and unconditional crushing out of this most wicked and devastating rebellion, and for the complete and utter extinction of human slavery, the sole and fearful cause of the rebellion.

I know full well if the lamented Lovejoy, my honored and noble predecessor, could come to-day from the unseen world and take his place among us, his manly and eloquent voice would be heard in this Hall, as in days past, with all the earnestness of his great soul, pronouncing in favor of the adoption of this resolution, in favor of universal liberty and the rights of mankind. The cause of liberty and equal and exact justice lost a noble and heroic friend when he died, and the Union cause and the country lost one of their best and boldest champions. A grateful people hold him in affectionate remembrance, and it is to be hoped they may emulate his many virtues. He died in the midst of his great and good work; but God, in His infinite wisdom and goodness, did not suffer him to depart until the abolition of slavery in this country was approaching with rapid step the grand and glorious day of its consummation. And I say with all my heart, may Heaven speed the day. Universal liberty was the child of his heart, and he lived long enough to see that divine child adopted as its own by the nation.

Sir, I hope this resolution may pass by the necessary majority to give it validity. All truly honest and philanthropic men throughout the world will have reason to rejoice and will rejoice if it so passes. It will be heralded over the world as another grand step upward and onward in the irresistible march of a christianized civilization. The old starry banner of our country, as it "floats over the sea and over the land," will be grander and more glorious than ever before. Its stars will be brighter; it will be holier; it will mean more than a mere nationality; it will mean universal liberty; it will mean that the rights of mankind, without regard to color or race, are respected and protected. The oppressed and downtrodden of all the world will take new courage; hope will spring afresh in their struggling and weary hearts; and when they look upon that banner in distant lands they will yearn to be here, where they can enjoy the inestimable blessings which are denied them forever on their native shores.

Mr. Speaker, it would seem that this resolution should be adopted by a unanimous vote. Yet I fear we shall lose it. The slave power has not yet lost all its influence in this Congress. The pock-marks of slavery are plainly visible on the faces of many of the members of the Opposition. They were inoculated and corrupted by it in the days of its wanton power. Its woeful and baneful influence is upon them still. Slavery has been their idol. They worshiped at its shrine in the days of its power, and even now, when it is going to an ignominious grave, they rally around and protect and defend it in all its hideous ghastliness as though it were really divine. We may admire their pluck, but we must condemn their action, their want of patriotism, their inappreciation of liberty, and their entire lack of generous sentiments common to humanity. They are blinded by prejudice. They are politically corrupt, under an undue desire to regain that power which they so ingloriously lost during the last Democratic administration, or, I should say, maladministration. Being the slaves of the slave power, we cannot expect much of them until we have made them free and hewn down their prejudices.

In my opinion many of the Opposition members would vote for this resolution if they could be convinced that slavery could no longer be made available to them as a political power. But they know it as certain as fate that if slavery goes down the present Democratic organization goes down with it. Hence their herculean efforts to save slavery; but they cannot succeed in their unholy and detestable work. The liberty-loving and loyal people of this country have sworn in their hearts that the rebellion and slavery shall both go down, and forever. And they will keep that oath. When we have succeeded in burying the rebellion and slavery, if we could only petrify the pro-slavery Democracy, what a becoming and fitting tombstone it would make to mark the place of their burial.

There can be no objection on legal grounds to amend the Constitution in the precise manner pointed out by that instrument itself. Article five of the Constitution provides for its own amendment as follows:

"ART. 5. The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress; provided, that no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that no State, without its consent shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

It is plain to be seen, then, that this resolution contemplates no violation of the Constitution. Then why this objection to adopting it and submitting the proposed amendment to the Legislatures of the several States not in rebellion? Are you of the Opposition afraid to trust the representatives of the people? In reality I believe you are. You fear, and have good cause to fear, that the necessary majority of States will ratify the proposed amendment, and make it thereby a part of the Constitution. Then slavery will no longer need defenders and protectors in our national Congress. "Othello's occupation" will be gone indeed. You will go hungry for place and office, and slavery can no longer gratify your unholy ambition. But the people will rejoice, the friends of freedom everywhere will rejoice, and our country will be infinitely more prosperous, more glorious, and grander than ever before.

But the Opposition object to the adoption of this resolution at the present time, because they say Mississippi, South Carolina, and other States in rebellion can have no voice upon the question of its ratification. Is this a good objection? I answer not. Why is it that Mississippi and South Carolina can have no voice upon this question? It is because they voluntarily entered into this rebellion. Had they not done so they would have had equal right and enjoyed equal privilege with Illinois upon this question. Are we, because a portion of the States inaugurated and still carry on this rebellion, to suspend all legislative action which might affect things or institutions in such States? I say not. Let those who inaugurate and carry on the rebellion take the consequences. We are responsible to the Constitution and the loyal people, not to the disloyal and rebels. It is truly said that at almost any time it is well to do right. It is well to eradicate an evil. That slavery is an evil no sane, honest man will deny. It has been the great curse of this country from its infancy to the present hour. And now that the States in rebellion have given the loyal States the opportunity to take off that curse, to wipe away the foul stain, I say let it be done. We owe it to ourselves; we owe it to posterity; we owe it to the slaves themselves to exterminate slavery in this country forever by the adoption of the proposed amendment to the Constitution. If we fail to do it, now that we have the power, not only will our constituents but posterity and humanity hold us responsible, and remember us only to condemn.

I hold that slavery and rebellion are so closely allied that any act, legislative or military, which cripples the one tends to destroy the other. If slavery could be abolished to-day the rebellion would end to-morrow. If the rebellion could be put down to-day slavery would go down to-morrow. So that in my opinion any act that we can do, which is lawful in itself, to weaken slavery, if we should fail to do it, we would be criminally culpable.

I believe slavery is the mother of this rebellion, that this rebellion can be attributed to no other cause but slavery; from that it derived its life and gathers its strength to-day. Destroy the mother, and the child will die. Destroy the cause, and the effect will disappear. Slavery has ever been the enemy of liberal principles. It has ever been the friend of ignorance, prejudice, and all the unlawful, savage, and detestable passions which proceed therefrom. It has ever been domineering arrogant, exacting, and overbearing. It has claimed to be a polished aristocrat, when in reality it has only been a coarse, swaggering, and brutal boor. It has ever claimed to be a gentleman, when in reality it has ever been a villain. I think it is high time to clip its overgrown pretensions, strip it of its mask, and expose it in all its hideous deformity to the detestation of all honest and patriotic men.

For eighty years the bogus aristocracy of slavery have left nothing undone to corrupt and demoralize the people and their Representatives. For eighty years they have attempted to clothe this monster in the radiance of divinity, when in reality it should only be draped in the blackness of its own enormity. In order to maintain their power they had so molded public opinion, even in the grand free States of the North, that many honest but deluded men were willing to concede that slavery, if not divine, was not so bad an institution after all, that "the devil was not so black as he is painted." The North, against its sense of justice and right, for the sake of peace and union, has, time and time again, humiliated itself in its own and the eyes of the world by conceding to the unhallowed and ambitious demands of slavery.

At the formation of our Constitution slavery demanded that a section should be incorporated therein restraining Congress from passing a law prohibiting the importation of negroes prior to the year 1808. The North, in violation of its sense of honor, got down upon its knees and consented that it should be "written in the bond," thereby conceding the right to this bogus aristocracy to freight its ships with human beings stolen from their native land and consigned to an ignominious slavery only equaled by its savage cruelty.

Again, in 1793, they demanded a fugitive slave law; that is to say, that free northern men should be their blood-hounds. The North again assented, and went into the blood-hound business. In 1850 they again demanded more and fiercer blood-hounds. The North, true to its instincts of peace and union, but false to its honor, agreed that the blood-hounds should be forthcoming. For one—and I am happy to say that I am not alone—I am tired of this blood-hound business, and voted on Monday last to abolish it. The Opposition are in favor of its continuance: I am for this amendment to the Constitution, in order to take from these adherents of the slave power the ignominy and degradation consequent upon so base an occupation.

Again, in 1820, the same relentless monster demanded of the North more territory for the uses of slavery. The North again got upon its knees and admitted Missouri with a slave constitution, and again suffered the mortification of self-degradation.

Again, in 1854, they demanded the repeal of the Missouri compromise line. Again, in northern men, whom they had demoralized and corrupted by the contaminating influence of slavery, united to a corresponding lust for office, they found the willing tools wherewith to consummate this treachery. Liberty received a blow in the face, and slavery was taken by the hand.

Again, in 1857, the slave power brought all its energies to bear to convert this territory, which had been thrown open to it by the repeal of the Missouri compromise line, into a slave State. To the everlasting infamy of James Buchanan's Administration be it said, with a few honorable exceptions, it lent the whole force and power of its authority to the accomplishment of this foul crime. But, thank God, the people of the North at last had become aroused, and they determined that slavery should no longer be the master of liberty. They felt it in their hearts, they expressed it with their lips, that they would no longer be the tools of slavery, or the indifferent spectators of its encroachments. They declared that Kansas should be free. The slave power swore it should be slave; and then and there this war commenced which is now deluging this land with blood. After a long and not a bloodless struggle justice and freedom triumphed, and Kansas to-day is a beaming star of liberty in the western horizon. The South saw in this triumph the ultimate overthrow of their most cherished institution. They became alarmed, and felt and knew that if the people of the North were unwilling to submit to further degradation thereafter they must depend on themselves for the protection of slavery, as their northern friends were powerless to stem the tide which was rising and swelling toward universal liberty.

So, in 1860, at the Charleston convention they demanded that additional guarantees for slavery be incorporated in the platform of the Democratic party. The northern Democracy saw at once that to yield to them on this point was certain defeat. The South repudiated Douglas in that convention for the reason that they did not believe him sound on the slavery question. As an evidence of his unsoundness they pointed to his Freeport speech, made in 1858, in joint debate with President Lincoln. In this speech he enunciated the doctrine that Territorial Legislatures possessed the power to exclude slavery from the Territories by "unfriendly legislation." This was anything but orthodox in their view. Another objection to Senator Douglas was that he had been opposed to the Lecompton-Kansas constitution. Consequently Douglas was thrown overboard. They demanded that slavery should be recognized as a national institution, and that Congress should protect it in the Territories by affirmative legislation. The northern Democracy positively refused to accede to this. The consequence was that the southern Democracy seceded, and nominated their own candidate, upon their own platform, thereby breaking up the Democratic party and depriving it of all hope of success in the then approaching presidential campaign. Who can say but that the northern wing of the Democratic party is responsible for this war? for had the northern Democracy been willing to concede at that convention to the demands of the South, and accept a platform agreeable to it, the nominee of that convention would have been elected President, and this "cruel and bloody war," as the Opposition delight to call it, would have been avoided, or, at any rate, postponed. Let the responsibility rest where it legitimately belongs. It is dishonorable in any man to say that the Republican party is responsible for this war, when, as I have shown, it perhaps might have been avoided had the northern Democracy been willing to have covered themselves with a thicker coating of degradation than they had ever before worn, and sacrificed their dignity and manhood to the behests of slavery.

I am well aware that the Opposition persistently charge that the abolitionists are responsible for the war and are the authors of the war. This charge is as false as is the assertion that slavery is divine. Had there been no slavery in this country there never would have been an abolitionist or an agitator; the inhuman and barbarous system of slavery created the abolitionist and the agitator. In this instance the evil produced the good—the wrong the right; and the good and the right must prevail. Slavery has piled up the mountain which will fall upon it and crush it to dust. Slavery alone is the cause of the war, and he who attributes this war to any other cause than slavery is wide of the mark. The man who to-day, after three years of war and desolation, would raise even a straw to shield or protect slavery, deserves, and at no very distant day will receive, the merited condemnation of a united, happy, prosperous, and liberty-loving people.

It is a humiliating and saddening spectacle to witness how persistently and unrelentingly the Opposition pursue our most worthy President, and with what vehemence they denounce his war policy, if such policy in their opinion tends in the least to interfere with the institution of slavery. If, under the war power of the Administration, a rebel sympathizer, who disgraces the soil of Illinois, is arrested and imprisoned, if a disloyal paper is suppressed, they at once set up a tremendous howl about personal liberty and the freedom of the press. If an attempt is made to expel or censure a member of Congress for uttering disloyal sentiments, another distressing howl goes up in protestation against the Administration. Their denunciation is all against Lincoln. They utter none against Davis. Our soldiers may be starved in Libby prison; they may be butchered in cold blood, as at Fort Pillow and elsewhere; Union men all through the South may be indiscriminately plundered and then dragged to the gallows, and they have no voice to raise against it or denounce it. The reason of this is obvious. They care more to regain political power than for the triumph of liberty and justice.

The eloquent and scholarly SUMNER may be knocked down in the United States Senate by a southern ruffian and blackguard; northern dough-faces say, "Served him right." A Giddings and an Adams may be censured in the House of Representatives because they have the manhood to raise their voices in behalf of liberty and justice: northern dough-faces cry out again, "Served them right." The incorruptible Parker, Codding, and Garrison may be mobbed, stoned, and imprisoned, for daring to give utterance to the sublime and eternal principles of truth, and liberty, and justice, and these same northern dough-faces rise up and cry out, "Served them right." A northern man imbued with the spirit of liberty may, within the limits of a slave State, have the effrontery to raise his voice against oppression, and say, "Your system of slavery is wrong, and you ought to abolish it:" a coat of tar and feathers or the halter may be administered as a corrective of such heretical expressions, and the northern dough-faces again cry out, "Served him right." A minister of the gospel may find it to be his duty to say to his people, "It is right that you should do unto others as you would they should do unto you;" that you ought to let the bondman go free; and he is immediately denounced as an abolition agitator, and the vanished hypocrites of his church call upon him at once and say they cannot tolerate the expression of such opinions in the pulpit, as they are calculated to irritate the South, and he must stop them or they will withdraw their support. Consequently the poor, good preacher must close his lips to such divine and heaven-born truths or starve, and this, too, in a free State; and again the northern dough-faces say, "Served him right." To crown all this record of infamy, the martyr, Elijah P. Lovejoy, is mobbed and murdered on the free, broad prairies of Illinois, simply for the crime of publishing a paper dedicated to the advocacy of the rights of mankind; and again these northern dough-faces cry out, "Away with him," "Served him right." O liberty! where is thy power? O justice! where is thy strength? But thank God, that day is gone, and gone forever. Let us take courage; the world is better; their sufferings and their trials were not in vain; liberty is stronger; justice is surer; and the idols of oppression, ignorance, and prejudice, which have been worshiped so long, are crumbling to dust. And so the good work goes bravely on. It is as irresistible as the avalanche and as grand as the Alps.

Sir, I am in favor in the fullest sense of personal liberty. I am in favor of the freedom of speech. The freedom of speech that I am in favor of is the freedom which guarantees to the citizen of Illinois, in common with the citizen of Massachusetts, the right to proclaim the eternal principles of liberty, truth, and justice in Mobile, Savannah, or Charleston with the same freedom and security as though he were standing at the foot of Bunker Hill monument; and if this proposed amendment to the Constitution is adopted and ratified, the day is not far distant when this glorious privilege will be accorded to every citizen of the Republic. I am in favor of the adoption of this amendment because it will secure to the oppressed slave his natural and God-given rights. I believe that the black man has certain inalienable rights, which are as sacred in the sight of Heaven as those of any other race. I believe he has a right to live, and live in a state of freedom. He has a right to breathe the free air and enjoy God's free sunshine. He has a right to till the soil, to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, and enjoy the rewards of his own labor. He has a right to the endearments and enjoyment of family ties; and no white man has any right to rob him of or infringe upon any of these blessings.

I am in favor of the adoption of this amendment to the Constitution for the sake of the seven millions of poor white people who live in the slave States but who have ever been deprived of the blessings of manhood by reason of this thrice-accursed institution of slavery. Slavery has kept them in ignorance, in poverty, and in degradation. Abolish slavery, and school-houses will rise upon the ruins of the slave mart, intelligence will take the place of ignorance, wealth of poverty, and honor of degradation; industry will go hand in hand with virtue, and prosperity with happiness, and a disinherited and regenerated people will rise up and bless you and be an honor to the American Republic.

Slavery has shed every drop of blood which has been spilled in this war. It has filled thousands of graves with our heroic dead. It has filled our hospitals with our shattered heroes. It has swept American commerce from the ocean. It has carried desolation and mourning to the hearthstones of our northern homes from Maine to California; consequently I am the unyielding and persistent enemy of slavery and the earnest supporter of any and all lawful measures for its speedy and effectual extinction. It is this demon of slavery which has called from their happy homes in Illinois one hundred and seventy-five thousand of her sons as brave and heroic as ever the sun shone upon. Donelson, Shiloh, Arkansas Post, Vicksburg, and many other well-fought fields attest their devotion to liberty and Union. Their self-sacrificing heroism to maintain the honor and glory of the Republic has won for them a fame more enduring than granite and a place in the hearts of their countrymen so long as liberty shall be loved and justice respected.

I wish we could emulate the example of the soldiers. The Democrat and the Republican have gone together, side by side, fighting these great battles for liberty and Union. They have allowed no former political differences to divide them, or to weaken their devotion to the cause. They have fought side by side. If the Democrat falls in battle the Republican gathers him in his arms, composes his limbs in death, hollows out a little place in the earth, and therein deposits his heroic and sacred remains; he covers him tenderly with the earth; he marks the spot where he lies, that you may know a hero sleeps there; he drops a tear upon the grave, and rushes again into the thickest of the fight. If the Republican falls, his Democratic comrade extends to him the same sacred charity, forgets that he was a Republican, and only remembers that he was a heroic soldier of the Union. Why cannot we, far from the roar of the battle, secure in the enjoyments of peace—secured only by the heroism and devotion of the Army—forget that we ever have been partisans, and unite, with heart and hand, for the suppression of the rebellion and the establishment of "Liberty and Union, one and inseparable?"

Mr. Speaker, I have already occupied too much time. There is a great deal more that I would like to say, but I must forbear. I implore the House to adopt this resolution. I implore it to stand by the Army and the country and the war policy of the Administration, and the day is not far distant when we may rejoice in the glorious consummation of the eternal principles of liberty, truth, and justice. There shall be no more slavery and no more oppression, no more tyranny and no more injustice, and our voices may go up together in one grand diapason which will ascend to heaven over a country reunited, over a people disinherited, and God will bless us.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. The joint resolutions under consideration, Mr. Speaker, propose to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to prevent the existence of slavery in any of the States. Sir, I cannot favor this amendment with my vote, for many reasons:

1. The time proposed for the agitation of this question is most inopportune. Our country is rent by the throes of civil strife, and the Constitution that you seek to amend by these resolutions is being tested by the intense fires of rebellion. Under such circumstances it is unwise to make any alteration whatever. It is doing a double injury to that sacred instrument, being, in my judgment, wrong in point of time as well as impolitic and entirely unnecessary. In fact, sir, I am convinced that the occasion does not now, nor is it likely to, occur that will justify any amendment of the kind proposed.

2. It in substance says to the people of the seceded States that we never will live on terms of peace within the Union so long as slavery has any existence among them, and to this extent prevents any restoration of the Union or reënforcement of the Constitution within their territory, except after subjugation and annihilation shall have been fully accomplished with all its dire, bloody, and barbarous accompaniments.

3. It tends to that which at this time our people have most to fear, a centralization of power and a consolidated Government. It strikes at the root of all State institutions, overturns and sets at naught all local laws, and while it throws away every hope of reconciliation, either now or in the future, it at the same moment looks to the enslavement of the white citizens of the country.

Sir, if this is the beginning of a radical change in our Constitution, is it not the forerunner of other usurpations of a like nature with those that the Executive of this Government has from time to time resorted to, setting aside the laws and the Constitution, and the rights of individuals and States guaranteed by them? This change once commenced will not stop, but go on from usurpation to usurpation, until individuals and States are swallowed up in a common ruin. The President and those who surround him have so far ignored all law and rights that we may next expect to see introduced in this body amendments permanently striking out the writ of habeas corpus. Then will follow the erasure of the second section of article four of the Constitution, third clause:

"No person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due."

Which you have practically done already. Following in the wake of the extinction of this chartered right will be the destruction of a free press, to be placed under the absolute control and dictation of an Executive, perhaps an ambitious one, and allowed only to publish such matter as shall meet the approving caprice of his excellency or some of his agents who shall be assigned to this degrading duty. Then, sir, the right of free speech, freedom of conscience, and trial by jury will be demanded to complete the holocaust on the altar of a despotism as ruthless as it is unrelenting. This fearful sacrifice of our liberties will be interspersed at will by the agreeable pastime of stealing property, gobbling up Legislatures, men thrown in and let out of prison, being neither informed why they were put in or why they were let out, and redress denied for wrongs inflicted. This you have tried to do by the act of March 3, 1863, section four, which makes the order of the President a good defense against such arrests, to wit:

"That any order of the President, or under his authority, made at any time during the existence of the present rebellion, shall be a defense in all courts to any action or prosecution, civil or criminal, pending, or to be commenced, for any search, seizure, arrest, or imprisonment, made, done, or committed, or acts omitted to be done, under and by virtue of such order, or under color of any law of Congress, and such defense may be made by special plea or under the general issue."

This section the party in power were quite aware the Supreme Court would declare unconstitutional, and to remedy that you have passed the seventh section, limiting the time in which suit must be instituted to two years. This you could do, this you did do, but was it right or just thus to act?

A most remarkable similarity exists in the acts of this Administration toward the people of the North and those that were perpetrated by the mother country against the colonies, and which called forth from those colonies and now these States such able, persevering, and just appeals for redress. These like acts in a great measure produced the Revolution, whereby the mother country lost the colonies. Some may think I speak without the record. To it I appeal.

In the first Continental Congress, in an address containing a declaration of rights, it was held that seizing or attempting to seize any American in order to transport him over the seas for trial was a violation of the rights and privileges of the colonies. Does not this Administration almost daily transport citizens from State to State, from fort to fort without any legal procedure whatever? It broke up and dispersed or imprisoned the Legislature of Maryland. Parliament in like manner in 1767 suspended the functions of the New York Assembly. My friends from Illinois have the misfortune to have a Governor at this time who assumed a like despotic prerogative. In 1765 the stamp act was passed; and if you examine it you will find the same interference with the right of trial by jury through an admiralty jurisdiction, transferring decisions of the law and trials of persons from the colonial courts, where it of right belonged, to the admiralty courts of England, presided over by the pets of the Crown; and, sir, now, in 1864, the right of trial by jury is interrupted by military power, in each case the result being alike. The Gazetteer of that day tells us that one Captain McDougal was arrested in New York because he saw fit to speak freely his opinions. How many hundreds of such cases have occurred since this Administration came into power? This was one of the grievances complained of by the colonies, and redress being refused they fell back upon their inalienable right of life with liberty if life at all.

In 1774 town meetings were interdicted by act of Parliament. What have gentlemen from Kentucky to say as to the same despotic proceeding in their own sovereign State? Her recent history shows that without even the flimsy pretext of an unconstitutional enactment, similar, ay, worse, interferences have taken place with the freedom of speech. Public meetings in my own district have been interrupted under the quasi approval of the police, and would have been broken up but for the grit of those who composed the assembly. Sir, I am one of those who obey the laws. I never did and never will counsel or countenance any resistance thereto, but when the right of the people to assemble peaceably and discuss their grievances is trampled down by unconstitutional enactments or the illegal and unwarranted exercise of military force, then, then, sir, I would say to the people:

"Think through whom your life-blood tracks its parent course,
And then—strike home!"

The suspension of newspapers occurred at the same early period that marked the interference with public meetings by the minions of the British Crown. In our own day, side by side with the breaking up of public assemblages, goes the invasion of newspaper offices and the suppression of their publication. Is not the parallel complete?

Mr. Speaker, I cling to the States as a shipwrecked man clings to the plank. They gave the Constitution birth. We lived under it happily, cheerfully, and prosperously up to the advent of this Administration. I believe a change of the Administration will again make us united, happy, and prosperous. I look to its approach with a hope full of promise. I will hail it as a glad return from the decaying era of the Roman republic, when spies, informers, and a despotic military power prevailed against civil liberty, and made her the "lone mother of dead empires." But if the great conservative party of the country is beaten in the coming presidential campaign I see no hope, unless a power mightier than man's so rules the heart and judgment of the Executive as to cause him to acknowledge his errors, correct them, and by carrying out the principles enunciated in his inaugural entitle himself to the good opinion of all who love truth and constitutional liberty. If this unlooked-for change should occur, such another exhibition will be witnessed as took place in Congress in April, 1861, when the nation, through her representatives, spoke almost as one man in favor of crushing the rebellion, yet maintaining, "unimpaired, the rights of the States."

Sir, there is a fixed and growing belief in the public mind that the conduct of this Administration is not what it should be; hence, I in all sincerity desire a change such as will reestablish confidence among the people, and thus strengthen the capacity of the North to restore the Union, and preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution and the laws enacted under its provisions. Let us get rid of all laws extracted through imaginary implications of that instrument. Let the Administration walk up to the line of policy and principle upon which a large majority of the people agree, stand firmly and immovably there, and I will predict no failure in the success of our efforts to bring about amity among the now parted States. This feeling was shown at the period to which I have alluded through the channel of volunteering, whereas now, under the changed policy of the Administration, drafting has failed and volunteering is of the past. Universal conscription comes next. The beginning of the war found a united North and a divided South in sentiment and action. How is it to-day? Under the inroads upon the Constitution by those in power we find the South united, and the North, to a great extent, almost equally divided.

Sir, I maintain that the only mode in which the Union can be restored and put on the march of a newer and more glorious progress, is by having due regard to the mutual advantages and interests of the States. This will rest our liberties on a solid basis. This cannot be done by laying waste their lands, or by carrying off their property, or by endeavoring to make the African that which God did not intend—the physical, mental, and social equal of the white man. Nor can it be done by tinkering with the Constitution as is now proposed. Let the Constitution alone. It is good enough. Under it we grew in power and dignity until the civilized world were compelled to admit the "capacity of man for self-government." Let the old constitutional tree stand in all its fullness and beauty, not a leaf withered and dropping, not a bough dead and lopped off; let it stand, and under its refreshing shade, beneath its green branches, there will yet repose a united, happy, and prosperous people.

The heart of the nation has been wonderfully stirred by the following words of an American poet, so that they have passed into household language:

"Woodman, spare that tree!
Touch not a single bough;
In youth it sheltered me,
And I'll protect it now."

Paraphrasing these touching words, I to-day invoke this House to protect the Constitution of our fathers.

Mr. ROLLINS, of Missouri, next addressed the House. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire, before proceeding with any remarks upon this joint resolution, to submit an amendment.

The SPEAKER. One amendment is pending offered yesterday by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WHEELER.]

Mr. PENDLETON. Is not an amendment to the amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. If it is germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. PENDLETON. What I propose is to strike out that portion of the bill which submits the amendment of the Constitution to the Legislatures of the several States, and to insert a provision submitting it to the conventions of the several States, so that the ratification, if at all, shall be by conventions of three fourths of the States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can only introduce his amendment to accomplish that purpose by moving a substitute for the entire resolution.

Mr. PENDLETON. I offer my amendment, then, in the shape of a substitute.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. PENDLETON. I will.

Mr. ARNOLD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether with that amendment he will vote for the resolution?

Mr. PENDLETON. I will not. There is no difficulty in answering that question; but I desire, if gentlemen intend to submit a proposition of this kind to the States for ratification, that they shall submit it to conventions which are elected for the sole purpose of passing on it, and not to Legislatures already elected upon other and different issues.

Mr. Speaker, I approach the discussion of this question with great diffidence. I believe in the constant progress of political science, and I am willing always to yield to its just demands. I believe in the constant amelioration of the condition of the human race, and I am anxious in every position in social or political, in private or public life, to aid in every movement toward that result. I believe in the constant development of the human intellect; and I think it our bounden duty to apply its maturing powers to the ever-varying condition of affairs which the ages in their course evolve. I revere the wisdom and the virtue of the good men who have gone before us; but I am unwilling blindly to believe that either their principles or their actions have attained to absolute perfection. I regard their achievements as the landmarks by which our course ought to be directed, not as barriers by which our progress should be stayed.

But, sir, I am profoundly convinced that wise men will not lightly touch the organic law of a Government which has held its beneficent sway over thirty million people, and that their hesitation will be akin to solemn dread when that Government by the sparing exercise of extremely limited powers has been able to maintain social order without retarding an unparalleled development of material prosperity in the midst of the enjoyment of civil and personal liberty unequalled in the history of the world. This Constitution has existed for seventy-five years; for sixty its provisions have been unchanged. Three times only has the hand of change touched it: once when, in obedience to the requirements of the conventions which ratified it, the First Congress proposed amendments to the States; again in 1794, when the Third Congress proposed an amendment to limit the power of the Federal judiciary; and again after the struggle for the Presidency in 1801, when it became necessary to change the mode of electing the President and Vice President. It is worthy of attention that not one of these amendments added to the powers which were delegated to the United States, and not one of them added to the powers which were prohibited to the States. All of them except the last, in reference to the election of President and Vice President, were guarantees of the personal liberty of the citizen, or declarations of the inviolability of the reserved rights of the States.

Sir, these sixty years have been eventful in the life of the nation. Three million people have become thirty million. Our western boundary, then hidden in the almost unknown valley of the Mississippi, now touches the Pacific, whose laughing waves reflect the gems which sparkle on the golden shore. France, Spain, Mexico on the south and Great Britain on the north have added to the extent of this magnificent domain. We have had wars upon the sea and wars upon the land. We have had wars of invasion, and have repelled the invader. We have had foreign wars, and have tasted the triumphs of conquest. We have had struggles for the emoluments of office; we have had struggles for the political powers of the Government; we have had partisan strife; we have had sectional strife; and this Constitution was sufficient for all of these things.

But a change has come over us. New principles have been asserted. A new party has come into power, and that party, in the first term of its administration, in the midst of the civil war which was coincident with its attainment of power, when a million and a half of men with serried ranks and glittering bayonets invoke the arbitrament of the sword, calls upon us to change in a vital point this Constitution.

I object to this action for many reasons. I object to it because the time is not auspicious. I know full well that in the excitements of war, when all the elements of mind and matter are brought into conflict, we attain in a moment, as it were, to results which the experience of an age of peaceful life would not develop. But, sir, these are times for inventing and not for perfecting. They are times for experimenting and not for the full maturing of plans. They are times in which to try expedients. But it requires the self-possession, the deliberation, the freedom from excitement which belong to times of peace to lay securely and justly and wisely the foundations of a permanent free Government.

In 1861, before a drop of blood was shed, before an army was put into the field, before excitement was rife, before exacerbation had sprung up, an eminent statesman then in the Senate, now in the Cabinet, spoke on this subject. His theme was the perils which environed the Union, and the true method of avoiding them. All eyes were directed to him, all ears were intent to hear him. The country stood silent to catch the word of hope. Gentlemen who were here at that time will remember how this House was deserted in order that we might hear from Mr. Seward, in the Senate, his remedy for the evils and his plans to allay the excitements of that hour. He concluded his speech with the remark which I desire to commend to my friends on the opposite side of this Chamber:

"But if the measure were practicable I should prefer a different course, namely, when the eccentric movements of secession and disunion shall have ended, in whatever form that end may come, and the angry excitements of the hour shall have subsided, and calmness shall have once more resumed its accustomed sway over the public mind, then, and not till then—one, two, three years hence—I would cheerfully advise a convention of the people, to be assembled in pursuance of the Constitution, to consider and decide whether any and what amendments of the national organic law ought to be made."

I confide the weight of the objection I first make to the passage of this resolution to the wisdom and soundness of the views expressed at that time by that Senator.

Mr. Speaker, I object to the passage of this resolution for this simple reason, that it is impossible that the amendment proposed should be ratified without a fraudulent use—I select the term advisedly—without a fraudulent use of the power to admit new States or a fraudulent use of the military power of the Federal Government in the seceded States.

There are thirty-five States. Twenty-seven are necessary to ratify this amendment. There are nineteen free States. Suppose you get them all, where do you get the others? Count also Maryland, Missouri, West Virginia, even Delaware, if you please, and you have but twenty-three. Where are the other four? Gentlemen tell me they have provided for the admission of Colorado, Montana, and Nevada. This addition to the number of States increases to the same extent the number necessary for the ratification. If you get them all, four are still wanting. If you intend to make up this number by the addition of new States you will have to add sixteen; three fourths of which, twelve, will be the proper proportion for the number added, and the remaining four to make up the deficiency among the old States. Are gentlemen prepared to carve sixteen new States out of this territory in the West for this purpose?

Will gentlemen call on the southern States to furnish the requisite number? Does any man suppose that Kentucky, if left to her unbiased choice, will ratify this amendment? Will you call on Tennessee? Tennessee is to-day in possession of a military governor, and not represented in either House of Congress. Arkansas? Arkansas begs to-day that you will recognize her as a State and admit her Senator. And he cannot be admitted. Louisiana? General Banks is again its military governor. He is already ashamed of the force which was enacted there a short time since, and is about to get rid of the pretense of a government which a little while ago he set up in the person of our quondam colleague, Michael Hahn. South Carolina? Is she to be called upon? Why, sir, the possession of Hilton Head did not give hold upon that State enough to secure the admission of delegates to the Baltimore convention.

If these States are to vote in their present condition, it would be a broad farce if it were not a wicked fraud.

If they are to be reorganized under the proclamation of the President, or under an act of Congress, upon the basis of one tenth of the population, it must be effected through the exercise of military power and by the votes of the dependents and hangers-on and contractors and cormorants who follow an army, and if you should attempt to amend the Constitution by such means, what binding obligation would it have? What binding obligation ought it to have? Do you suppose the States now in secession, with arms in their hands, and where you have hardly a foothold, would ever submit to it? Do you really propose to establish over them by force of arms a Constitution which you have just changed by force of arms?

If that is your purpose, I warn you now that you will destroy the last lingering hope, faint, small as it now is, that you will ever be able to restore this Union, or even to maintain the jurisdiction of the Federal Government over those States.

But, sir, I object to the passage of this resolution because in my judgment this amendment, or this change—I will not call it an amendment—of the Constitution is not within the power conferred by the Constitution. The arguments which my friend from Kentucky [Mr. MALLORY] and my friend from Indiana [Mr. EDGERTON] have made upon that subject relieve me from the necessity of dwelling long upon it. I know what the language of the Constitution is. I desire to ask gentlemen opposite, and I address my question particularly to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] who spoke this morning, whether they contend that three fourths of the States can make any and every change of this Constitution. The gentleman said this morning that they can change the number of Representatives here in the Federal Congress. I grant it. He said that they could change the length of tenure of the presidential office. I grant it.

Mr. STROUSE. What gentleman from Pennsylvania made those assertions? To whom does the gentleman refer?

Mr. PENDLETON. I refer to the gentleman's colleague over the way, [Mr. THAYER,] who spoke this morning. But is it competent under the Constitution for three fourths of the States to change the Government into a hereditary monarchy; to abolish the Senate and House of Representatives, and convert this Government into an autocracy? It certainly is not. That would be revolution, not amendment. The States cannot, under the pretense of amending the Constitution, subvert the structure, spirit, and theory of this Government.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, JUNE 17, 1864.

NEW SERIES....No. 188.

Mr. THAYER. Does the gentleman expect me to answer his question now?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. THAYER. I say distinctly that it is in the power of the people of this country to erect any Government that the people may choose. I will say, further, that the weakness of an argument is often shown by putting an extreme case like that which the gentleman puts, and which is scarcely within the range of human probability.

Mr. PENDLETON. It is not a question of human probability. The question is whether the power exists under the Constitution to do it.

Mr. THAYER. In answer to that I will say that the powers of the people under the Constitution are unlimited except in the case of the particulars in which by the Constitution they are limited.

Mr. PENDLETON. That is a different proposition. The gentleman thinks that there is power under the pretense of amending the Constitution to revolutionize it. He thinks it competent to change this Government into a monarchy or into an oligarchy; to change it not by the mere force of arms under the rights of revolution, but under this written Constitution. He believes that one fourth of the States are bound hand and foot, and must submit to anything that the other three fourths attempt to impose upon them.

Mr. THAYER. I think it competent for a majority of the people of this country to determine what shall be the character of the institutions of the country.

Mr. PENDLETON. Do you think it competent for a majority to do it under the provisions of the Constitution?

Mr. THAYER. I do.

Mr. PENDLETON. Then why is it that three fourths of the States are required to ratify the amendment of the Constitution? Why not simply require a majority of all the people of the States?

Mr. THAYER. Because three fourths of the States is the constitutional majority which it requires to accomplish it. When I speak of a majority I mean, of course, a constitutional majority.

Mr. PENDLETON. Exactly. That is the Constitution. And therefore it is not competent for a majority of the people, under the Constitution, to change this Government as they see fit.

Mr. THAYER. When I spoke of a majority, I meant a constitutional majority.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I beg the gentleman from Ohio to indulge me for a single question.

Mr. PENDLETON. For only a single one.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I wish to know whether, under the doctrine of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. THAYER,] three fourths of the States could compel all the States to have slavery.

Mr. PENDLETON. I yield for a moment that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may say "yes" or "no" to that proposition.

Mr. THAYER. I believe that under the Constitution three fourths of the States might legalize it in all the States; and allow me to add that in saying that I stand by that Constitution which gentlemen on that side of the House make a great show of upholding until there is a practical question presented under it for our action, when they oppose its plain provisions.

Mr. PENDLETON. I agree to no such doctrine. I repudiate it entirely. There is in three fourths of the States neither the power to establish nor to abolish slavery in all the States. The gentleman says I put an improbable case. I admit it. I did so purposely. I desired to test the extent of the constitutional power. I desired to show that the power was to amend, not to revolutionize, not to subvert the form and spirit and theory of the Government. The Federal Government has power over the relations of the States with foreign nations, and the relations of the States as between and among themselves. It has no power over the purely internal affairs of the State. This principle was as familiar as household words three years ago. Every power delegated to the Federal Government relates either to the international or the inter-State relations of the United States. Every power prohibited to the States affects the same relations, and them only. The domestic internal affairs of a State, having no connection with the Federal Government, or with foreign nations, or with the other States, are reserved to the absolute, exclusive sovereign power of the States respectively, and to the people thereof. The other States are not affected by them, and have no interest in them. The Federal Government has no cognizance of them. The power of amendment which is confided to three fourths of the States does not reach them, nor the power to regulate them, but is limited to the subjects and powers delegated to the United States. It is not competent, in my judgment, for three fourths of the States to abolish that provision of the Constitution by which no new State shall be formed within the jurisdiction of any other State, nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States, without the consent of the Legislatures, and give to the Congress the power to subdivide or unite the States; nor is it competent for three fourths of the States to amend the Constitution so as to give to the Federal Government the power to appoint the Governors of the States, nor to prescribe the qualifications of electors in the State, nor the number or qualifications of the members of its Legislature, nor to amend the constitution of the State. Three fourths of the States might change the war-making power, or the power to regulate commerce, or the power to make treaties. Three fourths of the States may abolish the three-fifths rule of representation, or the provision for the rendition of fugitive slaves, or the rule for imposing direct taxes. All these amendments may be made, because they relate to inter-State affairs. They relate to the connections of the States as between themselves, or as between the States and foreign nations. But neither three fourths of the States, nor all the States save one, can abolish slavery in that dissenting State, because it lies within the domain reserved entirely to each State for itself, and upon it the other States cannot enter.

I have said nothing about the purposes sought to be accomplished by this amendment. I do not intend to. If the institution of slavery were all that gentlemen in this debate have declared it to be, if its abolition were as desirable as they assert, I, for one, would still not yield the position which I have taken. I would deny the power of the States to touch it outside their own limits, and I find my satisfaction in the fact that the people of the States themselves could and doubtless would correct the evil. But if this amendment were within the constitutional power of amendment; if this were a proper time to consider it; if three fourths of the States were willing to ratify it; and if it did not require the fraudulent use of power either in this House or in the executive department to secure its adoption, I would still resist the passage of this resolution. It is another step toward consolidation, and consolidation is despotism; confederation is liberty.

I believe, sir, in the doctrine of State rights. I know it is fashionable to-day to denounce it. I know that regard for it has been diminished in the public mind; and I know also that in the same degree has love of union waned, and want of harmony among the States increased.

The colonies were originally independent of each other. Their only connection was through the British Crown. New York was as independent of Virginia as of India; Massachusetts was as independent of Pennsylvania as of New Zealand. At times, when threatened with an Indian war, or pressed by some other common danger, they took counsel together, and asked for their common protection. In early times the New England colonies formed a league, but it was finally dissolved in 1688. In 1754 war with France was imminent, and delegates from the colonies met at Albany. The convention was held under the auspices of the British Government. The delegates unanimously declared in favor of a Federal Union, and adopted a scheme of confederation prepared by Franklin. It was disapproved by the mother Government and by every provincial Assembly. The encroachments of the Crown roused the colonies again to the necessity of union. In 1774 they sent delegates to Philadelphia. They were sent for consultation and advice. They exhausted their power in doing that. Their successors met in 1775. It was the revolutionary Congress. It was that Congress whose State papers Lord Chatham declared to be unsurpassed in the history of diplomacy. Their authority was to take counsel; their legislation was recommendation. They sat for a year, and then they declared that the united colonies were free and independent States—not a State—but each a free and independent State; and to maintain this declaration they pledged each to the other "their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor." This declaration converted colonies into independent States, whose sole relation to each other would thenceforth depend upon their own will.

On the same day the Articles of Confederation were proposed. They were adopted by the first State in July, 1778, by the last in 1781. We have been told lately by one high in authority that the States were never out of the Union. What was their condition between July, 1776, and July, 1778? They were independent States cooperating, acting in unison, uniting their armies for their common defense. There were no defined relations, no fixed duties, no prescribed obligations. There was no treaty, no compact, no contract; some of them were ready to enter into confederation, some had authorized their delegates to agree to and sign articles. But this had not been done, and until it was done the cooperation was purely voluntary, and each State was the sole judge of the extent and character of its cooperation. The pressure of war ceased. The Articles of Confederation were disregarded; the Union was fast going to pieces; the Convention which framed the Constitution met. The student of political history will find much to interest him. The men of this day would find food for reflection in the history of parties and of men in that Convention. Randolph and Madison of Virginia, Pinckney of South Carolina, scarcely less than Hamilton, were advocates of a strong consolidated Government. Oppressed by a sense of the insufficiency of the power of the Confederation of which they each had large experience, they sought a remedy in centralization. They were citizens of large States, and large States were safe by reason of their numbers and wealth. The delegates from the small States were opposed to consolidation. New Hampshire, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware were the friends of confederation. I have not time to trace the action of the Convention. I will content myself with one or two particulars as illustrations of the spirit of the members and of the conclusions which were attained.

Mr. Hamilton proposed that the Governors of the States should be appointed by the General Government. Mr. Pinckney declared himself warmly in favor of this plan, and desired in addition to give the Governor a control over State laws. It met apparently with little favor, however, and was not pressed.

The power of the national Legislature to negative the laws of the States elicited much discussion. Mr. Randolph proposed that the power should extend to all laws "contravening, in the opinion of the national Legislature, the articles of Union or any treaty subsisting under the authority of the Union." Mr. Charles Pinckney proposed that it should extend to "revise the laws of the several States that may be supposed to infringe the powers exclusively delegated by the Constitution to Congress, and to negative and annul such as do." Mr. Charles Cotesworth Pinckney moved "that the national Legislature should have authority to negative all laws which they should judge to be improper." Mr. Madison seconded the motion. "He could not but regard an indefinite power to negative legislative acts of the States as absolutely necessary to a perfect system." The debate was warm. Mr. Pinckney's motion was rejected, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Virginia only voting for it. And the proposition of Mr. Randolph was also rejected, Massachusetts and Virginia alone voting for it. (Madison Papers, 732, 735, 1116.) It was in this debate that Mr. Madison said:

"Should no such precaution be taken the only remedy would be an appeal to coercion. Was such a remedy eligible? Was it practicable? Could the national resources, if exerted to the utmost, enforce a national decree against Massachusetts, abetted, perhaps, by several of her neighbors? It would not be possible. Any government for the United States formed on the supposed practicability of using force against the unconstitutional proceedings of the States would prove as visionary as the government of Congress."—Madison Papers, 822.

And on the question whether any negative of any kind on State laws should be given, the vote stood: New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, in favor of, and Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, against it. (Madison Papers, 1412.)

The rule of suffrage in the national Legislature was so difficult of adjustment as to jeopard the continuance of the Convention. The contest was between those who insisted on an equality of votes as in the Confederation and those who desired to apportion the votes according to numbers or otherwise. The large States—Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Virginia, South Carolina—voted steadily for an inequality of vote. This rule for the first branch was readily adopted, New Jersey and Delaware alone dissenting. And upon the question of applying the same rule to the Senate, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, voted for it. (Madison Papers, 843.)

An accommodation was finally effected between the parties by giving to each State representation in the House according to population, and in the Senate an equal representation; and against this adjustment Pennsylvania, Virginia, South Carolina, and Georgia voted to the last; Massachusetts divided. (Madison Papers, 1107.)

I have not time to discuss the various views put forward in relation to the various modes of electing the President, nor to show the position of the States and the delegates on that point. The same general spirit pervaded the discussion, and the votes were determined generally by the desire or the fear of a strong consolidated government.

The Constitution was adopted. It was submitted to the States for ratification.

Madison and Hamilton, both members of the Convention, both disappointed by the defeat of some of their favorite provisions, both anxious for a stronger national Government, and for the subordination if not the destruction of the State governments, understood well the intention of the Convention and the meaning of the Constitution. They urged its ratification in the Federalist.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has spoken of "the pestilent doctrine of State rights;" and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BALDWIN] has said "State sovereignty never was anything more than a dream of theorists." I confront them with Hamilton:

"The State governments, by their original constitutions, are invested with complete sovereignty."

"An entire consolidation of the States into one complete national sovereignty would imply an entire subordination of the parts; and whatever powers might remain in them would be altogether dependent on the general will. But as the plan of the Convention aims only at a partial union or consolidation, the State governments would clearly retain all the rights of sovereignty which they before had, and which were not by that act exclusively delegated to the United States." * * * "The rule that all the authorities of which the States are not explicitly divested in favor of the Union remain with them in full vigor, is not only a theoretical consequence of that division, (i. e., of sovereign power), but is clearly admitted by the whole tenor of the instrument which contains the articles of the proposed Constitution."—Federalist, Nos. 31, 32.

I confront them with Madison:

"In this relation, then, the proposed Government cannot be considered a national one, since its jurisdiction extends to certain enumerated articles only, and leaves to the several States a residuary and inviolable sovereignty over all other objects."—Federalist, No. 39.

My colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] says, "The States have no flag, have no army, cannot declare war, cannot make peace; how then can they be sovereign?" Sovereign power can forbear the exercise of any attribute; can delegate its exercise to another. It requires an act of sovereign power to delegate these powers of declaring war and making peace. But if the gentleman denies the sovereign power of the States because they have agreed to delegate certain powers to the Federal Government, upon what ground will he claim sovereignty for the Federal Government, whose powers are all delegated, and which cannot now and never could provide a tribunal or a law by which the citizen of a State may recover from a citizen of the same State the amount of a simple promissory note?

The Constitution was adopted by the States, not by the people as a nation, nor yet by the people of the States, but by the States themselves:

"Each State in ratifying the Constitution is considered as a sovereign body, independent of all others, and only to be bound by its own voluntary act."—Madison Papers, No. 39.

The States ratified the Constitution, and the citizens of each State owed obedience to it by reason of the ratification by that State. Their allegiance to it was through their State, given by its command, transferred by its act. The State of Massachusetts adopted the Federal Constitution; by that act that State became a member of the Federal Union; and in this wise, and this alone, the citizens of Massachusetts were compelled, were entitled, to recognize its authority. If Massachusetts had rejected the Constitution, its citizens would have owed no obedience to, would have had no interest in, would have been entitled to no protection from the Federal Government. Rhode Island did not ratify the Constitution till May, 1790, one year after the inauguration of the new Government. What was her condition in the interval? The old Confederation had been entirely dissolved. She had not become a member of the new one. Was she not then an independent, sovereign State? Was she not a "State out of the Union?"

The discussions during this period had caused a searching investigation of the nature of the Federal Government. Its character as a national Government had been asserted. The powers and rights of the States had been questioned. The ratifying conventions demanded that all uncertainty on this point should be dispelled. The First Congress proposed and within six months nine States adopted the amendment to the Constitution, that "All powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

The pure character, the spotless patriotism, the unflinching firmness of Washington sufficed to delay the struggle between confederation and consolidation in the early administration of the new Government. It came in the days of John Adams. The alien and sedition laws were the occasion. The States of Virginia and Kentucky declared their fixed opinion and purpose. Other States responded; the struggle was severe, but its termination gave possession of the administration for twenty-four years to Jefferson and Madison and Monroe, and that party which adhered to the declaration of principles contained in the Resolutions of 1798 and 1799. They declare that the powers of the Federal Government result "from the compact to which the States are parties;" that they are "limited by the plain sense and intention of the instrument constituting that compact;" that they "are no further valid than they are authorized by the grants enumerated in that compact;" and that in case of a deliberate, palpable, and dangerous exercise of other powers not granted by the said compact, the States who are parties thereto have the right and are in duty bound to interpose for arresting the progress of the evil, and for maintaining within their respective limits the authorities, rights, and liberties appertaining to them."

Mr. Speaker, I have entered into this historical examination not for the purpose of insisting upon the use of mere names, or of discussing any questions which are just now rather speculative than practical. They all find their solution in the logical deductions from these premises. I desired rather to assert the true theory and nature of the Government in order to solve this pending question. I have desired to maintain that the States are sovereign; that their powers are inherent; that they comprise the undelegated mass; that the Federal Government is their agent, derives all its powers from them, exercises its powers in their name; that its duties are few and defined, and its powers are few and simple, sometimes exclusive and far-reaching, but always limited to the grants declared in the Constitution. I have done this in order that I might bring vividly to the mind of each gentleman here that this Government was designed to be a confederation of States, not a consolidated empire, and to beg them, amidst the temptations of these evil days, to adhere to the wise design of its original formation.

The experience of seventy-five years has confirmed the wisdom of the fathers. The States administering their own internal affairs, the Federal Government regulating their international and inter-State relations, have each fulfilled their respective duties and exercised in harmony their respective powers. We have had peace and prosperity; we have had liberty and social order; we have had variety of institutions in the parts, and unity and vigor in the whole; we have solved the problem of large confederations; we have reconciled the liberty of the citizen with the expansion of empire; individuals have been free; communities have been self-governing; minorities have been protected. The theory of State sovereignty, the theory of State rights, has done this. I beg gentlemen not to depart from it. I beg them not to be seduced into the idea that we can be more free or more prosperous or more happy by breaking down the States and substituting for their just influence the unbridled will of a majority of the whole people. We do not need uniformity of institutions. Their very variety develops the good in all. Organized communities, with all the powers of well-ordered and settled State governments, are the best security for the personal liberties and material interests of all the people. We of the Northwest will have little to fear if you insist upon a change. Our country, rich in all the products of a fruitful soil, is prolific of men. If the rule of a consolidated majority is to prevail, we can from our northern prairies send down a countless host under whose mighty tread the institutions of pigmy States and small communities will be trampled in the dust. Illinois has more voters than New Hampshire, Vermont, and Connecticut. Ohio has more voters than Maine, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island. Teach them that power resides in numbers alone; teach them that the institutions of the States are not sacred from their touch: while they attack the institution of slavery to-day you may smile, but to-morrow you will tremble when your religion, your manufactures, your capital are wrested from your control and subjected to their will. You have no safety but in the maintenance of your State governments, no security for your liberty, your property, your prosperity but in the protection of the rights of minorities under the power of firm, well-established communities.

We have gone too far toward consolidation already. Federal power is encroaching on the States. The Executive is displacing the Legislature; the rights of individuals are not safe; the rights of minorities are not respected; power is raising itself above law, above Constitution, and putting the safeguards of liberty and the guarantees of good government beneath his feet. This House declares that it cannot look with satisfaction upon the establishment of an Austrian empire upon the ruins of a Mexican republic, and thereupon the President makes haste humbly to tell the Emperor of the French that although the House expresses the unanimous sentiment of our people, he governs the foreign affairs of the country, and that he will defy that sentiment in his action. Arguelles seeks asylum in New York. He is demanded as a slave-trader by the Cuban authorities, and the President and the Secretary of State, without treaty, without law, without judicial investigation, in violation of the rights of New York, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, command that he be secretly kidnapped in the night, and that to avoid a habeas corpus he be hidden away till the vessel sails for Cuba. We must retrace our steps; we must return to State rights. They are the conservators of liberty; they are the conservators of Union; and the first step of that return should be now and here, in our firm resolve to remit to the States, where the Constitution left it, the whole subject of domestic slavery.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STILES. I move that the gentleman have leave to proceed for ten minutes.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire permission of the House to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. Mr. PENDLETON. I shall be very happy to answer any question my colleague will ask, if the House will permit it.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to submit this suggestion to the House.

Mr. KALBFLEISCH. I object.

Mr. WILSON. Well, sir, I move that the time fixed for taking a recess be extended till this resolution has been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

The motion was agreed to.

The question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. WHEELER,

Mr. GANSON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The substitute proposed by Mr. PENDLETON was disagreed to.

The joint resolution was then ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays upon the passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 93, nays 65, not voting 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Bailly, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Daves, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Griswold, Hale, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Littlejohn, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perlman, Pike, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Scheuck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smith, Smithers, Spaulding, Starr, Stevens, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—93.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Ancona, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, Bliss, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chanler, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Harding, Harrington, Herrick, Holman, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, King, Law, Lazenby, Le Blond, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McAllister, McDowell, McKinney, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, Noble, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scott, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Srouse, Stuart, Sweet, Wadsworth, Ward, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, and Fernando Wood—65.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William G. Brown, Clay, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dumont, Grinnell, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Knapp, McBride, Middleton, Nelson, Perry, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Edward H. Rollins, Stebbins, Voorhees, William B. Washburn, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—23.

So the joint resolution was not passed, two thirds not having voted in favor thereof.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. WEBSTER stated that his colleague, Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, was detained from the House by illness, and was paired with Mr. KNAPP, also detained by illness. Mr. DAVIS would have voted in the affirmative and Mr. KNAPP in the negative.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, stated that his colleague, Mr. DAVIS, had paired with Mr. WINFIELD.

Mr. COX stated that Mr. VOORHEES had paired with Mr. ROLLINS, of New Hampshire.

Mr. McBRIDE stated that he had paired with Mr. HALL, otherwise he would have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. ASHLEY changed his vote from the affirmative to the negative, for the purpose of submitting at the proper time the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I, when very busy, was requested by Mr. GRINNELL, of Iowa, to pair with him on this question. Without reflection or thinking that it required a vote of two thirds to carry the resolution, I agreed to it, which I now regret, and but for which I should vote in the negative.

The vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know whether less than a majority is competent to lay a motion to reconsider the vote just taken on the table?

The SPEAKER. The only provision of the Constitution requiring a two thirds vote is upon the passage of the resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will not submit a motion to reconsider.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say to the House that if a quorum is present at half past seven this evening I shall endeavor to take up the Senate amendments to the internal revenue tax bill.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman desire a vote upon them to-night?

Mr. MORRILL. I do.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HICKEY, their Chief Clerk, informed the House that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 145) to equalize the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, agree to the committee of conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and have appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. GRIMES, and Mr. NESMITH to be the committee of conference on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate have passed a bill (H. R. No. 247) making a grant of land to the State of Wisconsin to build a military road to Lake Superior, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that the Senate have passed an act (S. No. 264) for the disposal of coal lands and town property in the public domain; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that the Senate have passed, without amendment, an act (H. R. No. 513) to detach the counties of Calhoun and Branch from the western judicial district and annex the same to the eastern district of the State of Michigan.

Also, that the Senate have passed an act (No. 207) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1865, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 106) to prohibit certain sales of gold and foreign exchange; and also to the bill (H. R. No. 282) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the withdrawal of goods from public stores and bonded warehouses, and for other purposes," approved February 29, 1864.

Also, that the Senate have passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 296) in relation to the fees and emoluments of the marshal, attorney, and clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (S. No. 8) for the relief of the State of Wisconsin.

ARMY NEWS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House for information the following communication from the Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, June 15, 7 a. m.

SIR: The movement of the army of the Potomac to the south side of Richmond, across the Chickahominy river and James river, has progressed far enough to admit of the publication of some general facts without danger of premature disclosure.

After several days' preliminary preparations the movement commenced on Sunday night. The eighteenth corps, under command of General Smith, marched to the White House and then embarked on transports for Bermuda Landing. Wright's corps and Burnside's moved to Jones's bridge, where they crossed the Chickahominy and marched thence to Charles City, on the James river. Hancock's and Warren's corps crossed the Chickahominy at Long Bridge, and marched thence to Wilcox's, on the James river. The James river was to be crossed by the army at Powhatan Point.

A dispatch from General Grant, dated Monday evening, half past five o'clock, headquarters Wilcox's Landing, says that the advance of our troops had reached that place, and would commence crossing the James river to-morrow, (Tuesday,) that Smith's corps would commence arriving at City Point that night, and that no fighting was reported during the movement except a little cavalry skirmishing yesterday.

On Tuesday afternoon, at one o'clock, General Grant was at Bermuda Landing. In a dispatch from him dated there of that date he says: "Our forces will commence crossing James river to-day. The enemy show no signs of yet having brought troops to the south side of Richmond. Our movement from Cold Harbor to the James river has been made with great celerity, and so far without loss or accident."

An official dispatch dated at General Butler's headquarters, 2:20 p. m., says that Smith's corps was coming in, five thousand having already landed.

A dispatch from General Sherman's headquarters, dated at three o'clock yesterday afternoon, near Kenesaw, states that the general is in front advancing his lines on Kenesaw. Another unofficial dispatch, dated at nine o'clock last night, reports some advance to-day; that Thomas has gained ground, and that one rebel brigade is nearly surrounded. It further states that the rebel General Polk was killed to-day and his body sent to Marietta.

In another part of General Sherman's East Mississippi division our forces have not met with the success that has attended competent commanders. General Washburne, at Memphis, reports that the expedition, consisting of three thousand cavalry, five thousand infantry, and sixteen pieces of artillery, sent out from there under command of General Sturgis, encountered a large rebel force on the 10th instant, under command of Forrest, at Guntown, on the railroad running south from Corinth, and after a severe fight, in which our loss in killed and wounded was heavy, our troops were worsted, and that at the latest accounts Sturgis was at Colliersville, retreating toward Memphis. He further states that, with the troops that had lately arrived, Memphis is safe.

General Sherman, having received news of Sturgis's defeat, reports that he has already made arrangements to repair the disaster, and placed General A. J. Smith in command, who will resume the offensive immediately.

No other military intelligence has been received by this Department since my last telegram.

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

HON. SCHUYLER COLFAX, Speaker House of Representatives.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. STEELE, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 106) to prohibit certain sales of gold and foreign exchange; and

An act (S. No. 282) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the withdrawal of goods from public stores and bonded warehouses, and for other purposes," approved February 29, 1864.

The hour of half past four having arrived, the House took a recess till half past seven.

EVENING SESSION.

The House, at half past seven o'clock, p. m., resumed its session.

BUSINESS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that Friday evening be set apart for the consideration of business from the Committee for the District of Columbia.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

NEW YORK CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. HULBURD, from the Committee on Public Expenditures, made a report in reference to the New York custom-house; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

VILLAGE OF CAHOKIA.

Mr. MORRISON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act confirming the proceedings of the inhabitants of the village of Cahokia, in the State of Illinois," approved May 1, 1820; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

RHODA WOLCOTT.

Mr. HERRICK submitted the following privileged report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 293) for the relief of Rhoda Wolcott having met, have, after full and free conference, agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives do concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out the words "1st day of January, 1851," and in lieu thereof insert the words "14th day of November, 1860;" that the Senate do agree to the said amendment, to the amendment of the Senate.

L. F. S. FOSTER,
R. GRATZ BROWN,

C. L. BUCKALEW,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

ANSON HERRICK,

JAMES T. HALE,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was adopted.

Mr. HERRICK moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. WILSON. I submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 40) entitled "An act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, and for other purposes," having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the second amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments: strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert the word "thirteen"; strike out the word "pupils" and insert the word "clerks."

That the House agree to the twenty-eighth amendment of the Senate.

That the Senate recede from all the twenty-ninth amendment after the enacting clause, and that the following be inserted in lieu thereof:

That the President be, and is hereby, authorized, whenever he shall think the public good will be promoted thereby, to appoint consular clerks, not exceeding thirteen in number at any one time, who shall be citizens of the United States, and over eighteen years of age at the time of their appointment, and shall be entitled to compensation for their services respectively at a rate not exceeding $1,000 per annum, to be determined by the President, and to assign such clerks from time to time to such consulates and with such duties as he shall direct; and before the appointment of any such clerk shall be made, it shall be satisfactorily shown to the Secretary of State, after due examination and report by an examining board, that the applicant is qualified and fit for the duties to which he shall be assigned, and such report shall be laid before the President. And no clerk so appointed shall be removed from office except for cause stated in writing, which shall be submitted to Congress at the session first following such removal.

That the Senate recede from its thirtieth amendment. That the House recede from its amendment to the thirty-first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

LYMAN TRUMBULL,

IRA HARRIS,

P. G. VAN WINKLE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES F. WILSON,

GODLOVE S. ORTH,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WILSON. This is the same as the report of the first committee of conference except that part which relates to the Belgian minister. That is stricken out. The Senate recede from their amendment entirely. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

MARQUETTE AND ONTONAGON RAILROAD.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved, by unanimous consent, to take up Senate joint resolution No. 64, explanatory of an act entitled "An act extending the time for the completion of the Marquette and Ontonagon railroad of the State of Michigan."

The motion was agreed to.

The joint resolution was taken up, read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRESERVATION OF HARBORS.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to take up and concur in the verbal amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 450, to provide for the repair and preservation of certain public works of the United States.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which these Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

STATE GOVERNMENT FOR COLORADO.

Mr. ASHLEY moved to take up Senate bill No. 291, to amend an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States."

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read a first and second time.

It provides that so much of the fifth section of the act to which this act is an amendment as provides by ordinance for submitting the constitution to the people of the State for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held on the second Tuesday of October, be so amended as to read on the second Tuesday in September.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WISCONSIN.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution No. 8, for the relief of the State of Wisconsin.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was taken up, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHEROKEES.

Mr. BOYD presented the memorial of the chief of the Cherokee nation, &c., which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the tax bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five minutes rule.

Mr. SHANNON. Will this interfere with the Pacific railroad bill?

The SPEAKER. That will come up in the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will continue the consideration of the tax bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope it will be disposed of this evening, and then the Pacific railroad bill will be the next business in order.

The SPEAKER. The parliamentary ruling would be that the morning hour commences this evening, in which the Pacific railroad bill is in order. If the tax bill is taken up, and the House adjourn with the bill undisposed of, it would come up as unfinished business to-morrow for one hour, and after the morning hour the day is assigned to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORRILL. If gentlemen desire an early adjournment I hope they will take up this bill and consider it first. It is important that it should be sent to the Senate, as they have nearly got through with the tariff bill.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I hope the House will proceed with this now.

Mr. COLE, of California. I hope this evening will be devoted to the tax bill, and then again to-morrow evening, and from evening to evening until disposed of.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest that an arrangement should be made by which the Pacific railroad bill shall come up to-morrow morning.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope we shall get through this bill to-night.

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the tax bill?

Mr. SHANNON. If it be understood that if the bill is not finished to-night it shall go over until to-morrow evening, I will not object.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will not consent to anything which overrides the tax bill.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Pacific railroad bill shall be considered to-morrow evening.

There was no objection, and it was so agreed.

MEMBER SWORN IN.

Mr. LOAN. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to have my colleague, Mr. Knox, sworn in as a member of the House.

Mr. SAMUEL KNOX was then qualified by taking the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862.

INTERNAL REVENUE—AGAIN.

The House, by unanimous consent, proceeded to the consideration of the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 405) to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in about three hundred and ninety-four of the amendments of the Senate, a non-concurrence in about two hundred and forty-two, and a concurrence in about a dozen with amendments. I desire to say that the committee would propose some amendments to many of the amendments wherein they recommend a non-concurrence; but some of them are important and some are unimportant, and they thought the matter could be better arranged in a committee of conference. They ask that a vote in gross be taken on all the amendments in which we propose a concurrence, except such as gentlemen may desire a separate vote on. That the House may know what the amendments are in which we ask a concurrence and in which a non-concurrence, I send the report to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. What course does the gentleman propose?

Mr. MORRILL. A vote first on concurring in the three hundred and ninety-four amendments except such as gentlemen may desire a separate vote on.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. What is the recommendation in reference to taxing whisky on hand?

Mr. MORRILL. The committee recommend a concurrence with the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask a separate vote on that early and often. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARFIELD. With the permission of the gentleman from Vermont I desire to inquire what effect the arrangement entered into in reference to this bill will have upon the Military Committee's business?

The SPEAKER. If the House adjourn to-night with the tax bill undisposed of it comes up as unfinished business to-morrow morning, and remains before the House until it is disposed of, unfinished business having priority of all business except privileged questions and questions of privilege. If there was a morning hour to-morrow, which never occurs when there is unfinished business, the day after that morning hour would be devoted to the business reported from the Military Committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I stated at the time that I objected to any arrangement which would interfere with the business pertaining to the Military Committee.

The SPEAKER. That is true, when the first proposition was pending; subsequently another proposition was made and unanimously agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I intended my objection to extend to all such arrangements.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman so to object.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Let us go ahead with this, and we will soon get through with the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will we get through to-night?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. We will try.

Mr. GARFIELD. If we get through to-night will the Military Committee have to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. After the morning hour.

The Clerk will now read the list of amendments in which the Committee of Ways and Means recommend concurrence.

The Clerk proceeded to read the list, giving only the numbers of the amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must call for the reading of all the amendments.

Mr. FENTON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that demand. There are six hundred and thirty-six amendments, and we shall never get through. Let the Clerk read the numbers slowly, so that members can keep the run of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. We cannot understand what we are doing in that way.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The bill is too important to be passed in that manner. I demand the reading of each amendment.

The amendments of the Senate in which the Committee of Ways and Means recommended concurrence were then read and concurred in nem. con. by the House, except in the following instances in which special action was taken:

Thirty-first amendment:

On page 13, line eighteen, strike out the words "false or fraudulent."

Thirty-second amendment:

On same page, after the word "return," in the same line, insert the words "which in the opinion of the assessor is false or fraudulent."

Thirty-third amendment:

On same page, lines nineteen and twenty, strike out the words "a list on which there is" and insert in lieu thereof the word "contains."

Thirty-fourth amendment:

On same page, in line twenty-two, strike out the words "by subpoena, to be served by any assistant assessor."

Thirty-fifth amendment:

On same page, after the word "officer," in line twenty-six, insert the words "before such assessor."

The clause, as amended by these several amendments, reads as follows:

And if any person, on being notified or required as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect to give such list or return within the time required as aforesaid, or if any person shall not deliver a monthly or other list or return without notice at the time required by law, or if any person shall deliver or disclose to any assessor or assistant assessor any list, statement, or return, which in the opinion of the assessor is false or fraudulent, or contains any under-statement or under-valuation, it shall be lawful for the assessor to summon such person, his agent, or other person having possession, custody, or care of books of account containing entries relating to the trade or business of such person, or any other persons as he may deem proper, to appear before such assessor and produce such book, at a time and place therein named, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories, under oath or affirmation respecting any objects liable to duty or tax as aforesaid, or the lists, statements, or returns thereof, or any trade, business, or profession liable to any tax or license as aforesaid.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. My reasons for objecting to these amendments is that they violate every idea of individual right and liberty which belongs to the common law and to our people. The clause as amended proposes to allow an assessor upon mere suspicion, no matter how baseless it may be, that a party has made a false oath, to examine into all of his private accounts, to call for his books, and make himself master of all the business transactions of the party. We have in almost every State in the Union laws which call for oaths as to personal property, and so far as I have any knowledge of any such laws this is the only one that puts it in the power of a little petty officer to call for the books and accounts of a merchant or a person engaged in general business, and examine them, and make his business transactions the subject of an inquiry. I believe it to be all wrong, and for that reason I object to this additional power which is given by the Senate to the assessors. It was bad enough when the House allowed the assessors to take the responsibility, when it is alleged that a certain statement is false, of making an inquiry into the business transactions of the party. We are fast hurrying on to that state of things when we not only disregard private rights, but everything which is considered sacred under the common law. I hope that these amendments will not be concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS. The only difference between the provision of the House bill and the amendment of the Senate is as to whether the assessor shall believe the return to be false and fraudulent, or whether it shall be alleged to be so. It is only a difference of expression. According to the provision of the original bill every assessor has a right, if he alleges fraud, to call the party before him to verify his statement by oath. How can he absolutely know that it is false and fraudulent? He must have good reason to suspect it. All that is done is to call the party and examine him, and let him take the oath and produce his books—nothing else. There is nothing harsh in the measure. It only puts the party on his oath, the same as in the case of a return of income. I can see no reason why these amendments should not be concurred in. I think the amendments of the Senate make the provision a little softer and better than the original bill does.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Does it not go further and require the production of books and the disclosure of all the affairs of the party on mere suspicion?

Mr. STEVENS. That was in the bill as it went from the House, and the Senate have agreed to it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. This puts it merely upon suspicion of the assessor. It does not require that there shall be any charge against the individual. He acts upon mere suspicion.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I would strike out that provision as it existed in the House bill. But I am here willing, as I am forced to, to concede that the House bill was correct. The Senate amendment goes further. It allows, without any probable cause, every little petty officer of all this number scattered through the whole country, to take advantage of his suspicion, whether founded or unfounded, to institute an investigation into the private affairs of the citizen. I prefer that the party should answer under oath, and if he answer falsely, that he shall be prosecuted for perjury. That is the law as it generally exists throughout the United States with regard to the taxation of personal property.

Mr. STEVENS. I think the gentleman entirely misapprehends. That part of the provision which the gentleman complains of is in the House bill and is left untouched. We cannot, therefore, amend that now.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. That I concede.

Mr. STEVENS. As it stood before, the assistant assessor, as well as the assessor, had the right to summon the party if, in his judgment, the return was fraudulent. There can be no absolute certainty of a fraud which is not investigated. The amendment of the Senate is to take away from the assistant assessor that power, leaving it to the assessor where fraud is suspected.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I will ask the gentleman if, under the bill as he reported it, it was not necessary that the assessor should be certain, that he should know that the return was false. In other words, was not the assessor compelled to assume the responsibility in order to be able to make the inquiry?

Mr. STEVENS. No. It would be absurd to ask him to examine the books and take the oath of the party if he knew the facts himself. These were the means provided in the original bill to ascertain whether the return was fraudulent or not, but the idea was very ill expressed in the original bill, and has been better put in the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendments; and there were, on division—ayes 57, noes 41.

So the amendments were concurred in.

Thirty-sixth amendment:

Section fourteen, after the word "aforesaid" strike out the words "and to enforce such writ by attachment for contempt," and insert in lieu thereof as follows:

Such summons may be served by any assistant assessor of the district. In case any person so summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey such summons according to its exigency, or to give testimony, or to answer interrogatories as required, it shall be lawful for the assessor, upon affidavit proving the facts, to apply to the judge of the district court, or a commissioner authorized to perform the duties of such judge at chambers, for an attachment against such person as a contempt. It shall be the duty of such judge or commissioner to hear such application, and if satisfactory proof be made, to issue an attachment directed to some proper officer, for the arrest of such person, and upon his being brought before him to proceed to a hearing of the case, and upon such hearing the judge or commissioner shall have power to make such order as he shall deem proper to enforce obedience to the requirements of the summons, and punish such person for his default or disobedience.

Mr. GANSON. Mr. Speaker, this amendment authorizes the officer to whom this application is made to issue an attachment, in the first instance, against the person as for contempt. In my judgment the first thing that the officer should be authorized to do, when the application is made by the assessor, is to issue an order to the party to appear and show cause why an attachment should not issue against him, instead of authorizing the issuing of an attachment in the first instance.

In the next place my objection is to the last part of this clause, which vests in this officer the power to impose any punishment that he may deem proper. I do not believe in the propriety of investing all these officers with such discretionary power. I think there should be some limit to it. I think that some kind of punishment should be prescribed by the statute in the nature of a fine. We should not authorize the commissioner to commit a party to jail. Under this clause, as it now stands, he might imprison a man for five years. He might sentence him to be hanged, or might inflict any punishment he chose. There is no limitation whatever. I think the nature of the punishment should be indicated. I think the amendment of the Senate an improvement on the original clause as the bill passed the House; but I am also of opinion that it should be altered in those particulars.

Mr. STEVENS. This provides expressly that on appearance the process and everything shall be open to answer.

Mr. GANSON. Not before the attachment is issued.

Mr. STEVENS. The attachment is only to bring the party there, and then the answer is open. It will be simply one process instead of two, which will be a great saving in time and expense. It takes no privilege from the party. He is not to be punished until he is heard. This is to be done by the judge. I am sorry that in New York they can hang a man for contempt. [Laughter.] If that is the law there it is certainly not the law in Pennsylvania.

Mr. GANSON. I have been so informed.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman has been misinformed. I recollect that they put Passmore Williamson in jail for saying that a negro was a man. [Laughter.] It was a great contempt of the Democracy of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GANSON. They put a man in jail now without process.

Mr. STEVENS. That saves a great deal of trouble. It does away with the law's delays of which we have heard so much. [Laughter.]

Mr. GANSON. What about the amendment?

Mr. STEVENS. I think it is right as it is.

Mr. GANSON. He should not be arrested by process in the first instance; he may have a good excuse. This, in my opinion, is unknown to any practice I have ever heard of.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think that the gentleman from New York has not heard the section. Parties liable to be taxed have ten days in which to make their returns. If they do not make returns, or the returns are deemed fraudulent, then they are summoned to show their books and are put under oath. If they refuse they are to be punished for contempt. It is a very proper amendment.

Mr. PRUYN. I move, in the fortieth line, after the words "judge in chambers" to insert the words "on eight days' notice to the party." That does not quite meet the views of my colleague, but I have not had time to prepare an amendment to do that. This gives the party an opportunity to appear without a preliminary order to show cause. It meets the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that we would have two proceedings.

Mr. KERNAN. If gentleman will look at it they will see that no harm can come to the Government by adopting this amendment to the amendment, and that it will be acting with fairness toward the individual. It will not delay by directing that the assessor may apply for his attachment on giving five or eight days' notice. If the party can give a good excuse there is no necessity for arresting him; and if he cannot, they can then arrest him. It is in accordance with all the practice I have ever heard of. He will have notice, and there will be no expense.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 48.

So the amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Fifty-first amendment:

In section twenty, after the proviso, "That on the hearing of appeals it shall be lawful for the assessor to require by summons the attendance of witnesses and the production of books of account in the same manner and under the same penalties as are provided in cases of refusal or neglect to furnish lists or returns," add as follows:

The bills for the attendance and mileage of said witnesses shall be taxed by the assessor and paid by the delinquent parties, or otherwise by the collector of the district, on certificate of the assessor, at the rates usually allowed in said district for witnesses in courts of justice.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin, demanded a separate vote.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 39.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Sixty-third amendment:

Strike out "$3 50" and insert "$4," so that it will read: And there shall be allowed and paid to each assistant assessor $4 for every day actually employed in collecting lists and making valuations, the number of days necessary for that purpose to be certified by the assessor; and $3 for every hundred persons assessed contained in the tax list, as completed and delivered by him to the assessor.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be observed that the increase made by us from $3 to $3 50 has been still further increased by the Senate to $4. This is an increase of $1 per day in addition to the very large increase for making out lists. If it were proposed to reduce the pay of the principal assessor and increase the pay of the assistant assessor, I do not know that I could urge any serious objection; but with the compensation of the principal assessor so high, it seems to me this increase is beyond all reason. I think the compensation of $3 50 a day, as fixed by the House, ought to be adhered to. We are making the collection of the revenue enormously expensive. This will be a subject of universal comparison. Our people will compare it with the expenses of their own assessments at home, and with the expenses incurred by themselves in the enforcement of their own local policy; and they will condemn it, because of the amount paid to the collectors, assessors, and assistant collectors, which so largely exceeds that paid to State officers who perform corresponding services. I do not hesitate to say that the compensation provided for in this bill for assessors and assistant assessors is three-fold the amount paid in my own State to competent men for the rendition of similar services. It will be condemned everywhere as an attempt to foist upon the country a body of officers receiving a large compensation, while the States wisely and prudently secure the performance of the same services for a very inconsiderable sum in comparison with this amount.

Mr. MORRILL. The more the Committee of Ways and Means examined this subject the more they were convinced that these officers were the poorest paid and the hardest working officers engaged in the service of collecting the internal revenue. In the cities it is utterly impossible to get competent men to execute the duties of the office of assistant assessor without a higher compensation. In the country the assistant assessors have to hire a team, if they do not own one, and travel over vast distances at their own expense. I know that in one district an officer who had been wounded in the service of his country went home and took the position of assistant assessor, and after working three months he ascertained he had paid out fifty dollars more than he had received from the Government.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I heard no complaint until I came into this House of any difficulty of getting competent men to discharge the duties of assistant assessor at $3 a day. The remedy is to be found in having smaller districts—a district in each town or township.

Mr. MORRILL. Would that diminish the expense?

Mr. HOTCHKISS. It will largely. This matter was discussed here when the bill was before the House before, and the motion made to raise the amount half a dollar. The increasing the compensation of these officers is very bad policy. It creates a prejudice in the public against the law, more than any other objection which exists against it. It is creating a swarm of office-holders to be paid a higher price than States pay their officers for the performance of similar duties. The States pay this class of men not more than $1 50 or $2 at the outside. These men get a larger pay under the law as it stood before the amendment than any similar class of officers in a State, and I hope the amendment will not be concurred in.

Mr. MORRIS, of New York, called for tellers. Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. MORRILL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 55.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was put, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 63, nays 55, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blair, Blow, Boyd, Brooks, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Daves, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, English, Griswold, Hale, Herrick, Higby, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Loan, Longear, Marvin, McAllister, McBride, McClurg, McIntoe, Moorhead, Morrill, Leonard Myers, Norton, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Pendleton, Price, Alexander H. Rice, Seofield, Scott, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, Stevens, Thayer, Upson, Ward, Webster, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, and Woodbridge—63.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ames, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blaine, Boutwell, Broomall, James S. Brown, Chanler, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cox, Dawson, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Fenton, Finck, Frank, Ganson, Harding, Harrington, Holman, Hotchkiss, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Lazar, Littlejohn, Long, Marcy, McDowell, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Morrison, Anos Myers, Noble, Radford, John H. Rice, Robinson, Ross, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Stuart, Sweet, Tracy, Wadsworth, Elihu B. Washburne, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, and Fernando Wood—55.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Anderson, Arnold, Baily, Bliss, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Clay, Coffroth, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Denning, Denison, Dumont, Farnsworth, Garfield, Gooch, Grider, Grinnell, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Hulbard, Hutchins, Jencks, Kasson, Kelley, King, Knapp, Law, Le Blond, Mallory, Middleton, William H. Miller, Nelson, John O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Schenck, Smith, Starr, Stebbins, Strouse, Thomas, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wheeler, Windom, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—64.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Seventieth amendment:

On page 27, line ninety-one, after the words "assistant assessors" insert the words "revenue agents and inspectors;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to fix such additional rates of compensation to be made to assessors and assistant assessors in cases where a collection district embraces more than a single congressional district, and to assessors and assistant assessors, revenue agents and inspectors, in the States of Louisiana, North Carolina, Mississippi, &c.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not think we ought to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the pay of these officers at his discretion, even if we do it in the case of assessors and assistant assessors. I do not think this amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman will find toward the close of the section this limitation:

But the rates of compensation thus allowed shall not exceed the rates paid to similar officers in such States and Territories respectively.

Mr. KERNAN. Can any gentleman tell us what those rates are?

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "revenue agents." I trust the House will perceive the difficulty there is about this amendment of the Senate. With great reluctance, I think, the House concurred in the text as it stands in the original bill. The Senate inserts in addition the words "revenue agents and inspectors," so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to fix additional compensation to assessors and assistant assessors in cases where a collection district embraces more than a single congressional district, "and to assessors and assistant assessors, revenue agents and inspectors, in the States of Louisiana, North Carolina, &c."

Now, sir, it is true that there is a proviso that the rate of compensation thus allowed shall not exceed the rates paid to similar officers in such States. Who knows what that compensation is?

Mr. KERNAN. There are no such officers in the States.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are no such officers as revenue agents and inspectors in the States. They have no connection with the revenue at all. The House has been punished within the last two months with a long list of revenue agents, employed by the Secretary of the Treasury at four dollars, six dollars, and I believe eight dollars per day and their expenses, and I presume these revenue agents are to be employed in the same way.

Mr. UPSON. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fourth section of the bill, which shows that only five of these agents are to be employed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman read that section?

Mr. UPSON. It provides that "the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint, not exceeding five revenue agents, whose duty shall be, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to aid in the prevention, detection, and punishment of frauds upon the internal revenue," and so on.

Mr. HOLMAN. That, I presume, provides for these revenue agents, but what are the inspectors employed for? What are their duties? Similar additional compensation is to be paid to them.

Mr. BROOMALL. The gentleman will allow me to call his attention to the commencement of the fifth section, which provides for these inspectors.

Mr. HOLMAN. The fourth and fifth sections, according to my recollection, provide for these officers. Here is a proposition to appoint revenue agents and inspectors in certain States where you will probably not collect a dollar of revenue.

Now, sir, I have been in portions of the South myself within the last twelve months, where multitudes of public officers were employed, receiving high compensation, whose services, from the very nature of things, would not inure one tithe of a hair, to the extent of one dollar, to the benefit of this Government. There are multitudes of such officers, and you here authorize not simply their multiplication, but by the vague terms you use in referring to the pay of similar officers in the States you authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to exercise unlimited power of compensating these agents for the purpose of carrying out, not the interests of the Government, but business pertaining to the organization of the political power of the country.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman will go through his speech we will not pass this amendment. These officers are only to have their expenses paid in addition to their salaries.

Mr. STEVENS. I think the gentleman had better withdraw his amendment, and let us vote down the whole amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well, I withdraw it. The amendment of the Senate was not concurred in.

The seventy-fourth amendment was read and concurred in, as follows:

Page 30, lines three and four, strike out "one thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen hundred;" so that the section will read:

Sec. 24. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed to collectors, in full compensation for their services and that of their deputies, a salary of $1,500 per annum, to be paid quarterly, &c.

Several succeeding amendments were then read and concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to inquire whether the seventy-fourth amendment has been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. It has been concurred in. Mr. HOLMAN. The Clerk passed over the amendments so rapidly that I did not notice it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk passed over them at the usual speed—rather slowly, the Chair thought.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in. I trust the House will at least give us an opportunity of considering the amendment by a reconsideration. Let us at least have a vote on the amendment. [Cries of "Oh! no."] Then I shall ask for a vote upon each amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to reconsider is not in order, as the House is now acting as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask, then, that in order to facilitate business the House will consider the seventy-fourth amendment, which is to increase the salaries—

Mr. FENTON. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. FENTON. Let us proceed, then.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do I understand that the motion to reconsider is not in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression that it is not, from the fact that the House has decided to consider the amendments as if in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where a motion to reconsider is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then, to avoid the necessity of having a separate vote on each proposition, which I do not desire to insist on, I ask unanimous consent of the House to make a statement.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I call for a separate vote on each amendment.

Eighty-ninth amendment:

Section twenty-seven, line eighteen, strike out the word "summons" and insert in lieu thereof the word "notice."

Mr. HOLMAN called for a separate vote. The House divided; and no quorum voting, The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. HOLMAN and SHANNON.

Mr. HOLMAN. I again ask unanimous consent to have the vote on the seventy-fourth amendment reconsidered.

Mr. WILSON. I object to the House being forced by one member to do anything.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 20.

The SPEAKER announced that the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was there a quorum voting?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana deserted his post as teller.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order. The tellers appointed by the Chair did not report that result.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had appealed to gentlemen to vote, and some were coming forward to do so when the gentleman from Indiana left his post, and the Chair took it for granted that he withdrew the demand for a division. The Chair will appoint two other tellers; and Mr. NOBLE and Mr. BAXTER will please act as such.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 16.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the seventy-fourth amendment was concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that that motion is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I appeal respectfully from the decision of the Chair. I inquire whether we are not now in the House, and controlled, except in regard to the limitation of debate, by the rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the House, having resolved by unanimous consent to consider the amendments to this bill the same as if in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the rules that govern in committee apply in the House. In Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union no motion to reconsider is in order except by unanimous consent. The Chair, therefore, rules the motion to reconsider to be not in order. From that decision the gentleman from Indiana appeals; the question is: "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

The House divided; and there were—ayes 95, noes 1.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained by the House.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I ask the Chair how it is that the yeas and nays can be called, if we are acting as if in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. When we are in the House, we are acting under the Constitution of the United States, which provides that one fifth of the members present can always order the yeas and nays.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I understood the Chair to say that we were acting under the rules which govern the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. That is why I voted against sustaining the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to vote as he pleases.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I wish to explain—

The SPEAKER. No explanation is necessary.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I understood the Chair to decide that we were acting as if in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.

Mr. HALE. I suggest that the vote be taken on reconsidering the seventy-fourth amendment.

Mr. BEAMAN and others objected.

The amendments of the Senate (commencing with the ninetieth amendment) in which concurrence was recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means were read, and were severally voted on and concurred in without question, except the following, on which special action was taken:

Ninetyth amendment:

Section twenty-seven, line twenty-two, strike out the word "summons" and insert in lieu thereof the word "notice."

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to debate the proposition, and I expect to enjoy all the rights of the Representative of a free constituency on this floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana shall enjoy all his rights.

Mr. HOLMAN. I intend to enjoy them to the most unlimited extent under the rules of the House. I expect not only to be heard, but—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is discussing the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will debate the ninetieth amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the rapid running over of these amendments by the Clerk it is somewhat difficult to distinguish between the amendments recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means and those not recommended. It will therefore occur occasionally that a number of amendments are passed over without notice. I am therefore very desirous that the Clerk shall read the amendments in such order as that members may understand exactly as to what they have to vote upon.

Mr. UPSON. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Indiana is not speaking to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think there is any objection to the amendment of the Senate, but I wish it understood that the Clerk in reading the amendments of the Senate shall not run over them with such rapidity as to deprive members of their right to have the several propositions fairly presented for a vote of the House.

The amendment was concurred in.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw his objection. There are over six hundred amendments; and compelling the Speaker to put the question on every one of them, many being verbal in their nature, is unnecessarily fatiguing him without accomplishing any good result.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not see why we should not agree to reconsider the vote on the important amendment to which he has referred, and which was passed over hastily.

Mr. MORRILL. Before we get through I will agree to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us go back at once.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not want the House to be controlled by any suggestion in reference to his convenience. He will put the question on each of these six hundred and thirty-six amendments, as he is required to do, and he will do it with pleasure.

Mr. KERNAN. Let us accommodate each other about these things. We do not wish to throw any obstacles in the way of transacting the public business, but if there is to be this sharpness on the other side gentlemen on this side will stand upon their rights. Let us go back to the amendment indicated. If there is a majority for it, let it stand; if not, let it be rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I object.

Mr. KERNAN. When we agreed to take these amendments up out of their usual course we did not expect this sharpness on the other side. The amendments have been run over rapidly.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk cannot speak for himself, and the Chair will state that when he came to the seventy-fourth amendment he waited, expecting as the Chair did that there would be a call for a separate vote, but there was none.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not make any reflection on the Clerk.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts. I object to going back.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then let the amendments be read and voted on separately.

Ninety-eighth amendment:

Strike out the words "place of residence of the person whose" and "shall be;" so that it will read:

And the said officer shall also cause a notification to the same effect to be published in some newspaper within the county where such seizure is made, if any such there be, and shall also cause a like notice to be posted up at the post office nearest to the estate so seized, and in two other public places within the county.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 7; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. STEELE, of New York, and LITTLEJOHN.

The House was again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 7.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Ninety-ninth amendment:

Insert the words "except by special order of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue;" so that it will read: And the place of said sale shall not be more than five miles distant from the estate seized, except by special order of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is an extraordinary power to confer upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and I ask for a division.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman would not object if he had carefully read the provision. It is intended to apply to a number of States not now entirely under the jurisdiction of the United States.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 19.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania, moved to adjourn.

Mr. DAWSON demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—ayes 35, nays 82, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Ancona, Bally, Blaine, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chanler, Cravens, Dawson, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Grider, Harrington, Herrick, Holman, William Johnson, Kabbfisch, Lazear, Long, Macey, McDowell, McKinney, James K. Morris, Morrison, Pruyn, Radford, Robinson, Ross, Shannon, Stiles, Sweat, and Fernando Wood—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blair, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Elliot, Fenton, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Hale, Highy, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, Knox, Littlejohn, Loan, Longyear, Mallory, Marvin, McCallister, McClurg, McDermott, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Pendleton, Perham, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, James S. Rollins, Scofield, Scott, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stevens, Thayer, Tracy, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Ward, Elisha B. Washburne, Webster, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, and Woodbridge—82.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, Anderson, Arnold, Bliss, Bluff, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Coffroth, Cox, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Denison, Denison, Dumont, Farnsworth, Gould, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Hulburd, Hutchins, Jenckes, King, Knapp, Law, Le Blond, McBride, Middleton, William H. Miller, Amos Myers, Nelson, Noble, Odell, John O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Smith, Starr, Stebbins, Strouse, Stuart, Thomas, Voorles, Wadsworth, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wheeler, Windom, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—65.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now suggest, as a matter of ordinary courtesy in the House, that after the other amendments are disposed of the seventy-fourth amendment be reconsidered.

Mr. BEAMAN. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that I am very anxious to make some progress in this bill to-night, so as to not entirely lose the evening. When we get through the bill, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana, I will ask the House to go back and consider the seventy-fourth amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will not the House do it at this time?

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent that when the other amendments are disposed of the House shall go back and consider the seventy-fourth amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. After this understanding by the House I withdraw my demand for a separate vote on each amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the amendments, and those upon which no separate vote is asked will be considered as agreed to.

One hundred and twentieth amendment:

In section thirty-seven, line three, after the word "collector" insert "revenue agent or inspector;" so that the clause will read:

Sec. 37. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall forcibly obstruct or hinder any assessor or assistant assessor, or any collector or deputy collector, revenue agent or inspector, in the execution of this act, or of any power and authority hereby vested in him, or shall forcibly rescue, or cause to be rescued, any property, articles, or objects, after the same shall have been seized by him, or shall attempt or endeavor so to do, the person so offending shall, upon conviction thereof, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $500, or double the amount of property so rescued, or be imprisoned for a term not exceeding two years, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. HOLMAN. It may be proper to place the names of these two officers in this place on account of the States which are in rebellion, but that is certainly the only reason for doing so. It struck me upon the first blush that it was not necessary at all, but inasmuch as it has been recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means there may probably be a necessity for it. I rose for the purpose of objecting to this Senate amendment, but it may be that the fourth and fifth sections of this act may require the addition of the names of these two officers to this section of the bill, but it did not so strike me.

Mr. MORRILL. It must be apparent to every man in the House that these inspectors and revenue agents, who are to look after frauds, should at least have the powers of assessors and collectors.

The Clerk having read from the one hundred and sixty-third to the one hundred and sixty-eighth amendments, inclusive, relating to the tax on whisky,

Mr. PRUYN said: I would ask the gentleman from Vermont what changes are proposed by these amendments.

Mr. MORRILL. The House imposed a tax on whisky of $1 until January next and $1 25 after that time. The Senate amendments make the duty $1 to October, $1 25 from October to January, and $1 50 after January next.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. A portion of these amendments in reference to the time at which various transactions shall take effect have been read, and I have hardly had time to notice what was involved in them. All these amendments ought properly to go together as they relate to the same matter, and I therefore ask that they may all be acted upon by the House in one vote.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I object.

Mr. STEVENS. I think the proposition is right, as they all relate to the tax on whisky.

Mr. MORRILL. The committee have recommended a non-concurrence in the last one. At the same time they ought all to be acted on together, and I suggest that the House non-concur in them all.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I withdraw my objection. The several amendments were then all non-concurred in.

One hundred and sixty-ninth amendment:

Strike out the words "such spirits, and also on the interest of all persons in default in;" so that it will read:

And the said duty shall be a lien on the distillery used for distilling the same, with all the stills, vessels, fixtures, and tools therein, and on the lot or tract of land whereon the said distillery is situated, until the said duty shall be paid.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I call for a separate vote upon that amendment. The language of the law as originally adopted by the House is:

And the said duty shall be a lien on such spirits, and also on the interest of all persons in default in the distillery used for distilling the same, &c.

Thereby the Committee of Ways and Means of the House provided that an honest owner of premises, which he may have leased, could not lose by a tenant or be held responsible for his acts. A man may lease a piece of property for one purpose and it may be used for another; he may lease it generally, and it may be used for a distillery. Now, by the amendment of the Senate, although a piece of property may be used as a distillery against the wish of the owner, the owner runs the risk of losing it by the default of the distiller. The House properly limited the loss to the party in default.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.

Mr. ASHLEY. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the constitutional amendment was rejected this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered.

Mr. COX. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. COX. What will be the effect of the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio?

The SPEAKER. It can be called up at any time.

Mr. COX. How did the gentleman vote?

The SPEAKER. With the prevailing side.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order. It is that, so far as the mere question of the constitutional amendment is concerned, a two-thirds vote is necessary; but with reference to everything else pertaining to a vote in this House the ordinary rules govern; and therefore, to enable a party to move to reconsider, he should have voted in the majority instead of with the prevailing side, and therefore a member who voted in the minority cannot move to reconsider.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I raise another point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide one point of order at a time. That is about as much as the Chair can decide at once. [Laughter.]

The Chair overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] The gentleman from Ohio has a right to make the motion to reconsider. The Clerk will read from Barclay's Digest, page 162.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"A fair construction of this rule will permit a member who has voted with the prevailing side on a tie vote to move a reconsideration. Such is evidently the spirit of the rule, and such has been the subsequent practice."

The SPEAKER. The practice is that any member who has voted on the prevailing side can move to reconsider, and the gentleman from Ohio voted with the prevailing side.

Mr. COX. Was this a tie vote?

The SPEAKER. It was not a tie vote, it is true; but the spirit of the rule applies precisely the same to this case. A member who votes on the side which succeeds on the vote can move a reconsideration. That has been the practice, and the Chair so decides.

Mr. COX. By what vote can the reconsideration be carried—by two thirds or by a majority?

The SPEAKER. By a majority vote; but on the passage of the joint resolution a two-thirds vote is required.

Mr. COX. We never can end the question under that ruling of the Chair so long as there is a majority in favor of the resolution and not two thirds.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is incorrect, as but one reconsideration can be moved on any question. That exhausts the power to reconsider.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Within what period can the motion to reconsider be made?

The SPEAKER. On this day or to-morrow, under the rules, and after to-morrow the motion to reconsider cannot be withdrawn by the gentleman from Ohio, except by the consent of the House.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I make the point of order that the Speaker has already decided that we are acting as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. And that the rules applicable to that committee are applicable to us now. I submit, therefore, that being in Committee of the Whole the motion to reconsider cannot be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules that point of order, for the reason that although the House has voted to act upon this bill as in Committee of the Whole, yet it is the House of Representatives still, or else the present occupant of the chair could not be in the chair. There is one member of the House who is not privileged to preside in Committee of the Whole, and that is the Speaker. Some other member must occupy the chair, because the Committee of the Whole must make a report to the House, and the Speaker must be in the chair to receive that report.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. The other rules applicable to the Committee of the Whole apply to us, as the House has decided that the rules applicable to the Committee of the Whole now prevail, and therefore it is that I say this motion cannot be entertained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would overrule the point of order on the additional suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, from the fact that this is the House of Representatives, and the yeas and nays can be called, and can be taken on an adjournment, or on a motion to lay upon the table. Neither of those motions can be made in Committee of the Whole; and yet the Chair, with the general consent of the House, has entertained a motion to adjourn several times this evening.

Mr. COX. I propose to call the previous question on the motion of my colleague [Mr. ASHLEY] at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot do that, for the reason that the rule requires that when a motion to reconsider is submitted at a time when other business is progressing, it must be entered on the Journal. The Chair will have the rule read from Barclay's Digest, page 152.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"It is in order on the same or succeeding day to move a reconsideration and have it entered, but it cannot be taken up and considered while another question is before the House."

Mr. COX. Why cannot I make the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table now?

The SPEAKER. Because it would be in direct conflict with the rule which has just been read.

Mr. COX. I do not propose to take the motion to reconsider "up," but to lay it on the table.

[Laughter.] I make the point of order that I have a right to make my motion now if my colleague had a right to make his.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, under the express language of the rule that a motion to reconsider can be entered but not called up when other business is before the House.

Mr. COX. All I propose is to have my motion entered now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot have it entered, it not being a privileged motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there anything in the rules that prevents the motion to lay on the table being made at the proper time, when the subject comes up for action?

The SPEAKER. There is not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then of course there is no necessity for making the motion now.

The SPEAKER. When the subject comes up the motion can, of course, be made.

INTERNAL REVENUE—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the Senate amendments to the internal revenue bill, the question being on the one hundred and sixty-ninth amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. In reference to the particular point under discussion it will be seen that the owners of a distillery may let it to an irresponsible party, and under the present high rate of duties he may go on and distill liquors and defraud the Government, and then abandon the distillery. Now we make it a point that the owner of the distillery shall see to it that he lets it to a responsible party. I can see no great hardship in that.

Mr. UPSON. I would say to the gentleman from Vermont that such cases do actually occur, and have occurred in my own district.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. The gentleman from Vermont does not meet the objection which I made. It does not follow, because there is a distillery on your land, that you have ever assented to its being constructed there. You may own lots in a city, as thousands of others have had the misfortune to do, and lease them, and the parties to whom you have leased them may themselves construct the distillery, and construct it against your wish; but under this clause you become responsible for the acts of the distiller.

Mr. STEVENS. I would say to the gentleman that in cases of this kind I suppose these lots are on ground rent.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. Undoubtedly.

Mr. STEVENS. A sale of the premises would not discharge the ground rent.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, with very great respect for the legal opinion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I can hardly see, when you forfeit the premises themselves, when you forfeit the interest which each person has in them, how the owner can still claim his ground rent. Suppose he leases the premises for a year, or two, or three, or ten years, what becomes of his right after the expiration of the term? There are thousands of persons in the western country who lease their lots for the mere taxes, expecting to sell them at a profit after a while. The ground rent amounts to the tax and nothing more. What, under this section, becomes of the lot then after the lease expires? It is absolutely forfeited.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that it is in order to mention the Constitution in this House. I know it is almost out of order. But I do not believe that under the Constitution this section can be enforced. But the fact that it cannot be enforced is no reason why we should pass it. I know, from the past action of the House, that to appeal either to its justice or to the obligations imposed upon it by the Constitution is the very weakest argument that a man can use. But when you have no object in this procedure except to aid a fraud, when the forfeiture that you have is sufficient, over and over again, to cover the amount that the Government may claim, it seems to me to be idle to enter on a doubtful field like this, even supposing that there is no constitutional question involved. I know of but one argument in favor of the amendment, and that is the argument of consistency. You have already destroyed the right existing under that old English maxim which makes a man's house his castle. You have deprived him of that protection. You have already deprived a man of the privilege of transacting his own business without being subjected to the idle and impudent curiosity of parties who wish to inquire into it; and it would be almost inconsistent to adopt any measure that would be no encroachment on popular rights.

Mr. BEAMAN. I rise to a point of order. I want to know if the gentleman's argument has any reference to his amendment to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is not material, as the gentleman's time has expired.

The question was taken on Mr. Brown's amendment to the amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. GANSON. I move to strike out the words "such spirits." I do not see why we should exempt the spirits of the man who has violated the law.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the spirits can be found they are always liable for the duties under this act. It is not necessary by this provision of law that a lien should be put upon the spirits, for all articles subject to tax are responsible for the tax themselves. That is so by the old sixty-ninth section and by another section of this bill. If the spirits can be found they are liable for the tax.

I think the amendment as it comes from the Senate is a desirable one. It may turn out to be unconstitutional as the gentleman from Wisconsin suggests, but as he has great respect for the Supreme Court of the United States, if any party is aggrieved he can submit the question to that court. It will be agreed, I think, that its decision is as good as the opinion of the Government.

The Government has suffered from irresponsible distillers leasing premises for distilling spirits; the Government has been defrauded of its just revenue, and, although there may be cases of hardship, I think the principle is a safe one that the property of the distillery should be held responsible for the doings of the distiller.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I move to strike out all after the first word.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I insist that the gentleman shall confine his remarks to the amendment which he has submitted.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Massachusetts, in his zeal to suppress discussion, might as well wait until he has heard my argument before he raises a question of order. Gentlemen who believe they have the right seldom wish to escape from discussion. It is only those who believe that, by brute force, by a numerical majority, they can vote down any proposition, whether right or wrong, who resort to such rules and desire to apply the gag to members of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the argument the gentleman makes well becomes the gentleman who makes it, and the side of this House from which it comes. It is an argument that we, acting under our oaths to do our duty under the Constitution, and to comply with all of its provisions, shall pass a law independently of these oaths, and forgetting what we have promised. He says let us pass these propositions, and if they are wrong the Supreme Court can make them right! It furnishes a key to the action of this House during this session on more than one half of its legislation. Day after day we have appealed in vain, not only to the protection of the Constitution, but to the protection of those principles of justice which lie back of all constitutions, and which all men, whether born under the despotic sway of a Russian czar or in a free land, have recognized as the primary object of all legislation.

We have followed such rules because the numerical majority of this House have the power.

They can pass this bill and leave to the courts to supply what we have left undone.

Any attempt by any party, under the plea of necessity, to take the property of the innocent as a punishment for the fault of the guilty is dishonest as well as unconstitutional. It will be encouraging the spirit of plunder.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENS. I am sorry the gentleman had not more time, for his argument is so germane to the amendment. [Laughter.] I regret that he should not have a larger privilege; but if it were granted to him some of the rest of us would ask for the same thing. As he did not get to the amendment we are not enlightened enough to vote with him, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin, withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GANSON. I demand the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 47, nays 51, not voting 84; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Beaman, Boutwell, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Eckley, Eliot, Fenton, Frank, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Orlando Kellogg, Littlejohn, Loan, McBride, McIndoe, Moorhead, Morrill, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Perham, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Stevens, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, Webster, Wilson, and Woodbridge—47.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, James S. Brown, Chanler, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Herrick, Holman, Philip Johnson, Kallidisch, Kernan, Lazenby, Marcy, Marvin, McAllister, McDowell, McKinney, James R. Morris, Morrison, Leonard Myers, Odell, Pendleton, Pruyn, Robinson, James S. Rollins, Ross, Strouse, Tracy, Wadsworth, William G. Steele, Stiles, Joseph W. White, Williams, and Fernando Wood—51.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, Baxter, Blaine, Blair, Bliss, Blow, Boyd, Brandegee, Brooks, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Coffroth, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Denning, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, English, Farnsworth, G. Harris, Charles M. Harris, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hubbard, Hutchins, Jockes, William Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Kuapp, Knox, Law, Le Bond, Long, Longyear, Mallory, McClurg, Middleton, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Nelson, Noble, John O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Gadall, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, Stuart, Sweat, Thayer, Thomas, Voorhes, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wheeler, Wilder, Windom, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—84.

So the amendment was not concurred in.

During the roll-call,

Mr. NORTON stated that Mr. ARNOLD was detained at home on account of sickness.

Mr. L. MYERS stated that Mr. AMOS MYERS had left the House on account of illness.

And then, on motion of Mr. MORRILL, (at ten o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 16, 1864.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. BOWMAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FOOT presented seven petitions of citizens of Vermont praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military and naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of citizens of Boston, Massachusetts, and a petition of citizens of Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military and naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SUMNER presented six petitions of men and women of the United States praying for the abolition of slavery, and such an amendment of the Constitution as will forever prohibit its existence in any portion of the Union; which were referred to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

Mr. WADE presented a memorial of citizens of Ohio engaged in the manufacture and working of marble, remonstrating against any increase of the duty on marble; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

TREASURY PRINTING AND ENGRAVING.

Mr. WADE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire in what manner the engraving and printing of the fractional currency, bonds, notes, and other Government securities is conducted in the Treasury building; what safeguards have been adopted for the protection of the public interests, and to secure the integrity of the said issues of notes and bonds, and for the safety of the dies and plates used in printing the same; what expenditures have been made for the purchase of machinery, and for labor and materials; what alterations have been made in the Treasury building for the accommodation of the said work, and the cost of the same, as well as their effect upon the stability and convenience of the building; from what appropriations the said expenditures have been made; and that the said committee have power to send for persons and papers.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of New Albany, Indiana, praying that New Albany may be made a district for the inspection of steamboats and for the collection of customs, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 520) for the relief of Samuel Beaston, master of the schooner George Harris, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 519) repealing certain provisions of law concerning seamen on board of public and private vessels of the United States, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 290) for increased facilities of telegraph communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States and the Territory of Idaho, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of William Rogers Hopkins, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the petition of the American Shipmasters' Association, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 310) for the promotion of commerce and the improvement of navigation. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 266) to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes, recommend that the Senate non-concur in the amendment. I make that motion, and also that the Senate ask for a conference on the subject.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether we had not better simply non-concur. That will send the bill back to the House of Representatives, and put it upon the House to ask a conference, as I think ought to be done in this case, as the amendment here, which purports to be a substitute for the entire bill, is in all essential particulars the bill itself. I think when the other House sends to us an amendment as a substitute to our bill, which amendment is substantially the bill itself, we have a right to non-concur and ask them to take the initiative in any further proceedings.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; I withdraw the motion for a conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

THOMAS J. GALBRAITH.

Mr. WILKINSON. The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas J. Galbraith, asking certain relief, have instructed me to report a joint resolution, and I ask for its present consideration. I presume there will be no objection to it.

The joint resolution (S. No. 67) for the relief of Thomas J. Galbraith was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. POWELL and others. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the resolution. It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Interior and Treasury Departments to settle and adjust the money and property accounts and claims of Thomas J. Galbraith, as agent of the United States for the Sioux Indians of Minnesota, upon principles of equity and justice; and to allow him credit for all moneys and property actually expended by him, in good faith, in and about the affairs of his agency, and for the use of the Indians, upon his affidavit or affidavits, duly sworn to, of such expenditure; and he is to be discharged from all liability for or on account of Indian trust property, which, by his affidavit or affidavits, shall clearly appear to have been destroyed or taken and carried away by hostile Indians, or by the troops or citizens of the United States, or of the State of Minnesota, against his will, and without his fault or connivance. In addition to these affidavits, the officers may, in their discretion, require corroborative, countervailing, or explanatory evidence of the matters and statements in the affidavits set forth and sworn to.

Mr. POWELL. It strikes me that that is a very loose mode of legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. POWELL. I have no objection to its being considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No objection to its present consideration being made, the joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. POWELL. It strikes me that to allow the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle those accounts upon the mere affidavit of the party as to the property that was in his hands is not proper. There ought to be some further evidence about it. I do not object to the present consideration of the resolution, but I merely state this as a reason why I cannot vote for it. If the Senator will amend it so as to provide for proof outside of the affidavit of the party, it would perhaps be proper to pass it.

Mr. WILKINSON. I think I can explain the case to the satisfaction of the honorable Senator from Kentucky. There is at the end of this resolution a proviso that the accounting officers may require such further proof to sustain the affidavits of Mr. Galbraith, the petitioner, as in their discretion they shall deem necessary and proper.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Allow me to make a suggestion to the Senator from Minnesota. The provision of the resolution, as I understand the reading of it from the Secretary's table, is that as to property which was taken by hostile Indians his affidavit shall be sufficient, and he shall not be accountable for it. I have no objection to that. The resolution also provides that he shall not be accountable for property taken by our own citizens. There is no reason in the world why his affidavit should be taken for that. He can obtain the testimony of the people of Minnesota who took the property, and account for it, and he ought to be responsible for it if they have taken it. To that portion of the resolution I object.

Mr. HARLAN. I suggest to my friend from Minnesota that perhaps the resolution had better go over and be printed, and each Senator can have it on his desk in the morning.

Mr. WILKINSON. I will consent to let it go over, and I ask that the resolution and the petition be printed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suggest also that the letters from the Department on the subject be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed, as a matter of course; but the motion to print the petition must go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The papers are short, and I ask by unanimous consent that an order be made to print them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order may be made by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 309) for the relief of Clara Moore, executrix of the late Eli Moore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 311) for the relief of W. H. and C. S. Duncan; which was read twice by its title, and, with papers presented by him, referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 290) for the relief of Rhoda Wolcott, widow of Henry Wolcott, and to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 40) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 291) to amend an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States;" and the joint resolution (S. No. 64) explanatory of an act entitled "An act extending the time for the completion of the Marquette and Ontonagon railroad of the State of Michigan."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 106) to prohibit certain sales of gold and foreign exchange;

A bill (S. No. 282) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the withdrawal of goods from public stores and bonded warehouses, and for other purposes," approved February 29, 1864;

A bill (H. R. No. 513) to detach the counties of Calhoun and Branch from the western judicial district and annex the same to the eastern district of the State of Michigan;

A bill (S. No. 291) to amend an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States;"

A bill (H. R. No. 40) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1865, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. No. 64) explanatory of an act entitled "An act extending the time for the completion of the Marquette and Ontonagon railroad of the State of Michigan."

DUTIES ON SALT.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to suspend all prior orders for the purpose of taking up House bill No. 356, requiring proof of payment of duties on foreign salt before payment of the allowances provided for by the acts of July 29, 1813, and March 3, 1819.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the allowance of bounty to vessels employed in the Bank and other cod fisheries, as provided for in the act of July 29, 1813, laying a duty on imported salt, granting a bounty on pickled fish exported, and allowances to certain vessels employed in the fisheries, and the act of March 3, 1819, amendatory thereof, shall not hereafter be paid to any such vessel until satisfactory proof shall have been furnished to the collector of customs, charged with the payment of the bounty, that the import duty imposed by law on foreign salt imported into the United States has been duly paid on all foreign salt used in curing the fish on which the claim to the allowance of bounty is based.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to say simply that in the remarks I made the other day on the question of the fishing bounties I stated that this bill had become a law. In that supposition I was mistaken, and therefore I make this explanation to the Senate, now.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVENTION WITH PERU.

On motion of Mr. SUMNER, the bill (H. R. No. 521) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of the claims of Peruvian citizens under the convention between the United States and Peru of the 12th of January, 1863," approved June 1, 1864, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act approved June 1, 1864, by striking out, after the word "January," the word "last," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "eighteen hundred and sixty-three;" and also so as to authorize the Secretary of State to pay to each of the persons mentioned in the act the interest that may be found due in accordance with the terms of the settlement of the claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXEMPLIFICATION OF LAND RECORDS.

Mr. HARLAN. I move to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 278.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to know what it is.

Mr. HARLAN. It is a bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands prescribing the terms on which exemplifications shall be furnished by the General Land Office.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 278) prescribing the terms on which exemplifications shall be furnished by the General Land Office was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that from and after the 1st day of July next, all exemplifications of patents, or papers on file or of record in the General Land Office, which may be required by parties interested, shall be furnished by the Commissioner upon the payment by such parties at the rate of fifteen cents per hundred words, and two dollars for copies of township plates or diagrams, with an additional sum of one dollar for the Commissioner's certificate of verification with the General Land Office seal. One of the employees of the office is to be designated by the said Commissioner as the receiving clerk, and the amounts so received are, under the direction of the Commissioner, to be paid into the Treasury of the United States. The fees stipulated are not to apply to authenticated copies which may be required by the officers of any branch of the Government, nor to such unverified copies as the Commissioner in his discretion may deem proper to furnish.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUNISHMENT OF GUERRILLAS.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the House bill to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas and for other purposes, which was up the other morning.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 511) to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes, the question being on the amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. WILSON. On further consultation with the committee I am authorized to propose a modification of the amendment, so as to retain all the words which the committee proposed to strike out except the word "and," in the eleventh line of the first section, the result of which will be to make the bill read, "shall have power to carry into execution all sentences against guerrillas for robbery, arson, burglary, rape, assault with intent to commit rape, and for violation of the laws and customs of war."

The result of this amendment is to confine the bill entirely to the punishment of that class of men for these offenses. I am told by Colonel Holt that in the trials of guerrillas the specifications are always for some act embraced in these words. If the word "and" in the eleventh line be stricken out, it will be confined simply to guerrillas who commit the offenses specified. I hope the amendment will be agreed to, and the bill passed.

Mr. JOHNSON. When this bill was before the Senate at a former day, I rose to support, as well as I might be able to do, the amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs. It was to strike out the words in brackets in the eleventh and twelfth lines and a portion of the thirteenth line, but without meaning, if those words were stricken out, to vote for the bill unless it should be altered in another particular. The doubt that I have now is whether the amendment which the Senator from Massachusetts, with the consent of the Senate, has just proposed, gets clear of the difficulty that I think would have existed in relation to the bill if it had been amended as originally proposed; and that difficulty is that there is no definition at all of who are guerrillas. The bill will read, if amended as now contemplated by the chairman of the committee, so as to confine it to guerrillas who commit robbery, arson, and the other offenses here named; but who are guerrillas? I do not know. There is no designation of the term, as far as I am advised, in the books of criminal law, and in the absence of any legislative definition of the term, if you leave it to the different courts-martial before whom the question may be from time to time pending, there may be as many different decisions as there are differences of views upon the meaning of that term by the different courts-martial or military commissions; and I should prefer, therefore, if it can be done, that there should be some definition of the term itself. The honorable member seems to suppose, if I understood him, that that definition will be found in the bill, if it passes as he now proposes it to pass; but in that I submit he is mistaken. There are two things to be established before the party can be punished. The particular offense designated, irrespective of the party by whom it may be perpetrated, is first to be established, was it a case of robbery, arson, &c.? And the second is, was the perpetrator a guerrilla? If he was not a guerrilla, then he could not be punished under this bill. The purpose of the bill is to draw within the jurisdiction of the military a certain description of our people who are supposed to be outside of the protection to which other citizens are entitled.

Now, I do not know, Mr. President, what has been the practice of the confederate authorities. In one sense, in the legal sense, in the constitutional sense, (and if the war was terminated the courts would so hold,) no commission from any branch of that alleged government would be a defense as against homicide or either of the other species of offenses stated in this bill. If the war was to terminate to-morrow successfully for us, and of course unsuccessfully for the other side, and the commander-in-chief of that army should be indicted for treason, the courts would be compelled to hold that he could seek no defense at all behind a commission issued by a coconspirator and a cotraitor. In one sense, therefore, he would be considered a guerrilla. But as the war is not terminated, and as the principles of humanity demand that this species of warfare, if it can be called warfare, is not to be carried on, which will bring about retaliation from one side or the other, we have been willing to recognize that government as a government in point of fact, and to deal with it, because it is a government in point of fact, as if it was a government legally established, so far as to authorize us to make exchanges of prisoners and to recognize their officers as contradistinguished from their privates, and to make exchanges in the same way in which we would make exchanges if the confederate government had been a long-established and separate foreign government.

Now, I can very well imagine that those who are called guerrillas in the popular sense, and who will be held to be guerrillas by these military commissions, will be found to have been acting under some sort of authority derived from some branch of that confederate government. If we should punish them as having without the slightest authority robbed and murdered, it might lead to retaliation as against our own prisoners, a condition of retaliation which, if possible, I am sure every humane man will agree with me in saying should be avoided. The safety of our troops, the honor of the nation, may demand it; but unless that safety and that honor, or some equally imperative reason, demand it in any particular case all the impulses of humanity would repel it. Now, I should like to know from my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, what he understands by the term "guerrilla." Who is a "guerrilla" in the sense in which the term is used in this bill? If he is authorized to say, and can satisfy me, that "guerrilla" is a well-established term in the law, and so established that to inflict punishment upon the party will not properly subject us to retaliation upon our men who have committed no such offense, then I will vote for this bill, provided it is true that the same object cannot be obtained in a different way.

This bill—I may not perhaps correctly understand it—deals with the offenses mentioned where ever they may be committed. It deals with them, therefore, if committed in Maryland or in either of the loyal States; and if it does, then it takes from the civil authority of those States the right which the constitution and laws of those States give to them and to nobody else—the right to try them. That, I suppose, the committee do not contemplate, and if they did, according to my view, it would be a clear violation of the Constitution. It would be substituting in Maryland military authority for the civil authority. Any of my fellow-citizens may be taken up and charged with these offenses, and called a guerrilla; he may not have committed an offense; he may not, in the judgment of our courts, be a guerrilla at all, in any sense in which that term can be used; but yet he may be convicted, sentenced, and executed by this military commission; and what makes it still more obnoxious, in my view, is that a party in that situation, although within a stone's throw of the President of the United States, and within a nearer distance from the Executive of Maryland, cannot appeal to the executive power of either the State or the United States to save him from the punishment.

There may be, I know, in a time of war, where the Army is a necessity for trying by a drum-head court-martial an offense committed on the spot which is calculated to affect the efficiency of the Army. Nobody, I suppose, ever contemplated that unless, upon the ground of military necessity, unless, upon the foundation of the war power exercised because of the necessity of each case, Congress had a right to interfere with the laws and constitutions of the States, and give the decision of all such questions as the violation of our laws to the judgment of a court-martial. But now what laws are violated upon which this commission is to sit in judgment? Congress has passed no law, has not the authority to do it, for the punishment of murder committed within the limits of the States. The whole jurisdiction in reference to offenses within the limits of the States is with the States; and this military commission, therefore, who are to sit in judgment for the purpose of trying whether a citizen of Maryland has committed robbery, or arson, or burglary, or either of the other offenses named, must look to the laws of Maryland for the purpose of ascertaining what by those laws is murder, arson, burglary, &c.; so that you are giving to this military commission the authority to consider and execute Maryland law. I only mention Maryland by way of illustration. You may be giving them, if there are any military from whom a military commission may be constituted in the State of Massachusetts, the right to decide as against a citizen of Massachusetts whether he has committed murder, arson, burglary, or the other offenses contrary to the definition of those offenses as prescribed by Massachusetts law. I do not believe, with the well-known devotion to liberty which belongs to the sons of Massachusetts, that they ever would consent to be subjected to any other jurisdiction in relation to such matters except their own State jurisdiction, and especially would they not consent to be subjected to a military jurisdiction.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, this is another of the series of strange and absurd bills that these extraordinary times have originated. That the criminals who are designated in this bill ought to be punished, I suppose, nobody will controvert; but all men ought to be punished according to law, and not in conflict with law, and especially with constitution. I should like to have the attention of the honorable Senator from Maryland while I propound a question or two to him. I ask the honorable Senator, who certainly is one of the ablest lawyers not only of the Senate but of the nation, if a military court can take cognizance of and punish for any offenses not arising in the military or naval service of the United States, or in the militia of the States when in the actual service of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The hour of one o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the special order, which is the unfinished business of yesterday, being House bill No. 51, to establish a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to postpone that and all prior orders and take up the tariff bill.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I hope the Senator will permit me to offer an amendment to this bill before it passes from the consideration of the Senate, that it may lie over with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment can be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It can be offered afterwards. I do not want my motion displaced.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Very well; I can wait.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the bill which is now regularly before it. We have been engaged upon it two days; why not finish it? It is a measure of great importance. The public expectation is following it, and large numbers of people are depending upon its passage, numbers counted by the hundred thousand—we hope soon, in the progress of victory, to be counted by the million—being the freedmen of the country.

I say, sir, they have a right to look to our care and protection; and this bill seeks to secure it. I hope, therefore—if I may appeal to the Senator from Maine—that he will not interpose his measure to arrest the final decision of the Senate on a bill which is so humane in its object, in which so many people take an interest, and which is so well calculated to serve the public good. The tariff bill is sure to pass; it can be taken up any day when no other measure is before the Senate; it need not put aside an important measure. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the bill before it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All I can say is that the tariff bill and the internal revenue bill are the two essential measures which we must pass before the Senate adjourns. It so happens that my personal attention is necessary to both of them. I am very sorry that it is so. I should be very glad to be rid of both of them, if I could avoid the labor which I must necessarily go through. The internal revenue bill is before the House of Representatives to-day. It will be probably finished there to-day or to-morrow, and then come to us undoubtedly for a committee of conference; and it is important that when that is done the tariff bill should be a condition to go to the House of Representatives with the amendments that may be made by the Senate. I expect that after that bill is placed in that position, according to the ordinary course of business my personal attention will be necessary to the internal revenue bill, (if I should with the approbation of the Senate happen to be upon the committee of conference, which perhaps is not unlikely under the circumstances,) not only in the ordinary time devoted to such matters, but during the sessions of the Senate in order to get the business through. That was my motive for moving to take up the tariff bill now. I did not see ahead of me any particular time when I could give it that personal attention which it is necessary that I should give to it in the Senate, for some days, or so as to get the bill back to the House of Representatives in time to have the amendments of the Senate to it there considered in connection with the internal revenue bill. I think that is important. In addition, I will say that I have been applied to by many members of the Senate on both sides of the Chamber who have requested that I should bring up this bill and have it disposed of as soon as possible. Having said this, I will only add that the matter is in the hands of the Senate, and I have no wish about it one way or the other. The Senate can do what it sees good. I have done my duty in making the motion.

Mr. SUMNER. We were led to believe at the end of the last week that this week would be left open for the consideration of measures that did not come from the Finance Committee. I think the chairman of that committee so stated himself distinctly to the Senate. With that understanding we have proceeded with the consideration of several measures this week, and yet once or twice the Senator has brought forward measures from his committee which have displaced those we were considering.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator is a little in error. I said last Friday that I was in hopes to get the two appropriation bills to which I then referred, the Indian appropriation bill and the fortification bill, through before the end of that week, and that in that case I saw nothing to interfere with the business of this week. We have since, however, reported the tariff bill, and the question presents itself precisely under the circumstances I have stated. When that bill shall be out of the way, it is probable there will be several days when I shall have no other business to present. But the Senate can judge of this matter as well as I can. I have stated frankly the condition of the two bills, and it is for the Senate to decide what is the propriety of the case in view of the situation of the public business.

Mr. SUMNER. It becomes a question between the importance of the two measures under the peculiar circumstances of the case, one measure having been already proceeded with to a certain stage and there being a chance of arriving at some decision one way or the other very speedily, and the other not having been taken up. Now, I submit that it is bad economy to cut off the consideration of a measure that has been proceeded with for two days in order to take up a measure that has not been touched. I am not aware of any disposition to protract the debate on the bill to establish a Bureau of Freedmen. Certainly there is not on my part, or on the part of the friends of the bill; and I really hope the Senate will be willing to go on with it, and let us before we part this afternoon finish it.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, the other day the President of the United States sent here a message in reference to the military exigencies of the country, and a bill was presented according to the recommendation of the message and the suggestion of the Secretary of War. That bill was considered for a short time and then went over. The Senator from Maine came in the next day and claimed the time which we all gave to him, as we generally do, and as I certainly generally am willing to do. The Senator from Maine then having finished or nearly finished all the business of his committee which was before the Senate, told us that they were engaged in examining the tariff bill, and that the coming week, which is the present week, would be left open for the consideration of other business. Supposing that that was to be the case, supposing that no bills from the Finance Committee were to be called up this week, I yielded to my colleague who had charge of the other measure to which he has referred, as I ought not to have done. He supposed that measure would take but a short time for its consideration, and that the bill in my charge would soon be reached. The Senator from Maine soon came in and claimed Monday, and then the day before yesterday and yesterday were occupied by the bill in charge of my colleague. I have yielded the measure to which I refer, which I have been pressed every day for the last week or ten days to bring to a conclusion, and the Senator from Maine now comes in here and asks us to consider the tariff bill, when I supposed there was no earthly probability of its being touched this week, and I have written to men who have inquired of me in regard to it that it would not come up this week. The Senator from Maine last week promised to give us all this week, but now he comes in to-day in the middle of the week and asks to take up the tariff bill for consideration. I do not like generally to vote against any request the Senator from Maine makes on behalf of his committee, because I know how much he has to do, but I really think this motion of his is contrary to all the understandings we had in regard to this week's work.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I really think that there ought not to be any implied charge against me of a want of good faith, and I am sorry that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] should have indulged in any remark that would lead to a supposition of that kind. The Indian appropriation bill took two days, instead of one, as I supposed would be sufficient for it. It took all Friday and all Saturday, leaving me with the fortification bill still on my hands. I had that taken up this week, and it was disposed of in about an hour. Now, I believe the bill to which my friend alludes has already taken two days in its discussion, and is not much nearer a decision than it was when it began, and I can say the same, I think, in reference to the bill of his colleague that has been discussed for three days.

Mr. SUMNER. Portions of three days.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The most of three days. Each of them has taken more time than both of the bills which I brought forward before the Senate last week and this week. I did make a remark that Senators would probably have all of this week for their bills, and I supposed that would be the case, but I did not presume that my having said so imposed a binding obligation on me not to make a motion in regard to what I consider the necessary business of the Senate, if circumstances should make it proper.

Now, sir, I have simply stated the condition of these two great, necessary, essential measures to carrying on the Government. Senators know as well as I do that we cannot get along without them. I have stated frankly my condition. I have no personal request to make of any Senator in regard to it. I only say that under the circumstances of the case I have felt it my duty to state to the Senate the exact condition of these two bills and the necessities we are under about them. I make the motion, and it is for the Senate to judge. Any decision that the Senate may come to will be quite satisfactory to me, whether it be one way or the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves to postpone the pending and all other prior orders for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 494) to increase the duties on imports and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

RHODA WOLCOTT.

Mr. FOSTER. Before proceeding with the tariff bill, I ask consent to be allowed to make a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive the report.

Mr. FOSTER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 290) for the relief of Rhoda Wolcott, widow of Henry Wolcott, having met, have, after a full and free conference, agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

1. That the House of Representatives do concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows: strike out the words "1st day of January, 1861," and in lieu thereof insert "14th day of November, 1860."
2. That the Senate do agree to the said amendment to the amendment of the Senate.

L. F. S. FOSTER,
B. GRATZ BROWN,
C. R. BUCKALEW,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
ANSON HERRICK,
JAMES T. HALE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. The original bill as it came from the House of Representatives proposed to give to the person named in the bill a pension as the widow of a soldier in the war of 1812, beginning from the time of his death in 1812 or 1813. The Senate struck out the time specified in the House bill and fixed the 1st day of January, 1861, for the time of the commencement of the pension. The committee of conference have agreed to change the time to the 14th of November, 1860, and as the pension is only four dollars a month, the change from the amendment of the Senate makes a difference only of some six dollars, which is certainly a very small matter. I hope the report will be agreed to.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 93) to authorize the Postmaster General to extend the contract with the Overland Mail Company.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. No. 55) in relation to the circuit court in and for the district of Wisconsin, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. F. WILSON of Iowa, Mr. J. S. BROWN of Wisconsin, and Mr. F. E. WOODBRIDGE of Vermont, managers at the conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 450) to provide for the repair and preservation of certain public works of the United States, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. E. B. WASHBURN of Illinois, Mr. J. W. LONGYEAR of Michigan, and Mr. N. PERRY of New Jersey, managers at the conference on its part.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 15th instant approved the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (H. R. No. 149) concerning certain school lands in township forty-five north, range seven east, in the State of Missouri;

An act (H. R. No. 198) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 383) to incorporate the Home for Friendless Women and Children; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 55) granting certain privileges to the city of Des Moines, in the State of Iowa.

TARIFF BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 494) to increase the duties on imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As the bill is a long one, I move that the amendments proposed by the Committee on Finance be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be adopted.

The Secretary read the bill until he reached the first amendment of the Committee on Finance, which was in section one, line ten, to strike out the word "five" after the word "twenty," and to add after the word "upon" the words "and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to make the clause read:

On teas of all kinds 20 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORGAN. As the amendment proposed by the committee is somewhat new and tends to reduce the duty fixed by the House of Representatives, I should be glad to hear what has led to the imposition of an ad valorem duty instead of a specific duty as before.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The 20 cents a pound is the old duty, as the Senator knows. The House of Representatives, on the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means, have added five cents a pound to it. There was a good deal of doubt expressed on all hands whether tea would, under the circumstances, bear a larger duty than was put upon it before. The Finance Committee, however, came to the conclusion that as there was a very considerable difference in the value of the teas imported, it would be worth while to leave the old specific duty, and then put the addition, if any were made, in the shape of an ad valorem duty. It may be a little more in some cases and a little less in others than the House of Representatives propose. We had no very fixed opinions on the subject, but we thought at all events that by making this change the matter would be left open for discussion in a committee of conference between the two Houses, and probably we might arrive at a just conclusion, whereas if we leave the clause precisely as it has come from the House of Representatives the matter will be concluded.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to leaving the matter open for discussion between the two Houses to be decided hereafter, but I object to the passage of the bill with the provision in this form.

Mr. JOHNSON. The present duty on tea, I think, is 20 cents a pound, and the House of Representatives propose to increase it 5 cents specifically. Our committee strike out that increase, but they impose an ad valorem duty of 10 per cent. in addition to the present specific duty. I am very little informed as to the grade of this article or the nature of the article itself in the market, but my general impression derived from conversations with importers of tea has been that it is a very difficult thing to ascertain the real price of the article abroad. There is no general standard by which you can test the price abroad. Most of our importers do not buy the tea in the shape in which it is imported here, but they buy it in the leaf and cure it. All the expense of what may be considered the manufacture of the tea is cast upon the importer who pursues his trade in that way, as the largest of them I believe do. Some do it for less, some for more. The cost of the tea to them is ascertained by the original cost of the leaf, with the addition of the expenses to which they are subjected in fitting it for exportation from China or from Japan, and the expense of freight to the United States. As I understand—the chairman of the committee perhaps has informed himself more fully than I have, and the Senator from New York of course knows more about it than I do—there is no uniform price at any moment. It costs some less and some more, and as this additional ad valorem charge is to be upon the invoice cost, and not upon the home value, it would be exceedingly difficult for the appraiser to ascertain with anything even approximating to accuracy what the invoice cost of the particular article was, unless he took it from the invoice of the shipper. That invoice is not accurate, cannot be made accurate. This trade goes on for a number of months, and they make up the cost of a particular shipment by charging it its proportion of the amount of the cost of a much larger stock; so that it very often happens, as I understand, that the invoice of one shipment, when they settle their accounts at the end of a year, is found to be higher or sometimes lower than it should be. The actual proper cost which should be charged to each shipment cannot be ascertained until the work of the whole season is performed.

Now, I submit to the chairman of the Finance Committee whether it would not be better—it would save these importers a great deal of trouble, and perhaps give the Government more money—to adopt the proposition of the House of Representatives adding 5 cents a pound to the specific duty. These importers, too, will be subjected to the provision which the laws on the subject contain that if their invoice shall be found to be put below a certain percentage of what the appraiser shall find to be the actual proper invoice cost, they will incur a penalty—I forget what it is—10, 15, or 20 per cent., and without any fault of their own. If you add 5 or 10 cents specific duty it seems to me it will perhaps operate more justly than by imposing an ad valorem duty. I make these suggestions of course with comparative ignorance, and will go by the judgment of the Committee on Finance, provided their attention has been, as it no doubt has been, called to the subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose there may be somewhat more difficulty in ascertaining the exact value of tea than of other articles.

Mr. MORGAN. It varies very much.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But there are many other articles in regard to which there is an equal difficulty. Still it seemed to us manifestly proper that where there is such a very large difference in the value of the article imported as there is in different qualities of tea, it might be well to make a discrimination. I do not think that the importation of teas will be troubled very much by the 5 cents additional duty; but if you lay the 5 cents additional duty on the pound, and make it all specific, it has no reference to the cost or value of the article; and the Senator knows as well as I do that there is a very great difference.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know there is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The importers seem to object to this proposition very much; but although I have great respect for many individual men, I have learned in some degree to exercise my own judgment in reference to these matters, irrespective of the arguments of importers or manufacturers. To be sure, the judgment of the committee is necessarily very imperfect, but they come to conclusions on the facts in the best way they can get at them, and it is for the Senate to do the same. I do not suppose there is really any very great difficulty about ascertaining the value of the various grades of teas. If the business is precisely as the Senator from Maryland states, the importers know what the teas cost them when they buy them; they know the cost of manufacturing them, if it may be so called, when they prepare them for shipment, and if they make an honest statement of the cost per pound there is no danger of their suffering. All they have got to do is to state it fairly and honestly according to what they know. If they pay the money in the first place, and in the next place if they manufacture the article and it has no market price, it is not a subject of fluctuation; they know the actual cost on the spot. At any rate, I think there is enough of value in the suggestion not to conclude the matter as it stands in the bill, but to adopt the amendment of the committee and let it be further considered.

Mr. HALE. I do not know anything about this particular tax, but there is one principle which has been stated by the chairman of the Committee on Finance to which I do not assent. Anybody who has been conversant with the legislation of Congress for the last few years must have noticed the great tendency that there is to leave everything to be adjusted by committees of conference at the last; and we pass bills when we do not know what is in them, simply because they have gone to committees of conference and in the course of time those committees have made the best report they could. The result has been that the laws in many cases have been made by committees of conference instead of the two Houses of Congress. Now, sir, instead of refusing to make an amendment, or making an amendment, trusting to a committee of conference to adjust any mistake there is in it, I think the effort of Congress should be to fix legislation itself, and leave as little as possible to committees of conference.

Mr. CLARK. This matter was very carefully considered by the Committee on Finance, and I think there is very good reason underlying the action of the committee. It is the information of the committee that the production of tea has very much diminished in China, especially of the higher grades, by the action of the rebels in that empire. The finer teas are produced mainly in certain latitudes where the rebels there have been operating largely. The disparity between the price of those finer teas and the lower teas is very large now, and by the non-production of the finer kinds it will evidently be more from time to time. Now, while the committee keep the duty, as it has been, a fixed duty, that is a duty per pound of 20 cents upon all kinds of tea, it seemed to them that if an additional duty was imposed it might as well be of an ad valorem kind to meet that very discrimination and distinction in regard to teas. It is not a new principle. On many articles we impose a fixed specific duty and an additional ad valorem duty.

Mr. JOHNSON. It has not been done in this case before.

Mr. CLARK. Not in regard to tea; and the committee on first consideration did not propose an ad valorem duty. In fact, their consideration at first mainly was whether there should be any additional duty at all, whether the present duty of twenty cents a pound was not as much as the article would bear, because the information of the committee is that only about one half the amount of tea that was produced two years ago is now produced, and that only about one half is imported into this country and sold that was imported formerly. The consumption of tea has very much diminished since the duty has been increased. I think the Senator from New York can give information to that fact. The committee, therefore, hesitated whether it would bear an additional duty; but desiring to get all the revenue they possibly could, they came to the conclusion that if any additional duty was imposed, it should be an ad valorem duty of ten per cent., yielding probably as much as the 5 cents a pound specific duty. We cannot tell precisely how much it will yield, but we think it better to assess the additional duty in that way.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the falling off in the higher kinds?

Mr. CLARK. The falling off is mostly in the higher kinds, owing to the non-production of the article and the increased cost of it caused by the rebellion in China, and then the imposition of the high duty on the lower grades. That is the information the committee have.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to have the question divided. There are really two amendments proposed by the committee. The first is to strike out "5" in the tenth line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is divisible.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the question will be first taken on striking out "5" after "20."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be so taken at the request of the Senator.

Mr. CONNESS. I suppose the objection to a specific duty of 25 cents a pound on tea is that under such tax all qualities of tea would be taxed the same; in other words that the cheaper teas would pay as high a tax as teas of a higher quality. If the statement made by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CLARK] be correct, the objection to a specific tax I think is proportionably removed by the fact that the higher grades of tea are produced in less quantities than they were, and that we get a less variable quality of the article than we did before the rebellion in China. The difficulty about this amendment as it suggests itself to my mind is that it gives us all that is objectionable in the two systems of levying duties, the specific and the ad valorem systems.

Mr. CLARK. Allow me to say to the Senator that we have that in a great many cases.

Mr. CONNESS. I am aware of that, but it is a question whether it is desirable to preserve the difficulties of the two systems where we can avoid it. The difficulties of the ad valorem system are very generally understood by all intelligent persons who have given their attention to the matter of imports. I have now in my possession a statement prepared on oath by revenue officers at San Francisco, showing and establishing that for a long period of time the invoices under the ad valorem system had been prepared at San Francisco, and not at the place from whence the goods were exported. There was a regular system of false invoices at that port for a long time, and the cures and remedies that are applicable by diligence on the part of the revenue officers and by prosecutions in the courts have been applied, but it is almost impossible to avoid them. You have no protection in point of fact but in the integrity of the importer on the one hand and the perspicacity and ability of your appraisers on the other. I very much incline to think that the 25 cents specific duty on this particular article had better be adhered to, and the ad valorem system abandoned. I think it probable that will simplify the matter and give us more revenue.

Mr. CLARK. I want to suggest to the Senator and to the Senate that there is already a wide difference between these qualities of teas at the place of production, some of them costing 30, 45, or 50 cents, and others as high as a dollar. Suppose that kind of tea which costs a dollar is very much diminished in production, it goes up very much higher in price of course, and yet you impose on that the same tax precisely as on the lower grades. What is the consequence? You make the poor man who consumes the lower quality pay just as much tax as he who consumes the costly article. You make the tax fall very unequally. By a specific duty of 20 cents a pound we secure the revenue to a very great degree against any such fraud as the Senator apprehends; and I admit what he says in regard to the frauds heretofore practiced, and by the imposition of an ad valorem duty you do get a little more revenue from these higher grades to be paid by those who consume them, as they ought to pay. That is the object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first amendment to strike out the word "five" after "twenty" in line ten of section one.

Mr. FESSENDEN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Cowan, Dixon, Dooley, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hendricks, Hicks, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Richardson, Riddle, Salisbury, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Wilson—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Conness,

Davis, Hale, Harris, Howard, Johnson, Morgan, Powell, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, and Ten Eyck—15.
 ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Collamer, Harding, Harlan, Henderson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Sherman, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the next branch of the amendment, to insert after "pound" the words "and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. HENDRICKS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Ramsey, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, Willey, and Wilson—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Hendricks, Nesmith, Powell, Richardson, and Saulsbury—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Collamer, Dixon, Harding, Harlan, Henderson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morrill, Pomeroy, Trumbull, Wade, and Wright—13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in line thirty of section two, to strike out the word "also" after "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendments were in section two, line forty-nine, to strike out "10" and insert "15;" in line fifty to strike out "50" and insert "75;" in line fifty-two to strike out "10" and insert "15," and to strike out "20" and insert "30;" in line fifty-three after "dollar" to insert "and 25 cents;" in line fifty-four to strike out "20" and insert "30;" in line fifty-five to insert "5" after "40;" after "thousand" in line fifty-five to strike out "$1 50 per pound and 40 per cent. ad valorem;" valued at over $40 and not over $75;" in line fifty-nine to strike out "70" and insert "40;" in line sixty to strike out "$2 50" and insert "$3;" so as to make the clause read:

Third. On cigars of all kinds, valued at $15 or less per thousand, 75 cents per pound and 20 per cent. ad valorem; valued at over $15 and not over $30 per thousand, $1 25 per pound and 30 per cent. ad valorem; valued at over $30 and not over $45 per thousand, $2 per pound and 50 per cent. ad valorem; valued at over $45 per thousand, $3 per pound and 60 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That paper cigars or cigarettes, including wrappers, shall be subject to the same duties imposed on cigars.

Mr. CLARK. These amendments are to make this bill conform to the internal revenue bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, line fifteen, after the word "inch" to insert "and not more than two inches;" and after "or" in line sixteen to insert "less than one inch and not;" and in line twenty to strike out "fourth" and insert "half;" so as to make the clause read:

On bar iron, rolled or hammered, comprising flats less than three eighths of an inch and not more than two inches thick, or less than one inch and not more than six inches wide; rounds less than three fourths of an inch or more than two inches in diameter; and squares less than three fourths of an inch or more than two inches square, 1½ cent per pound.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not propose to say anything about that at this moment, but I simply give notice that at the next stage of the bill, when we come into the Senate, I shall probably call attention to that amendment. I merely make the remark now that I may not be considered as passing it over. I have seen communications in regard to it which I have not yet sufficiently examined.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-eight of section three, to strike out "80" and insert "70;" so as to make the clause read:

On all iron imported in bars for railroads and inclined planes, made to patterns and fitted to belaid down on such roads or planes without further manufacture, 70 cents per one hundred pounds.

Mr. POMEROY. I should like to have a vote on that amendment when we come into the Senate. I am in favor of reducing the rate to 60 cents, which was the previous duty on railroad iron.

Mr. JOHNSON. You are in favor of striking out 80.

Mr. POMEROY. But I am in favor of inserting "60" instead of "70."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That amendment can be moved in the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS and other SENATORS. It can be moved now.

Mr. POMEROY. The question is on the amendment of the Finance Committee, and I suppose that is subject to amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. POMEROY. Then I move to amend the amendment by striking out "70" and inserting "60." That gives us $13 50 a ton in gold, and it is all the railroads can bear. I suppose every Senator has had his attention called to this matter, and it is not necessary to discuss it. Sixty cents a hundred pounds is the duty we have been paying on railroad iron in gold, which amounts now to about $24 or $25 a ton in currency.

Mr. CLARK. The committee gave their attention largely to this matter. They considered well the iron interest, both that which is produced in this country and that which is imported, and concluded on the whole to reduce the rate proposed by the House of Representatives from 80 to 70 cents. Senators will bear in mind that we have increased the internal revenue tax upon iron. We have increased it on pig iron and we have increased it on rolled iron. I went into the matter and made a careful calculation, taking the old tax imposed on iron produced in this country and taking the old tariff duty on iron imported, and I found that to make the duty on imported iron correspond exactly with the tax imposed upon domestic iron we should make this duty 74 cents and a fraction; but considering that there was a large demand for railroad iron, that it was very difficult to supply the iron in this country, and that the mills were all engaged, and very profitably engaged, supplying as much as their capacity would allow them to supply, we concluded to put the duty a little lower and make it 70 cents. The existing duty is 60 cents. We raised it to 70 cents instead of 80 as proposed by the other House. If we carried the duty up in the same proportion that we carried up the internal revenue tax, it should be 74 2-10 cents, instead of 70 as we propose.

Mr. JOHNSON. But the tax under the internal revenue bill is payable in currency.

Mr. CLARK. That is true, but we cannot go into that matter because we do not know what will be the difference between gold and currency. That fluctuates. We are making a law to last until it shall be the pleasure of Congress to alter it again. The difference between gold and currency fluctuates; it may be higher to-day, it may be lower to-morrow, and vice versa. We endeavor to do what we think will be just in regard to this matter. If you make a discrimination in regard to railroad iron you may go through the whole tariff and make the same discrimination and nobody can tell where you will finally land. All the duties on imported goods are payable in coin. The duties on railroad iron are not alone payable in coin, but all the duties alike are payable in coin.

The principle that has governed the committee in adjusting this tariff has been to make the duties correspondent with the internal revenue, to advance the one as we advance the other, keeping in mind that some articles could bear a still heavier tax so that we could get more revenue, but we thought we ought not to impose a duty on railroad iron more than it would bear for the purpose of getting revenue, because there is such a demand for it in certain quarters to be laid down under contracts already made, and if we impose a very heavy duty it would lead to the countermanding of those orders. The information of the committee is that large numbers of orders have already been countermanded. The committee do not desire to prohibit it coming into the country for the wants of the country, neither do the committee desire to break down the domestic manufacturers. They adjusted the two, and the committee thought that 70 cents was the proper point for them to fix, keeping in mind these two considerations. It is 60 cents now; the House of Representatives propose to put it at 80. We thought that too high, and took the medium ground, making it 70.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the tax in the internal revenue bill?

Mr. CLARK. Two dollars a ton on pig iron, and three dollars on bar iron. It is about 3 per cent. on the whole.

Mr. HENDRICKS. On railroad iron?

Mr. CLARK. On the manufacture of railroad iron it is about 3 per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no doubt the committee have considered, and, to use the language of the honorable member from New Hampshire, have "largely" considered this question, meaning by it that they have maturely considered it. The objection I have to this amendment is not, if it could be collected without materially affecting the public interest, that I would object to fixing the duty at 70 cents, or even to the amount named by the House of Representatives; but the prospect of its being raised from the present tax which is 60 cents, and upon the faith of which the present orders have been given that are now unexecuted, has, as the honorable member tells us, led to a great many of those orders being countermanded, and countermanded because the railroad companies who had ordered the iron felt that they would not be able to meet their contracts.

Mr. CLARK. I meant that they had been countermanded because of the great increase proposed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand that. Now, I am very apprehensive that they will not be able to meet the increase of 10 cents a hundred pounds upon the present duty as proposed by the committee. There is no competition in point of fact now between the foreign manufacturer of railroad iron and the domestic manufacturer.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. JOHNSON. When I say there is no competition I mean there is none to any extent; and I say so for this reason, which was given by the honorable member from New Hampshire himself: all our manufactories of iron are now engaged on behalf of the Government; they cannot supply the demand for railroad iron; they will not undertake to supply that demand; and all the railroad iron that the country has needed for the last four or five months, and will need perhaps during the continuance of this rebellion, must be supplied from abroad; and the only question is whether the companies can meet the price which railroad iron bears abroad with the duty which you propose to put upon it. If they cannot, or if that be doubtful, it seems to me to be better to lose the difference in the revenue which we may be able to collect, even if the iron came in (but it would not come in according to my hypothesis) between the 60 and the 70 cents, than to put an end to these improvements of ours. Six months, ay, one month during which these improvements may be arrested, will lose to the country more than the whole amount which will be realized by a duty of 70 cents instead of 60 cents.

I do not know how it is with other railroads, but the railroad of which I know more than any other, because of its locality, the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, has been obliged to supply its whole demand for railroad iron from abroad, and I think that company have now large outstanding orders given upon the faith that the tariff on railroad iron, as it existed at the time the orders were sent out, would not be changed; but I do not know whether they have countermanded those orders, nor do I know that they will not be able to meet their contracts. They are comparatively a very rich company. Notwithstanding the inroads upon their road made by the rebels, they have been doing an immense business, and have been able to pay 6 per cent. besides reconstructing their railway, because of the peculiar locality of the road, and the condition of the country in other respects, which has increased in some measure the business they otherwise would have had. But if it be at all doubtful whether a duty of 70 cents will not put it out of the power of the railroad companies whose roads are now in progress or those who want railroad iron to repair their roads to get it from abroad, and they cannot get it here, I suggest that it would be better to leave the duty as it now is, at 60 cents.

Mr. CLARK. The tax upon all domestic iron would put it out of their power to get the iron, as much as the increased duty of 10 cents a pound on foreign iron would. I desire to state one fact to the Senator, and to the Senate, in regard to the value of iron, stated by those who are desirous of importing iron; and that is that a ton of American railroad iron is worth now from $115 to $120, and a ton of foreign imported railroad iron is worth about $116 or $119. I see that the Senator from Kansas shakes his head.

Mr. POMEROY. I presume the Senator has not been purchasing any lately.

Mr. CLARK. No, but I have the information from those who are importing it, who want to get the duty down, and who would therefore be likely to put the foreign article as high as it would bear. If they bear that relative value in the market, being about the same in price, the American iron being worth a little more, because somewhat better in quality, if we were to impose on the foreign article a duty not over that which we impose upon the domestic article we should be doing what was just. Now, I submit to the Senator from Maryland that while it is not, as he says, desirable to interfere with the operations of trade, it is not desirable to break down the iron establishments of this country.

Mr. JOHNSON. I admit that.

Mr. CLARK. They are now in a prosperous condition it is true; but if it should be found that by admitting the foreign article at a less duty than would correspond with the tax upon the domestic article we had injured those establishments—

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator will permit me to put myself right in this matter. I object to the amendment merely so far as it relates to taxing the railroad iron, and I do that on the ground that the domestic manufacturers are not in a condition to supply it.

Mr. CLARK. I do not understand that the Senator from Maryland is wrong now; but I was directing his attention to a consideration that he did not advert to. While we have been desirous to admit the railroad iron at as low a duty as is consistent with the interests of the country, we have been careful on the other hand not to admit it at so low a duty as would in any way injure the labor and establishments of our own country. That is the point we have endeavored to attain.

Mr. POMEROY. I have usually, I believe, sustained the views of the Finance Committee in regard to their efforts to increase the tariff. I think I feel as sensibly as any man can the necessity of doing it. The condition of the country at this time is such as, it seems to me, to demand a very large revenue; and if it were not for that consideration I should have proposed that the duty on railroad iron be taken off entirely. The condition of things now is such that it is almost impossible to build any railroad in this country. The scarcity of labor, and the high price of labor, and the extraordinary price of all other articles among us, make it almost impossible now to build a railroad anywhere; and I think if it were not a time of war I should have followed the example of the Senators from New England when they were building their railroads some years ago, and proposed to take off the duty entirely. I lived in Massachusetts when they were making every possible effort to build railroads in that State; and by some legislation of Congress I think the tariff on foreign iron was remitted for a given period; I do not remember how long; I have not the act before me. I say that if it were not now for the fact that we need revenue more than we did at any former period, and were it not that it is indispensably necessary for the success and prosperity of the country and for the prosecution of the war to raise money, I should have moved to strike off for one year the duty on railroad iron altogether. I believe the increase of the general wealth of the country caused by the construction of railroads which cannot be built at present prices would be such that the country would not on the whole be a loser; but I would not propose that at this time. I think this interest of the country can do no less, however, than to ask that the tariff remain as it was in this respect. Now, $13 50 in gold is paid on a ton of railroad iron, and that makes those who are building roads in this country now pay between two and three thousand dollars a mile.

In regard to the use of the foreign iron and American iron, I can say that the best quality of foreign iron is worth as much per ton as the American iron, every dollar of it. There are inferior grades, to be sure, that sell for less, but the best quality of foreign iron is equal to any American iron not only in price but in durability. There was a prejudice at one time against using foreign iron because some poor foreign iron was imported at a low price and sold and used and found to be brittle and almost worthless. That applies, however, only to a poor quality of the foreign iron. The best quality of A No. 1 rail iron made abroad is equal in quality and value to the standard of any American iron produced in this country. I know something of the American manufacture and I know that last year some of our establishments divided over 50 per cent. on their capital. They have been flourishing beyond precedent during the last twelve months, and in fact almost ever since the war began. It is an interest that does not need this protection. It has become in fact almost a monopoly in itself. I know establishments in Pennsylvania that last year not only watered their stock but paid 50 per cent. after that.

The internal revenue tax to which the Senator from New Hampshire referred, I believe is about $3 a ton in currency. Last year it was $1 50, and the additional $1 50 put on this year in currency only makes it just about equal to $1 50 paid last year or the year before in gold. When we consider the advanced price of iron, the internal revenue tax on it is not anything of moment. All that you put on in that way the manufacturers will just advance so much on their iron. You might put on $10 internal revenue tax on iron to-day, and the only effect would be that the manufacturers would add just $10 to the price of their iron and sell it and divide their 50 per cent. as before.

But I am not going to argue the question here. We shall have another vote on it in the Senate, perhaps, though that will not be necessary if my amendment prevails. I think the interest of the country would be subserved by my proposition. I know that the interest of the poor struggling States in the West will be subserved by enabling them to build their railroads. They cannot build them if they have to pay $2,327 a mile more than they have been in the habit of paying hitherto for the railroad iron.

Mr. WILKINSON. This duty upon railroad iron operates with peculiar hardship upon the new States. New England and all the older States have their railroads already built and in operation. We have now three or four companies in Minnesota who are trying to build their roads, and one of them has already entered into a contract for the iron for about three hundred miles. The president of that road told me the other day that if the duty proposed by the House of Representatives be put upon iron, he would be obliged to countermand the order entirely, but that they could pay and lay the track under the old duty of 60 cents per hundred pounds.

As was said by the honorable Senator from Maryland, the development of the country is worth a little something even in war times. It matters a little something to the country whether these railroads shall be built or whether they are to be stopped. It seems to me that, considering the present price of gold, the duty of 60 cents a hundred pounds is all that the purchasers of iron can stand, particularly when you consider the scarcity of labor and the great difficulty that railroad corporations are laboring under in order to build their roads. It is almost an impossibility now, if the entire duty on iron was taken off, to go on and construct railroads as the necessities of the country require. The labor of the new States is in the battle-field. The great body of the young laboring men of my State and the new States generally are to-day at the front, fighting this rebellion, and it is a little harsh, inasmuch as this duty bears more heavily on the new States, who have not their railroads already constructed, to impose this additional duty upon railroad iron. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Kansas will be adopted.

Mr. CLARK. I agree with the remark made by the Senator from Minnesota, that the development of the country is something. I go further; it is a great deal. But the railroad interest is not the only interest in the country, nor the only interest by which the country is developed. I do not agree with the Senator from Kansas, if he means that it would be well for the country that these iron establishments should stop for a year; because to let the iron come in free would result in destroying these establishments in the country, and I do not agree with him that it would be well, for the sake of building a road through any State in the West or from one side of the continent to the other, to break down the labor of the country.

I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that a more wise policy, in my judgment, would be that while we build the railroads we should build up on each side of the railroads all the various branches of industry which support and sustain the railroads.

Mr. WILKINSON. I should like to ask the Senator whether the iron interest has not prospered under the duty as it now stands?

Mr. CLARK. Under the great demand for products in this country, almost every business in the country has prospered. I agree with the Senator from Minnesota, if he means that these establishments have been largely employed. All the establishments of iron in the country have been called upon by the Government and other interests to furnish their products. But supposing the war be over and there is not a call for that branch of the manufacture, what becomes of your iron establishments? Then they need the protection they always have had; and you must not adjust your tariff particularly to the situation of to-day, but to the great and continuing interests of the country; and I want to see not only one interest, not only this or that interest developed, but I want to see all the interests of the country developed.

And here I want to make a remark to the Senator from Minnesota, in the utmost kindness, and that is in regard to the labor of the West, which he says is on the battle-field. That has been a serious drain on the new States; but he will bear in mind one thing beyond that, that while the old States have furnished their quotas, many of them, and others have been endeavoring to furnish their quotas upon the battle-field, they have furnished many of the young men that have gone to the West and then gone to the battle-field. They have thus furnished twice over. You cannot expect us to furnish the new States of the West with settlers and to furnish our full quota always and readily on the battle-field besides. If it is a drain on them, it is a drain on us also; and in this remark I do not mean to be invidious, nor to say that the West has not done all and even more than all she could be called on to do. I feel a glory in her history. But I desire to suggest to the Senator that, while they have been called upon, we have been called upon and also have supplied many of the men which I glory have gone from their country and sustained their country and our country together. We all bear these burdens, and we must all bear them, and we should be willing to stand together.

While I will go as far as any man in protecting the railroad interest; while I will go as far as any man in helping my friend from Kansas to build his road, and my friend from Minnesota to build his road; and while the committee will go as far as anybody, we ask that you shall consider also the other interests of the country; that while you protect one you shall not strike down another. The committee have endeavored to go between the two. While they do not go with the House of Representatives, and put upon railroad iron a tax of 80 cents a hundred pounds, they would not either go to the old tariff and put simply a tax of 60 cents; but they propose a tax of 70 cents. That would not be so high as we should impose if we followed the rule of proportion to impose a corresponding duty upon the foreign article with that which we impose on the domestic product.

I am told—I did not hear the remark of the Senator from Maryland—that he said or intimated that but small quantities of railroad iron were furnished in this country. Sir, very large quantities are furnished in this country, and it is an interest that should be protected. I am told that the interest is large; I know it is large. I did not preserve the figures that were given to us, but the interest is a very large one, and one which the country should protect.

Now, let me say here, once for all, that I desire to see this country a great manufacturing shop—if I may so speak—not only a manufacturing shop but an agricultural region besides; that we shall rely upon ourselves, and produce for ourselves, and support ourselves, and if the Governments of the Old World feel any hostility to the republican institutions of the New I want that the time shall come when we can say to them, "Thank God, we can live and will live without you." So, sir, while I would say to these railroads, "Go to the old countries and buy the iron which you need, still do not break down these establishments which we have at home."

Mr. WILKINSON. I hope that the honorable Senator from New Hampshire did not suppose that in my allusion to the embarrassments of the West at this particular time I intended to draw any comparison between the West and the East.

Mr. CLARK. Not at all. I only desired to present a further consideration.

Mr. WILKINSON. There is one great difference, however, now between the two districts of country. The East is rich; the West, these new States, as a general rule, are poor; their people have just about the same industry, and the same patriotism, and the same devotion to the cause of their country that the East has. I do not suppose they have any more. I am sure the country will not say they have any less. But in advocating this amendment I do not, as the honorable Senator says, advocate the railroad interests. I advocate the interests of the country. I do not care how much you tax a railroad company, provided you do not stop the building of roads, the development of the resources of the country. What are any of the new States worth, or any of our old States worth, if it were not for the railroad system? What could we have done to-day in putting down this rebellion but for our railroad system all over the country? It matters not to me whether the railroad companies make money or lose money, the nation gains by their construction. When railroads are built in the new States they become great States at once, they are brought nearer to the seaboard, property is equalized, and the productions of the new States, under a generous railroad system, will add enormously to the wealth and to the treasure of the nation. In all legitimate and proper ways it is wise, in my judgment, for the country to encourage the building of railroads in the new States, not for the benefit of the corporations, but for the benefit of the country at large, for the development of its resources, for the purpose of augmenting its wealth.

We have, as I said before, in our own State about four hundred miles of railroad under contract. The iron has already been purchased; it has not arrived here yet; and it now seems to me—and I am so advised—that if we raise this tax, those orders will have to be countermanded, and instead of the Treasury profiting by it the Government will actually lose by it; instead of getting the 60 cents on the hundred pounds, you will get nothing, because they cannot afford to pay. The reason of it is obvious. As the Senator from Kansas said, it is a very difficult matter to build roads now in this embarrassed condition of the country under the most favorable circumstances, and I think it is wise in the Government to do everything in our power to favor the construction of new railroads in that section of country where they are most needed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I regret exceedingly that I am compelled to differ from my friend from Minnesota on this occasion. If I had my way I would absolutely prohibit the introduction of foreign iron. Our mountains are filled with the purest ores on the face of the earth. This nation to-day should be an exporter of iron instead of an importer. There is no reason on earth why we should buy a single pound of iron from any other nation on the face of the globe.

But at present the question is, what tax, what duty will raise the largest revenue? If you can show me that the tax imposed by the committee will raise a larger revenue than any other, I ask no further question. During the continuance of this war individual interests must suffer and will suffer. All individual interests suffer. It is unavoidable. We are in a state of war. The question is, can we save this nation, can we carry this Government through financially? And individual interests are not to be taken into account in the slightest degree while that condition continues. If I had my way, I would raise a wall of fire between this nation and Great Britain. I not only would not allow her iron to come here, but I would not allow a single fabric manufactured in Great Britain to enter a single port of ours during the continuance of this war. What do we owe Great Britain, sir? She has sent out cruisers, English ships, built of English timber, manned with Englishmen, provisioned with English provisions, sailing under British colors, to prey upon our commerce, until she has virtually driven that commerce from the face of the earth. Sir, I am prepared to-day to say to Great Britain, "Pay that bill, principal and interest, and there shall be no commercial intercourse between you and us until that bill is paid," and if she did not pay the bill, and England got into war with any Power on earth, I do not care if it was the King of Dahomey, I would let loose a fleet of fast-sailing steamers that should make her drink the cup to its dregs. That is what I am prepared to say to Great Britain to-day. We owe her no comity, and I will give her no comity by my vote. I hope the result of this duty will be to prohibit the introduction of a pound of English iron until the end of this war, and let railroad interests and any other interests suffer; it is nothing to me. I am for the tax and the highest tax.

Mr. WILKINSON. It would do very well, if Minnesota had all her roads built as Michigan has, to talk in this way, but our roads are not built yet. For instance, there is one company in my State that will pay under the old duty more than a million dollars into the Treasury of the United States on iron which they have already contracted for or bargained for. If the bill be passed as the House of Representatives sent it to the Senate, or if this tax be very materially raised, the orders will be countermanded, and the Government will not get one dollar into the Treasury. It will receive now more than a million dollars from my State alone under the rates of duties as they stand. So the Government is not aided any by prohibiting this iron from coming from Europe.

I always have been a pretty high tariff man. I do not believe in encouraging foreign manufacturers very much, but I do not believe at this time it is wise to lay so heavy a duty on a particular article as to prohibit the construction of works of internal improvement which may be necessary to the prosperity and advancement of the nation.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very unwilling to prolong the debate, but yet I cannot quite agree with the Senator from Michigan in favor of prohibition, nor can I agree entirely with those who are advocating a less duty on account of certain special interests, on account of railroads still to be built. I should be very glad myself to accommodate those interests, but the question is one of much higher importance. It is a question of revenue; it is a question of national importance; and I shall be governed entirely, not only in relation to this matter of iron which is now before us but in considering every part of the bill, by the national necessities of the case. The proposition of the Senator from Kansas is to reduce the duty to 60 cents a hundred pounds. That is the present rate. The Finance Committee propose to make it 70 cents; the House of Representatives have made it 80. If the Finance Committee are satisfied that a greater amount of revenue will be derived from the duty as fixed by them I shall sustain the committee, because I deem it of the highest importance that we should pass a tariff for revenue, not a prohibitory tariff, not a protective tariff, but a tariff to meet the present necessities of the Government. I shall, therefore, sustain the report of the committee.

Mr. POMEROY. I only desire in a single word to reply to the Senator from New Hampshire, who seems to think that this is a movement toward breaking down the iron interests of the country. So far from that it is only necessary to state the fact that the iron interests of the country under the present tariff have prospered beyond all precedent, and this proposition is not to lower the tariff; it is no blow at the iron interests of the country. I know the internal revenue tax upon that interest is a slight tax. The price of the iron has increased over forty per cent. from what it was before we levied the tax. But if they are able under the present tax to make dividends beyond all precedent, and beyond those of any other corporations in the country, and it is impossible for them to supply the demand, I want to know how it is a blow at the iron manufacturing interests of the country to let the tariff remain as it is.

Now, the Senator very well remarks, the war will be over after a little, and then there may not be the demand that there is now. No one of us can tell for an absolute certainty, I admit, what the demand will be; but what are the probabilities of a demand? The whole southern country have manufactured no iron, and I suppose imported but little. Their railroads must be out of repair. Our Army do little else when they come to a railroad than bend and destroy the iron, make it as useless as they can; and when the war is closed those roads must be rebuilt, and then all the manufacturing establishments in the country that are making railroad iron and building locomotives will have enough to do. You cannot get a locomotive now in twelve months in any manufacturing establishment in this country; their contracts reach over twelve months ahead; and if the war should stop to-day, instead of this interest being diminished it would be increased. The demand for railroad iron and for locomotives, from the very fact of the destruction they have been subject to during the war, would increase the business largely. I venture to say that there will be fifty per cent. more iron laid down during the next year, if we have peace, than there ever has been laid in any previous year.

Mr. CLARK. Allow me to make a suggestion to the Senator on this point in regard to the production of locomotives, and the difficulty of getting them. The Senator is right; there is a difficulty; and why? Because that business had become so poor before the breaking out of the war that almost all of the locomotive shops in the country had ceased to manufacture. There was not a locomotive establishment in all my region of country that had not stopped. There were two right in my own city, but both, by the very poverty of the business, had broken down, had ceased to manufacture. Now there is a little time when there is a demand, but you cannot induce some of these establishments to go into it again because it is so fluctuating.

Mr. POMEROY. I cannot tell how it is with the manufacturing establishments in New Hampshire; I am not acquainted with those; but in New Jersey and Massachusetts I know they are pressed beyond precedent and have been for a year back. They have flourished not only up to the war, but since the war.

Mr. CLARK. The same would be true in regard to another interest; for instance take the woolen interest. The Government are consuming so large an amount of woolen manufactures for the clothing of the Army and other matters of that kind that it calls into exercise all the power of the mills; but would the Senator think it just, while we impose a duty upon wool all over the country and a tax upon that manufactured, that there shall be no corresponding protection against the foreign article? While you adjust one side you must adjust the other too.

Mr. POMEROY. There is a great difference between the production of wool in regard to the interests of the country and that of building railroads. The railroad interest of the country promotes the development of almost every other interest in the country. The production of wool is simply a production of one interest of the country, and I do not know that the wool-growers need the tariff that we put upon it. We get some revenue on it, but it is not worth anything as protection, because the very kind of wool that we put the tariff upon, the fine Saxony wool that the tariff is highest upon, cannot be produced in this country. You may bring the very same sheep on which that wool is grown in foreign countries, and place them here, and they will produce a different article of wool. You cannot produce the same peach if you transplant it to another climate, and you cannot grow the same wool. Wool is like any other product; it is subject to the climate and the country where it is produced. This tariff on fine wool is no protection, because we cannot produce the article in this country.

I only want to add that the Senator from Michigan not only would have this tariff increased, but he would have it prohibitory; and still further, the British people having behaved so badly, if they get into a war with anybody else he would turn in and fight them.

Mr. CHANDLER. As they have been fighting us.

Mr. POMEROY. It occurs to me if they have behaved themselves so that we should fight them at all, we ought not to wait for them to get into a war with some other nation. I do not think it is the highest point of gallantry to strike a man when he is engaged in fighting somebody else.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, JUNE 17, 1864.

NEW SERIES....No. 189.

I have never thought the etiquette of the thing was very good for one nation to fight another while engaged in a foreign war. I hold that if we should fight Great Britain at all we should fight them on principle, whether they are engaged in war with another nation or not, and not take advantage of their weakness and then pitch in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let me beg of gentlemen not to raise such a discussion on this bill. This is going off on another tack entirely.

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest, as that is a question concerning our foreign relations, I think it ought to be referred to that committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. POMEROY. I am willing to refer the question to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator does not mean to misrepresent me. I did not say that we should go to war with Great Britain; but I would make her drink to the dregs the bitter cup she has presented to our lips. We are engaged in the most gigantic war the world has ever seen, and England sees fit to let loose her cruisers upon our commerce under a pretended—I do not know what you call it—but under a pretended authority from a man by the name of Jeff. Davis, and the result has been that she has driven sixty per cent. of our commerce from the ocean to-day. I simply say I would let her drink the very cup she has presented to our lips in the time of our humiliation and sorrow. I would let private individuals take out letters of marque, and I would let them drive the English flag from the seas as she has driven ours. That is all I said and all I meant.

Mr. POMEROY. I want the Senate to vote whether they will increase this tariff or not. The amendment I have moved is to let the tariff remain, as it has during the last two years, at 60 cents per one hundred pounds. The amendment of the Committee on Finance increases it to seventy cents. That is the only question before the Senate, and the only question on which we are to vote.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The House of Representatives put this tax at a somewhat higher rate, as we judged, than was necessary, in order to equalize the matter with reference to the internal revenue bill. We did not, however, propose to interfere with it much until some representations were made to us by these delegations from the railroad companies; and I would warn gentlemen, while they give the utmost credit in point of intention and integrity to everybody who speaks to them on the subject of these duties, either in the shape of an importer or manufacturer or anybody else, just to hold themselves at liberty to decide the question afterwards according to their own judgment, and not take everything they hear for granted; because there is a style of dealing in generalities to a very large extent on all sides that you will find to be a very unsafe guide in legislation, if you listen to all that is said in reference to these matters.

Now, sir, with regard to this tax the question is a very simple one. We fixed a rate of duty when we adjusted the tariff in the internal revenue bill before. The Senator from Kansas says the manufacturers of railroad iron have been making money, and in some cases making very large sums. Probably that is true in some cases, not in all. The Senator knows that in all times the conduct of affairs under different companies produces different results according to some measure to fortune and in another measure to ability; but it is utterly unsafe to legislate from what appears to be the case in feverish times. You cannot judge of a man in a fever as you can of a man in health, and you cannot judge of a nation in fever as you can of a nation in health. You cannot legislate safely with reference to the present price of gold, because we do not know how long it will continue or what changes will take place, and very rapidly; and so far as the very large price of gold is to be considered as affecting the question, it is offset, so far as the manufacturers are concerned, by other considerations, the very great increased price of labor, and many other facts of a similar description.

The policy of the country, I take it, is to get money to support the Government principally from internal taxation, and to an exceedingly large degree from manufactures. If you propose to get money from them you must enable them to pay it; because if you so legislate as to break down manufacturers or to check their prosperity or affect their prosperity seriously, that source of revenue, which is the great source of revenue, is dried up, and you fail in that most important particular. The tariff is adjusted and was adjusted before upon that simple principle with reference to the internal revenue taxation; and any gentleman will see on the slightest consideration in the world that on no other principle can you possibly accomplish your object. You may lessen perhaps the revenue in some degree derived from imports, but that is of comparatively small importance, because although you depend upon that to a degree, you depend upon the internal taxation to a very much greater degree.

Carrying out that principle we imposed a certain duty upon manufactures of railroad iron, and we imposed, when we passed the last tariff bill, what we supposed to be a corresponding duty upon imports of the same article in order to accomplish the two purposes, get the money from both sources, because that is the great thing, and especially to protect the one great source of revenue. That the manufacturers have prospered may be true; it is true; and it is our good fortune that they have prospered, because we are thereby enabled to derive more revenue from the same source. Instead of oppressing them we increase their ability, and we derive benefit from that increase of ability.

Those are the general principles. I do not mean to enlarge upon them. Senators will find them running all through the bill. It is necessarily founded upon those ideas.

But take this article of railroad iron. We have imposed additional burdens upon the manufacturers of railroad iron in this country, and to protect them we propose to impose a corresponding duty in the tariff. We had these representations from railroad companies and railroad men made to us. To a certain extent, undoubtedly, the representations are correct; the burdens are heavy upon them; but because they are heavy upon them you cannot legislate for the moment and say we will relieve them, when by doing that for a particular interest you may break down this very interest which we wish to sustain, and they will take the consequences hereafter to a much more serious extent than any consequences could be visited upon them now. If you build up the interest in this country, as is the policy, by degrees, you lessen the price of the article. That is a very familiar principle. If you break down the interest, you are in the hands of the foreigner. Suppose, then, that we gain for a few railroads and a few railroad companies a momentary benefit at the present time, but suppose that, at the same time, you stop substantially the manufacture here of much the largest half of all that is used in this country; Senators must see that hundreds of miles of railroad are not built in a day or a week or a month or a year or in several years, and the time must come when they must experience the same difficulty.

But that, however, is all outside of the question of revenue. In taking this matter into consideration we did not feel disposed to go so high as the House of Representatives have gone, or even quite to lay a corresponding duty to that laid in the internal revenue bill, because, as my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. CLARK] said, it was carefully calculated. We did feel disposed to relieve these railroad companies and the railroad interests, because they are the interests of the country just as much as we could; and for that reason instead of putting the duty at 80 cents or even at 74 and a fraction or at 75—which I was rather disposed to do on the whole—it was struck down to 70 cents, below what would be a corresponding duty in point of fact. While we impose this additional burden upon the manufacturers of the article in this country and tell them they must pay so much more into the Treasury, will you hazard their ability to meet the call which you make upon them, and for a purpose which after all is a temporary purpose? That would not be just.

I acknowledge the great importance of the railroad interest; I acknowledge the very great importance of encouraging them; I acknowledge their vast value and consequence to the country; but, sir, I must say that with reference to all those matters there is an interest ahead of them all, and that is the interest of the country as involved in this contest. My opinion has been—it may be a narrow opinion—with reference to the Pacific railroad, important as I considered that great work to be, that it ought not to be undertaken while the country was burdened with so tremendous a responsibility with regard to many matters as it has upon it; that all things that could be deferred should be deferred. The Senate judged differently. I was one of a very small minority. It was undertaken. Sir, important as these matters are, there is one thing still more important, as I said, and that is the obtaining of revenue and the keeping alive the sources of revenue upon which we must depend in order to accomplish these purposes. It was with a view to that, adjusting the tax as well as we could, and leaning to the side of the railroads who desired that this duty should be made as light as possible, that we did strike off one half the increased duty proposed by the House of Representatives; and I think that ought to satisfy any interest or any person connected with it. We thought it was certainly all the forbearance which it was possible to exercise on such a subject.

Mr. WILKINSON. There is one thing about the statement which the honorable Senator has made, and also which the Senator from New Hampshire made, that I do not exactly understand, and which I wish they would explain to the Senate: that if we were to equalize this tax as compared with the internal revenue tax which is laid on our manufactures of iron, it would make the duty on foreign iron 74 cents on the hundred pounds.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from New Hampshire calculated it.

Mr. WILKINSON. I should like to know how he arrived at that estimate; whether he calculates the currency in which the internal revenues are paid, equally, dollar for dollar, with gold, which is paid on all imports?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly. We cannot go into the fluctuations of gold. We do not undertake to do that on any one of these measures.

Mr. WILKINSON. That is the way the calculation is made. These import duties are paid in coin, which is worth twice as much as currency; because gold is worth nearly two hundred per cent. Instead of making them equal, you have just doubled the duty on foreign iron as long as gold stands at one hundred and ninety-eight per cent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then on that principle you might just as well omit laying any duties whatever under the new tariff. We might as well say gold has made all the difference in the world and we will not lay any duties. If we said that, where should we be?

Mr. WILKINSON. I do not ask that that rule shall govern all the way through, but I do think it is legitimate to a certain extent when vast interests of the country are involved. I know very well that in a calculation of this kind, where gold is going up one day and down the next, no satisfactory explanation or opinion can be arrived at in regard to its real value.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Kansas stated a short time since that the iron interests had prospered beyond precedent during the past year or two, and that they had now orders on hand which would last them twelve months, or words to that effect. Sir, I rejoice in that prosperity. I rejoice in the prosperity of any interest connected with the people of the United States, and particularly with the prosperity of the iron interest. What is the result of that prosperity? Every dollar that has been earned by these companies has gone into new foundries, new machine shops, new mills; and to-day what we want is not foreign iron, but the foreign skilled laborers to work up our own iron; and that is precisely what we are receiving by thousands. We wish not to take their iron, but to take their men who make iron; and the high prices that this prosperity has enabled our iron-masters to pay for labor is utterly denuding England of her most skilled labor at the time when we require it. Sir, this is the first instance in the history of the world that in time of civil war immigration into the country engaged in civil war has increased. It is increasing beyond all precedent. At first immigration fell off. We received very few immigrants the first year of this war; but to-day the Governments of Europe are actually trembling at the monstrous tide of skilled immigration that is seeking our shores and seeking our high prices of labor.

As I said before, I rejoice at all this prosperity. I do not care if the iron-masters did make last year, as the Senator says, 50 per cent. The result is that we have 50 per cent. more facilities next year than we had for increasing our product; and again we shall have perhaps more than 50 per cent. additional of skilled laborers to use those facilities in its production. I would go for a higher duty than the committee have recommended if I could have an opportunity to vote for it.

Mr. WILKINSON. It would be unjust in me to do so, but perhaps I should do so, too, if we had as large an iron interest in Minnesota as they have in Michigan.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, it has not been the policy of Congress to discourage railroad enterprises, but on the contrary the policy has been to encourage them. That policy has been shown in the large grants of lands to aid in the construction of railroads. In short, a few years since the duties upon railroad iron were remitted by acts of Congress, and I believe in some cases those duties were paid back after they had been paid into the Treasury, so as to encourage the construction of important lines of railroad.

A Senator who has lived in the eastern portion of the Confederacy cannot very well judge to what extent the construction of a railroad develops the country adjoining it; I would not undertake to say to what extent. It is a very surprising spectacle that is presented immediately after the construction of a railroad through a section of country. The lands that have lain wild and waste are immediately settled upon and improved; they become a source of wealth to the country. The whole country is advantaged, as Congress has declared by its policy for a number of years, by the construction of railroads especially in the newer States. Who can judge of the advantages to the country by the construction of two or three railroads that will go over the State of Iowa; two or three railroads running from the eastern to the western boundary of Minnesota; two or three railroads running westward across the State of Kansas? Why, sir, it would open up an immense region of country that is now lying waste, and it would fill the Treasury to some extent from the production of that labor; more, I undertake to say, than we shall realize by an oppressive tax upon railroad iron.

But what is the argument now? We propose to place an enormous tax upon railroad iron. Of course every Senator admits that to that extent it discourages railroad enterprises. The argument is that we must encourage the production of railroad iron in our own country. It is the old doctrine of a protective policy which has been exploded in this country, which is not the doctrine of this country now, and advantage is being taken of the present condition of the country to fasten that policy upon us; a policy to which, I think, the Northwest will never agree.

But take this single case: I find in the internal revenue bill that passed the Senate very recently that railroad iron produced in the country is taxed $3 on the ton, while this bill proposes to tax imported railroad iron above $15 on the ton, taxing the imported article above $12 more than that which is produced in the country. And yet different Senators say that this interest is likely to languish under a discrimination like that! They cannot insist upon it; and the Senator from Kansas is well supported in his position that scarcely any interest of the country has made money more rapidly than the iron interest since the tax that was imposed two years ago.

I am in favor of a fair tax upon railroad iron, but I am not in favor of one which will be a burden upon the enterprises that are being undertaken in the Northwest. Indiana has no interest in this question, for her railroad system is substantially completed; but Iowa, Minnesota, and Kansas, States in the development of which we all feel an interest, are largely to be affected by this policy.

Mr. CONNESS. Add my State, if you please.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not know to what extent California is interested in it; but, sir, it seems to me strange that during one week of this session we shall pledge the credit of the Government to build a railroad from the Missouri river westward to the Pacific ocean, and during the next week of the session a policy shall be advocated that will oppress an enterprise of that sort. I am not in favor of such a policy. I shall be happy to see a railroad constructed to the Pacific ocean, but I feel an equal interest in the construction of railroads in the great States of the Northwest, those States in which New England as well as Indiana has a large interest.

Mr. CLARK. I cannot agree with the Senator from Indiana that the people of the East do not appreciate the value of a railroad. They appreciate it very largely. They know very well that it adds to the value of every acre of the soil; they know very well that it adds to the value of every ton of coal; they know very well that it adds to the value of every cord of wood and every hundred of the hay and every bushel of the corn. But that is not the only interest. We are in a condition in which we need a revenue and must have a revenue, or the country must perish; and if the country perishes, your acres, your coal, your wood, and your corn will become of very little value. I submit to the Senator from Indiana that if he will just look at the tax that we propose to put upon railroad iron it is smaller in comparison than the duty upon almost any other article in the whole catalogue of the tariff. We do not tax it 20 per cent., nor 19 per cent., as the value of iron is now.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to understand the Senator. This will be a duty of $15 in gold upon what he assumes now to be the value in paper money. Railroad iron is not worth more than $60 a ton in gold.

Mr. CLARK. I have been saying all along to the Senator that I had not made the distinction and did not propose to make the distinction in regard to the currency. We cannot adjust the tariff upon that basis. A ton of railroad iron is worth in New York from $115 to $120 in currency, and the tax on that ton of railroad iron is not 19 per cent.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, he must make his calculations upon a gold basis when he undertakes to tax an imported article, because the importer must pay for it in gold. Our greenbacks will not pay for an article that is produced abroad; but you are taxing an article which when it comes into our ports must be paid for in gold, and the tax is to be paid for in gold.

Mr. CLARK. I understand, precisely, that that will be so substantially if the tax was laid for to-day and only to-day, and things were to continue as they are; but we hope they are not to continue. We are legislating for the country for a long series, it may be, of years; at least for years. While I would go with the Senator, and would encourage railroads, and if the country was at peace and her Treasury was full would be even willing to make the duty the very lowest consistent with our manufactures at home, yet when we need a revenue I submit to the Senate we cannot be expected to do it.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I am unwilling to say that we are now legislating on this matter for a long number of years. Indeed, I regard our present legislation as temporary or provisional in its character. It is to meet the exigency of the hour; and it is on that account precisely that I am ready to follow the chairman of the Committee on Finance, at least in opposing the proposition of the Senator from Kansas.

Let me say, sir, what I have said very often on this floor since this rebellion has begun, that on important propositions there is one rule which I have always followed, and, by the blessing of God, I will follow to the end. It is this: show me how I can best contribute to the strength and the resources of my country, and in that way enable it to reach that end which we all desire, and I shall vote for it. At this moment I know no way in which I can contribute more than by adding to the financial resources. Show me, therefore, how I can best secure means with which to carry on the war to its successful close, and I shall vote for it. If, therefore, by placing the tax at 70 cents I can promise myself a larger income than by placing it at 60 cents, I shall vote for 70 cents. Therefore, as I have said, to that extent I follow the Senator from Maine.

But the question remains (though we are not to vote upon it immediately; the first vote is to be taken on the motion of the Senator from Kansas) as to the recommendation of the committee. The committee propose to cut down the House proposition from 80 to 70 cents. On that I do not know that the Senator from Maine explained himself with perfect clearness. Indeed I did not understand whether in his opinion, after the inquiry which he has necessarily given to the subject, he was satisfied that this interest would not bear a tax of 80 cents, and in that way be more productive to the country than a tax of 70 cents; because if it would be more productive to the country than 70 cents, I should be disposed to adopt it. But as our first vote is to be taken on the proposition of the Senator from Kansas, I say nothing more on the other question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to amend the amendment of the Committee on Finance, by striking out "70" and inserting "60."

Mr. POMEROY. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to know one thing before voting on this question. The Senator from Massachusetts assumes that 70 cents will raise more revenue than 60 cents, and seems to intimate that 80 cents will raise more than 70. I have been informed that orders that were issued for the importation of iron have been countermanded in consequence of the resolution recently passed adding 50 per cent. to the tariff. I should like to know (for I have only conversed with one or two persons about this) whether there is any information which is regarded as reliable to show that by putting a duty of 80 cents or 70 cents on the hundred pounds we would derive a larger revenue than from a duty of 60 cents. I am informed that the effect of putting the duty so high is to prevent the importation of iron.

We might pass a non-intercourse act, and the Senator from Michigan I think avowed himself in favor of that. We are now in the midst of this war spending hundreds of millions of dollars for the purpose of enforcing a non-intercourse act upon our enemies, guarding their coasts. We suppose that that is one of the means of putting down these rebels which the Senator from Massachusetts desires. If we voluntarily impose a non-intercourse act upon ourselves, and it must be upon the ground that a non-intercourse will help us, as the Senator from Michigan seems to think, in that event we had better withdraw our fleets and open to the commerce of the world these rebel ports; for that would ruin them the soonest, according to his view. This is not a mathematical matter, I am aware; but still persons who have dealt in iron and who understand the railroad transactions of the country and the manufacturing interests of the country would be able to arrive at, probably, an approximate correct statement. I did not like the principle which was avowed by the Senator from Maine as the reason for adding to the amount of revenue heretofore imposed. He placed it, as I understood him, solely upon this proposition: that we have lately passed an internal revenue bill in which we have imposed an additional tax upon the manufacturers of railroad iron in this country, and we must therefore impose a corresponding additional tax upon iron that is imported from abroad. Do we know that the tax heretofore imposed was the proper one? That assumes that our legislation heretofore established the true standard, the very thing which I am told it did not do. I am informed that the result of our former legislation has been to stop enterprises and prevent the importation of iron which would otherwise have been imported, and that in fact it has led to the countermanding of orders that have been given for the importation of iron, and will stop the construction of railroads. If that be so we made a mistake before, and this should not go along pari passu hereafter in our legislation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can only say, in reply to the Senator, that the committee were not satisfied that such was the fact.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to know, in regard to that, whether the committee was satisfied that 70 cents will raise more revenue than 60 cents.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We trust it will; we believe it will; but we cannot tell.

Mr. TRUMBULL. On the foreign article it would raise the larger revenue?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir, because we do not believe it is sufficiently high to restrict the importation.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Harlan, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, and Wilkinson—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harris, Hicks, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wiley—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Howard, Howe, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Wilson, and Wright—12.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee reducing the tax from 80 to 70 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in section three, line forty-nine, after the word "on" to strike out the word "galvanized;" after the word "plates" to strike out the words "galvanized iron;" after the word "iron" to insert the words "galvanized or;" and in line fifty after the word "batteries" to insert "or otherwise;" so that the clause will read:

On tin plates, or iron galvanized or coated with any metal by electric batteries, or otherwise, $\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will move to amend that clause further in the forty-ninth line by striking out the word "or" and inserting "and;" so as to read, "tin plates and iron galvanized."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, after line fifty-one, to strike out the following clause:

On band and hoop iron not less than one and one half inch wide and not less than one eighth of an inch thick, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound.

On band and hoop iron less than one and one half inch and not less than three fourths of an inch wide, and less than one eighth of an inch thick, and not less than No. 15 wire gauge, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound.

On band and hoop iron less than three fourths of an inch wide and less than No. 15 wire gauge, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

On all band, hoop, and scroll iron from one half to six inches in width, not thinner than one eighth of an inch, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound.

On all band, hoop, and scroll iron from one half to six inches wide, under one eighth of an inch in thickness, and not thinner than No. 20 wire gauge, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound.

On all band, hoop, and scroll iron thinner than No. 20 wire gauge, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, line seventy-one, after the word "rods" to insert " $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound;" and after the word "and" to insert the word "on;" so that the clause will read:

On slit rods $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound, and on all other descriptions of rolled or hammered iron, not otherwise provided for, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, line one hundred and eight, to strike out " $\frac{1}{2}$," and to insert "9;" and in line one hundred and nine to strike out "9;" and insert "12;" so that the clause will read:

On screws, commonly called wood screws, two inches or over in length, 9 cents per pound; less than two inches in length, 12 cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, line one hundred and twenty-eight, to strike out "9" and insert "7;" so that the clause will read:

On old scrap iron, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per ton: Provided, That nothing shall be deemed old iron that has not been in actual use and fit only to be remanufactured.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, line one hundred and thirty-one, to strike out the word "or" and to insert "and steel;" so that it will read:

On steel, in ingots, bars, coils, sheets, and steel wire, not less than one fourth of one inch in diameter, valued at 7 cents per pound or less, $\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound; valued at above 7 cents and not above 11 cents per pound, 3 cents per pound; valued at above 11 cents per pound, $\frac{3}{4}$ cents per pound, and 10 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary proceeded to read the next paragraph of the bill, as follows:

On steel wire less than one fourth of an inch in diameter and not less than No. 16 wire gauge, $\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound, and in addition thereto 15 per cent. ad valorem; less or finer than No. 16 wire gauge, 3 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CLARK. I propose to amend that paragraph by striking out "15" where it occurs in lines one hundred and forty and one hundred and forty-two, and inserting "20," so as to get a little more duty. It is an amendment agreed upon by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, line one hundred and sixty-six, after the word "knives" to strike out the word "or" and to insert "and;" and in line one hundred and sixty-seven, after the word "kinds" to strike out the words, "valued at $3 or less per dozen, 50 cents per dozen, and in addition thereto 25 per cent. ad valorem;" valued at over $3 per dozen, 50 cents per dozen, and in addition thereto 40," and to insert "50;" so that the clause will read: "On pen-knives, jack-knives, and pocket-knives of all kinds, 50 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. DIXON. I wish to propose an amendment to the amendment of the committee; and that is, to add after the words "50 per cent. ad valorem" the words "and 50 cents per dozen." I do not know whether the amendment would come in now properly, or after the amendment of the committee has been acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It comes in properly now.

Mr. DIXON. The object of the amendment is to tax a class of cheap cutlery and make them pay a revenue.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the amendment to the amendment will not be agreed to. It will be noticed that we have increased the ad valorem tax from twenty-five to fifty per cent. on that cheap class of cutlery. If the amendment proposed by my friend from Connecticut should be adopted the result will be that you will exclude entirely a very considerable class of cheap cutlery that is not and cannot be manufactured in this country.

The proof to the committee was very conclusive on that subject. We have already put the duty quite as high as it will well bear. It will be noticed that as the bill came to us from the House of Representatives the tax was put at "50 cents per dozen, and, in addition thereto, 25 per cent. ad valorem." We propose to make the ad valorem duty 50 per cent., doubling the percentage, and to strike out the specific duty. There are many different qualities of knives, and I thought I had a paper here showing the different qualities which this proposition would exclude; but I find that I have mislaid it; it is not among my papers. Some of them do not cost more than two or three cents apiece; and if you put on a tax of 50 cents per dozen and 50 per cent. ad valorem you will exclude them altogether. We gave a great deal of consideration to this matter, and the committee became perfectly satisfied on investigation that the amount of duty we proposed was sufficient.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Maine is entirely correct with regard to the fact that there is a class of cheap cutlery imported, at almost a nominal value, not worth over 2 or 3 or 4 cents apiece; some of them but 25 cents a dozen, and some even less. A duty of 50 per cent. ad valorem upon that article of course would be nominal; it amounts to nothing comparatively. I desire in the first place to procure a revenue from this source. This species of goods can afford to pay a higher tax, can afford to pay 50 cents a dozen; and even if they were excluded by such a tax it would be no injury, because they are almost valueless, and a better class of goods would be manufactured and imported. But if they are to be imported and used, they can certainly afford to pay 50 cents per dozen. The duty which is placed upon them by the amendment of the committee of 50 per cent. ad valorem would amount, for instance, on knives that are worth about 20 cents a dozen to just 10 cents, less than 1 cent on each knife. It is plain that if that class of goods are to be imported and their importation is to be encouraged, a higher rate of revenue may be raised from them.

Mr. CLARK. It was in order to get some revenue out of them that the committee were induced to change the duty as it stood in the bill originally. That was a leading consideration. It was very plain to the committee, and made very plain by the evidence before us, that a dozen of knives costing say 20 cents could not be taxed 50 cents a dozen and then taxed 25 per cent. ad valorem in addition, because it would entirely exclude them, and we should get no revenue from them. As they did not come in competition with anything we produced in this country it was thought desirable on the part of the committee that they should come in and pay such duty as they could bear. The committee, therefore, changed this clause and imposed a duty of 50 per cent. ad valorem upon all classes of these goods, which is a very high duty, and sufficiently protective for anything that we manufacture in this country, and perhaps as high a rate of duty as the article will bear when imported.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Maine stated that these knives were imported at a cost of 2 or 3 cents a piece, which is true. Some of them do not cost over 20 or 30 cents a dozen. What does a duty of 50 per cent. ad valorem amount to upon them? The price is so low that it amounts to nothing. The Senator says they do not come in competition with our manufactures. They do. Those low-priced goods do come in competition with articles manufactured in this country, and although the duty sounds large—50 per cent.—it is really nominal.

Mr. CLARK. It is true, the price of the knife is small; but I submit that 1 cent or 2 cents is something of a duty upon it, though 2 cents is a small price for a knife.

Mr. DIXON. Then why not put on a specific duty on this cheap knife?

Mr. CLARK. Because it will exclude the importation of the article, and we shall get nothing from it.

Mr. DIXON. I do not think it will.

Mr. CLARK. The judgment of the committee was that it would, and therefore the committee changed it; and it was on the very ground that they could not save the importation of the article and get any revenue at the duty that had been fixed upon by the House of Representatives that they were induced to change it.

Mr. DIXON. A duty of 50 cents a dozen is only about 4 cents on each knife. It must be a very miserable article that would be excluded by the imposition of such a duty as that, and perhaps it had better be excluded, so far as the use of the article is concerned. If you want to get revenue, you will get next to none by the proposition of the committee.

Mr. CLARK. It is true, it is a very miserable article, and if the only question were whether the article had better come in or not, and that was the only consideration, perhaps we should exclude it altogether; but we want revenue out of everything out of which we can get it, and where an article does not come in competition with anything we manufacture we desire that it shall come in, if it is not a hurtful article, in order to obtain revenue out of it. The question was, how shall we adjust this tax so as to obtain the largest amount of revenue? The committee said, "Certainly it will not do to impose upon a dozen of knives costing 20 cents a tax of 50 cents." We tax no other article in the world in that way that I know of. They therefore adopted this duty of 50 per cent. ad valorem as the fairest way to get the proper revenue from all classes.

Mr. DIXON. In my judgment, though of course my judgment is inferior to that of the committee, a much larger revenue can be raised by putting on this additional tax of 50 cents per dozen upon these goods. As I have already said, the revenue received now is merely nominal. The duty is so low that it amounts to scarcely anything. These goods can pay more revenue, and my object is to procure more revenue from this source. If you put on a tax of 50 cents a dozen on these knives, it only amounts to 3 or 4 cents on each knife. I say that that knife can afford to pay that duty. If it can be imported at all, it can be imported with that duty and the Government can receive it; and that the Senator says is what the committee desire. It is what I desire.

Mr. CLARK. Both of us are aiming at the same object. The Senator from Connecticut says he desires to obtain the largest amount of revenue; the committee desire to obtain revenue. The committee considered it with that view and only that view, how they could get the largest amount of revenue out of it. The Senator looks at it in that view. Then it is a question between the judgment of the committee, who have maturely considered the subject, and the judgment of the Senator from Connecticut. We think this duty will give us the largest revenue.

Mr. DIXON. I think the committee were wrong.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected. The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in section three, line one hundred and eighty, to strike out "35" and to insert "40," and in line one hundred and eighty-two to insert the words "of steel" before the word "partially," and also to strike out the words "of steel" after "manufactured;" so that the clause will read:

On all manufactures of steel, or of which steel shall be a component part, not otherwise provided for, 40 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all articles of steel partially manufactured, or of which steel shall be a component part, not otherwise provided for, shall pay the same rate of duty as if wholly manufactured.

Mr. DIXON. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "40" and inserting "45."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will simply say that I had some doubt myself whether that tax ought not to be 45 per cent. instead of 40 per cent. ad valorem; but we were at considerable pains to investigate the subject; we consulted the proper authorities on the subject, that is to say, people learned in those matters, and we finally came to the conclusion that a tax of 40 per cent. would do, and was a sufficient protection to those engaged in the manufacture of steel in this country. Our judgment may be wrong.

Mr. DIXON. I think when it is seen how much the duty on steel has been raised—

Mr. FESSENDEN. The tax.

Mr. DIXON. And the tax, too; but when it is seen how much the duty on steel has been raised in this bill, and how much the internal revenue tax on steel is, it will be apparent to the Senate that the committee were right when they proposed a tax of 45 per cent. I think they were right then, and I hope the Senate will adopt their first conclusion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How much has the duty on steel been raised?

Mr. DIXON. It has been raised nearly 50 per cent.; I think just 50 per cent. At any rate, it has been largely increased, more than I propose to raise it here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator is mistaken about that. It has not been raised 50 per cent. However, I will not make any opposition to it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment was in section three, line one hundred and ninety-two, to strike out the words "2 cents" and to insert "1½," so that the clause will read: "On old scrap lead, fit only to be remanufactured, 1½ cent per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOOT. I ask the Senate to pass over for the present the fourth and fifth sections of this bill, and for this reason: my colleague, as it is known, is detained from the Senate in consequence of indisposition. These two sections embrace the subject of wool and woolen manufactures, a subject upon which he has devoted particular attention, and so far as the article of wool is concerned our constituency are particularly and deeply interested. Having spoken to the chairman of the committee on the subject, I understand he has no objection to the postponement of the consideration of these sections until to-morrow. If my colleague shall not be able to be in attendance then, I shall ask no further delay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be taken if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the sixth section of the bill. The first amendment of the committee in that section was in the clause imposing a duty on all manufactures of cotton, in line nineteen, after the word "yard," to insert "if colored, stained, painted, or printed, 5½ cents per square yard;" and in line twenty-one to strike out "15" and insert "20;" so that the clause will read:

On finer and lighter goods of like description, exceeding one hundred threads and not exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, unbleached, 5 cents per square yard; if bleached, 5½ cents per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, 5½ cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section six, line twenty-seven, to strike out "15" and insert "20;" so that the clause will read:

On goods of like description, exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, unbleached, 5 cents per square yard; if bleached, 5½ cents per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, 5½ cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section six, line fifty-six, to insert the word "square" before the word "yard."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section six, line sixty-four, after the word "cents," to insert "per dozen;" and in line sixty-five, after the words "ad valorem," to strike out the words "on the excess;" so that the clause will read:

Fourth. On spool thread of cotton, 6 cents per dozen spools, containing on each spool not exceeding one hundred yards of thread, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem; exceeding one hundred yards, for every additional hundred yards of thread on each spool, or fractional part thereof in excess of one hundred yards, 6 cents per dozen, and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section six, line sixty-six, after the word "frames" to insert "and on all cotton hosing;" so that the clause will read: "On cotton shirts and drawers, woven or made on frames, and on all cotton hosing, 35 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section seven, line seventeen, to strike out "25" and insert "30;" so that the clause will read:

On flax or linen yarns for carpets, not exceeding No. 8 Lea, and valued at 24 cents or less per pound, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section seven, line nineteen, after the word "thirty" to insert "five;" so that it will read: "On flax or linen yarns valued above 24 cents per pound, 35 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section seven, line twenty-nine, after the word "on," to insert the words "gunny cloth, gunny bags, and;" so that it will read:

Third. On gunny cloth, gunny bags, and cotton bagging, or other manufacture not otherwise provided for, suitable for the uses to which cotton bagging is applied, composed in whole or in part of hemp, jute, flax, or other material, valued at 10 cents or less per square yard, 3 cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section seven, line forty-one, after the word "twenty" to insert the word "five;" and in line forty-two to strike out "25" and insert "30;" so that the clause will read:

On jute yarns, 25 per cent. ad valorem. On all other manufactures of jute or Sisal grass, not otherwise provided for, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in section eight, line eight, after the word "on," to insert "spun silk for filling in skeins or cops, and on;" in line ten, after the word "organzine," to strike out "25" and insert "40;" and in line eleven, after the words "floss silks," to strike out "25" and insert "40;" so that it will read:

On spun silk for filling in skeins or cops, and on silk in the gum not more advanced than singles, tram, and thrown or organzine, 40 per cent. ad valorem. On floss silks 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend this amendment—I believe it is in accordance with the views of the committee—by inserting after the word "cops" the words "25 per cent. ad valorem." This spun silk for filling is not produced in this country, but it is now used considerably in the manufacture of silk goods, and will be much more extensively used if the duty is brought down to the rate I propose. Under the tariff of 1861 it was an unenumerated article, and paid 60 per cent., which has suppressed the manufacture I believe. I propose to make the duty on spun silk for filling in skeins or cops 25 per cent. ad valorem, and then to leave the duty on silk in the gum as the committee reported it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment was in section eight, line seventeen, after the word "vails" to insert "laces;" so as to make "laces" pay a duty of 60 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eight, line twenty-two, after the word "value" to insert "including women's and children's dress goods and piece goods in all forms," and in line twenty-four to strike out "50" and to insert "60;" so that the clause will read:

On all manufactures of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, including women's and children's dress goods and piece goods in all forms, not otherwise provided for, 60 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section nine, line eleven, after the word "China" to strike out the word "and," and after "porcelain" to insert "and Parian;" so that the clause will read:

On China, porcelain, and Parian ware, gilded, ornamented, or decorated in any manner, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section nine, line fourteen, after the word "China" to strike out the word "and," and after "porcelain" to insert "and Parian;" and in line nineteen, to strike out "40" and insert "45;" so that the clause will read:

On China, porcelain, and Parian ware, plain white, and not decorated in any manner, and all other earthen, stone, or crockery ware, white, glazed, edged, printed, painted, dipped, or cream colored, composed of earthy or mineral substances, and not otherwise provided for, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I believe it to be in order to propose an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I propose to move to strike out the words "forty-five" and to insert "fifty" in line nineteen, on page 27. I will state the reason why I do it. The manufacture of plain white China is an infant business in this country; it is scarcely yet upon its legs; and it requires the fostering care of the Government. I will state a fact connected with this business to show why it should receive favor at the hands of Congress. I am aware of a locality in which there is about $600,000 of capital invested in this business. The difference in the price of material and the price of labor between this country and England is such that unless considerable protection is afforded to this branch of business, which is likely to reflect not only credit upon ourselves as manufacturers but to be of great benefit to the country, the enterprise must cease. Allow me to call attention to a few of the articles which enter into this manufacture, and to show the contrast between the cost in England and what it is here. China clay, per ton of 2,000 pounds, costs $9 in Staffordshire and $30 in this country, more than 300 per cent.

Flint and spar, per ton of 2,000 pounds, cost in Staffordshire $9 per ton and $20 in this country. Coal per ton in England, of 2,240 pounds, costs $2, and where this manufacture is going on $8 45 per ton. Labor is 200 per cent. higher here than it is in England.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that the mere statement of the great contrast and the character of the business to be thus protected is sufficient to secure an increase of this duty to 50 per cent., which is considered by the persons who are engaged in the business as essential for their protection and the continuation of this useful branch of industry.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All I can say about it is this: these gentlemen came to us and asked us for 5 per cent. additional and said that would satisfy them, and we put it on. How much they ask now through their Senators I cannot tell. I believe there is but one establishment in New Jersey. We gave them just what they asked for.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I fear there is some misunderstanding about this, because the gentleman who called upon me was referred by me directly to the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You brought him in and introduced him.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I brought him to the door of the committee-room. I not only had it from his own mouth as to the rate of duty he desired, but he also furnished me with a memorandum stating that to be what he considered essential. He did state and has stated in this letter that they could scrape along upon 47½ per cent.; that if I could not succeed in inducing the committee to give them this duty of 50 per cent. ad valorem, they could make out with 47½ per cent. Under those circumstances, according to my duty, I proposed the highest duty that they asked. Without undertaking to make any great point on this matter I should like to have the views of the Senate on this question after I have made this statement showing the character of the business.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator suffer me to ask him what is the present duty? Is it not less than this?

Mr. TEN EYCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. How have they been going along?

Mr. TEN EYCK. They are going along by industry and enterprise with their business, and will be able to continue it, provided there is an increased duty imposed on the foreign article sufficient to enable them to pay the income tax and the increased price of coal, labor, and all the materials embarked in this business.

The Senator perhaps did not listen to the statement I made and the statistics I gave showing that unless this particular kind of business was protected it must be destroyed, for labor in this country was 200 per cent. higher than it is in England where this manufacture is carried on extensively, and the materials which go to make this mechanism cost more in this country than they do in Staffordshire, England.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The additional duty which we require of them by the internal-revenue bill is 2 per cent. We raised it from 3 to 5. The duty on the foreign article was put up 5 per cent., and we have added 5 per cent. more, thus increasing it to 10 per cent.; and if they got along by industry and frugality before, I think they can scrape along now.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is a very sad case that the Senator from New Jersey makes. Some of his constituents have gone into a business that is not profitable, where the labor costs 200 per cent. more than in England, and materials 300 per cent. more than they do in England. They have made a bad investment; and in order to make the business profitable which of itself is unprofitable he wants to impose such a tax as will cut off revenue and prohibit competition from abroad, and compel our people, who make some profits in other pursuits, to pay large prices to an unprofitable business to enable them to go on. I think myself that is the basis of the argument of the whole productive system; but it has not been made quite so bare as the Senator from New Jersey has made it.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I trust that my friends do not sustain the character that the Senator from Indiana seems to be disposed so willingly to cast upon me. I happen to be acquainted with these gentlemen, and know them to be of the highest character and standing in the community where they live; none more so. They have started a new enterprise in this country—one that is calculated to reflect credit and honor upon the mechanism of the country. It is a young and infant branch of business. Being industrious, active, energetic, laborious men, they have been enabled to make this thing work along. Their ambition is embarked in it. Although they are influenced as all other men are to have reasonable gains and accumulations derived from their business, yet still they are not such men as would desire either to preclude a fair competition or to prevent other men keeping the just rewards of their labor in the line of business they are pursuing.

I have brought this matter before the Senate and I have endeavored to commend it to their consideration with the full knowledge that these men would ask no more than they reasonably believed to be necessary for the carrying on of their business. I have proposed the amendment to the Senate, and they can do with it as they see fit.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected. The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment of the committee was in section nine, line twenty-six, after the word "chalk" to insert "and cliffstone;" so that it will read: "On white chalk and cliffstone, $10 per ton."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section nine, after line twenty-nine, to insert: "On whiting and Paris-white, 1 cent per pound. On whiting ground in oil, 2 cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section nine, after line forty-three, to insert the following:

On cylinder and crown glass, polished, not exceeding ten by fifteen inches square, 2½ cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding sixteen by twenty-four inches square, 4 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding twenty-four by thirty inches square, 6 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding twenty-four by sixty inches, 20 cents per square foot; all above that, 40 cents per square foot.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section nine, line seventy-two, after the word "plates" to insert the word "not;" so that it will read: "On all cast polished plate glass, silvered, or looking-glass plates not exceeding ten by fifteen inches square, 4 cents per square foot."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section nine, line eighty-eight, after the word "sweetmeats" to insert the word "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section ten, line nine, after the word "annatto" to strike out the word "aniline;" in line ten, after the word "off" to insert "barytes," and strike out the word "cliffstone;" and in line twelve, after the word "size" to strike out the word "nickel;" so that the clause will read:

First. On annatto seed, extract of annatto, crude barytes, nitrate of barytes, carmined indigo, crude tica, extract of safflower, finishing powder, gold size and patent size, cobalt, oxyd of cobalt, smalt, zaffre, and terra alba, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary proceeded to read the next paragraph, as follows:

Second. On albumen, asbestos, asphaltum, crocus colcotra, blue or Roman vitriol or sulphate of copper, bone or ivory drop black, nuxetide, rose red, ultramarine, Indian red and Spanish brown, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend that clause in the sixteenth line by striking out "rose red." That is one of the aniline dyes that is afterwards provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eleven, line fifteen, after the word "pounds" to insert the words "of lime, 25 per cent. ad valorem;" so that the clause will read:

On acetate or pyrolignite of ammonia, 70 cents per pound; of baryta, 40 cents per pound; of iron, strontia, and zinc, 50 cents per pound; of lead, 10 cents per pound; of magnesia and soda, 50 cents per pound; of lime, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The "10" in the fourteenth line of that clause should be "20;" so as to read, "of lead, 20 cents per pound." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eleven, after line sixteen to insert "on aniline dyes, 35 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. FESSENDEN. The committee authorize me to move to amend that amendment by inserting after the word "dyes" the words "$1 per per pound, and;" so that it will read: "On aniline dyes $1 per pound, and 35 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment was in section eleven, after line twenty-five to insert: "On opium prepared for smoking, 100 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the clause of this section beginning at the twentieth line:

On articles not otherwise provided for, made of gold, silver, German silver, or platinum, of which either of these metals shall be a component part, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

I think the word "or" ought to be inserted after "platina."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) That word will be inserted if there be no objection.

The next amendment was in section eleven, after line thirty-four to strike out: "On cassia, 25 cents per pound; on ground cassia, 6 cents per pound; on cinnamon, 40 cents per pound."

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are several amendments here to which I feel inclined to call the attention of the Senate, because they are important, and there may be some difference of opinion concerning them. The House of Representatives raised the duty on spices very largely. The Committee on Finance have stricken out all the increased duties on spices. They were not, I believe, originally reported from the Committee of Ways and Means in the House of Representatives, although the committee afterwards moved them. The increased duties in the House of Representatives were put on the ground that these spices are articles of luxury: cassia, cinnamon, peppers, cloves, nutmegs, mace, &c. The Committee on Finance were very much disposed to look upon them rather as articles of necessity in common use than articles of luxury. It is undoubtedly true that, being articles not raised in this country, and articles of which everybody uses a portion, you can lay increased duties upon them without any apparent difficulty; and the duties were accordingly very largely increased by the House of Representatives.

For instance, on cassia, which costs, I think, somewhere about 13 cents a pound, the present duty is 15 cents, more than 100 per cent. The House of Representatives propose to impose a duty of 25 cents. Cinnamon costs about 22½ cents a pound; the present duty is 25 cents, more than 100 per cent.; and the House of Representatives propose to raise the duty to 40 cents a pound. Cloves cost about 7½ cents a pound; the present duty is 15 cents, 200 per cent., and on that they lay a duty of 40 cents a pound. Mace costs 24 cents a pound; the present duty is 30 cents, and that is proposed to be raised to 50 cents. Nutmegs cost about 33½ cents a pound; the present duty is 30 cents, and the House propose to raise it 75 cents. Black pepper costs about 6 cents a pound; the present duty is 12 cents, and that is raised in this bill to 20 cents. Red pepper costs 6½ cents a pound; the present duty is 12 cents, and that is raised to 25 cents. Pimento costs about 5 cents; the present duty is 12 cents, and that is raised to 20 cents. I may not be entirely accurate in my statement of the cost of these various articles, but I speak from a table which has been furnished me, and which I believe to be substantially correct.

Now, you may get a large revenue perhaps out of these articles, calculating that the usual amount will be imported and used.

Mr. TRUMBULL. How much?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have not calculated it. It is important unquestionably in a revenue point of view. We have been pressed very hard, and so have the House of Representatives, by letters and articles in newspapers, to raise the duties on spices. We understand the reason of that very well. There is said to be a very large stock on hand in the country, and if we raise the duties at this rate, large amounts of money will be made out of them, and probably there will be no great revenue for a year or two. The Senator from New York [Mr. MORGAN] I suppose is probably aware of that fact.

But the difficulty is this: they are articles all of which can be very easily smuggled; and we know that very great preparations are being made to smuggle all sorts of articles over the border from the British provinces. Take, for instance, a barrel of nutmegs. They can be imported into Canada, and people can bring them here in their pockets. A person could make quite a pretty sum on a barrel of them in that way. It will be seen, therefore, that the temptation for smuggling is very large; and so it is with regard to all these articles. The committee, therefore, on looking at the whole matter, came to the conclusion that for a very considerable period of time, at any rate, we could not get any largely increased revenue in consequence of the amount of those articles in the country at the present time, and it is very doubtful whether, if we put on such large duties, we would at any time get very large amounts, and as the duties are now not less than 100 per cent., I believe, in any case, and in some cases 200 per cent. on articles which were considered to be articles rather of necessity, as they are in common use by everybody, as for instance the article of pepper, we came to the conclusion that it was best not to impose an additional duty on spices. But as it is a question of so much importance, I deemed it my duty not to let it be passed over in the Senate without notice, but to call the attention of the Senate to it, to see whether the views of the committee would be sustained or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee to strike out lines thirty-five, thirty-six, and thirty-seven, on the 32d page.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator will give us ten minutes longer I shall have no objection to his motion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CLARK. Let us go on with the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We cannot get through with it to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the motion to adjourn withdrawn?

Mr. HENDRICKS. If any gentleman wants to say a word I will withdraw it.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the Senator from Indiana to withdraw the motion until some bills from the House of Representatives on the table can be read, at least, so that they may be referred. There is a joint resolution there of some consequence regarding the overland mail service, and I ask leave to have it read now.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I withdrew the motion to adjourn to enable the Senator from California to call up some bill, but the Senator from Kansas now appeals to me, and says he wants to make a motion, and of course I shall not resist.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, and while the change is going on these bills can be read.

Mr. CONNESS. Pending that motion I hope those bills will be read by consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the bills on the table from the House of Representatives be read for reference.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. That can be done while the doors are being closed. I insist on my motion. Let that be done afterwards.

Mr. POMEROY. It is very important that those bills should be referred to the committees to-day, because the committees meet to-morrow morning.

Mr. POWELL. That can be done while we are closing the doors.

Mr. POMEROY. It may be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONNESS. Why not have it done now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

Mr. CONNESS. Now, I call for the reading of those bills.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 93) to authorize the Postmaster General to extend the contract with the Overland Mail Company was read twice by its title.

Mr. CONNESS. With the consent of the Senate I should like to have that resolution put on its passage. ["Oh, no."] Then I move that it be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC WORKS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 450) to provide for the repair and preservation of certain public works of the United States, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CHANDLER, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. MORGAN.

COURTS IN WISCONSIN.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 55) in relation to the circuit court in and for the district of Wisconsin, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate and insisted on by the House; and it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the said bill, and agree to the conference asked by the House upon the disagreeing votes thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. TRUMBULL, Mr. COLLAMER, and Mr. POWELL.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. While the doors are being closed I desire to make a privileged motion, to reconsider the vote on the passage of Senate bill No. 296.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What bill is that?

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. It is a bill abolishing the fees of the marshal of this District. I ask that the vote be reconsidered.

Mr. CLARK. Oh, no; not now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The motion can be received only by unanimous consent while the order to clear the galleries is being executed on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion being objected to, it cannot be entertained.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I only want it entered. I believe it is a privileged motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It cannot be entertained while the order of the Senate is being executed except by the unanimous consent of the Senate. The Chair will entertain the motion if there be no objection; but if objected to it cannot be received.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I did not hear any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from New Hampshire to object to the motion. The Chair, however, will entertain the motion if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. There is objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the motion cannot be entertained.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 16, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. CHANNING.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

FITZGERALD AND BALL.

On motion of Mr. CHANLER the bill (S. No. 244) for the relief of Daniel Fitzgerald and Jonathan Ball was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CHANLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF HARBORS, ETC.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Last evening the House permitted a bill in relation to rivers and harbors, with amendments of the Senate, to be taken from the Speaker's table and considered. The amendments were concurred in, and the action of the House was reconsidered, and the motion to reconsider was laid on the table. Upon an examination of the amendments there seems to be some doubt in regard to the precise meaning of some of them. I ask the House to take from the table the motion to reconsider, and have the Senate amendments non-concurred in.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by unanimous consent.

There was no objection; and the bill was taken up and the Senate amendments non-concurred in.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the House request a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On request of Mr. PATTERSON, leave of absence was granted for ten days to Mr. ROLLINS, of New Hampshire, on account of sickness.

On request of the SPEAKER, leave of absence for one week was granted to Mr. SPALDING, who was unexpectedly called away.

FEES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, a bill (S. No. 296) in relation to the fees and emoluments of the marshal, attorney, and clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

VOTES RECORDED.

By unanimous consent, Mr. PERRY was allowed to record his vote in the negative on the proposed amendment to the Constitution.

By unanimous consent, Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, was allowed to record his vote in the affirmative on the proposed amendment to the Constitution.

SECURITY OF PASSENGERS ON STEAMERS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

DRAFT—COMMUTATION.

Mr. A. MYERS asked unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be requested to inquire into and report upon the expediency of so amending the several acts for enrolling and calling out the national forces as to make the period of each draft for a term not exceeding eighteen months, and raising the commutation to the sum of $400; and also into the expediency of requiring those drafted but exempt by reason of physical disability, who are able to pay commutation, to do so, and also of permitting colored persons to be accepted as substitutes for drafted white men.

Mr. CHANLER objected.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I now ask to report from the Committee of Ways and Means a bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes. I will ask that the items of the bill be read now, and if any gentleman desires to raise points of order he can do it, and then I want it referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Does the bill include any items of appropriation not authorized by existing law?

Mr. STEVENS. We suppose that we have strictly complied with the rules. We have left out all appropriations for private purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Is the bill before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is; the Committee of Ways and Means have a right to report appropriation bills at any time.

Mr. STEVENS. The bill is read now to allow gentlemen to raise points of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. If points of order can be raised in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union there will be no objection to its immediate reference.

Mr. PENDLETON. I shall object to any consent of that kind.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no objection to either mode of disposing of the matter.

Mr. PENDLETON. I want the bill read now, and the points of order made at once if they are to be made.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The following item was read:

For rebuilding sea-wall, and repair to tower and dwelling at Napat Point light-house, Rhode Island, $6,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. There may be some law authorizing this appropriation. I hope the law will be shown. I presume there is no law for an appropriation of this character.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, under the 120th rule, which states that—

“No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.”

The Chair understands this object to be already in progress.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that is the fact, of course the ruling of the Chair is correct, but I understand that it is not the fact.

The SPEAKER. The appropriation is for the repair of a sea-wall; not for the building of one, but for the repair. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order. The provision conforms strictly to the rule.

The following item was read:

For compensation of two inspectors of customs acting as superintendents for the life-saving stations on the coasts of Long Island and New Jersey, $3,000.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I would inquire whether these inspectors and their compensation are not already provided for in the general appropriation bill.

Mr. STEVENS. We suppose not; not these two.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. You do not know the fact?

Mr. STEVENS. We suppose they are not provided for. We have no knowledge of their being provided for in any appropriation bill. If they are, it is in an amendment which came from the Senate; but I do not think they are provided for anywhere.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I think the number of inspectors is fixed by law. This provides for these two officers and for paying them.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The bill is only being read now for points of order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am aware of that, but I make the point of order that this is a double appropriation for the same two inspectors of customs, as they are already provided for.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The latter part of the 120th rule states that appropriations “for the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government” are in order. Whether it is proper to appropriate this money or not is a question for the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to say to the gentleman that this cannot very well be elsewhere provided for, for this is the regular light-house bill, and we have only cut down the appropriations in this bill under the rule enforced here now for the first time.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. My point is this: that this item provides for paying two officers already provided for over again.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman will refer to our appropriations for the last twelve years—I have not gone further back—he will find the appropriations made in the same way.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Well, it is wrong, and I shall oppose it at the proper time.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, not for amendment but that questions of order might be made.

The following paragraph having been read—

For facilitating communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States by electrical telegraph, $40,000—

Mr. HOLMAN said: I raise a point of order on that clause. There is no law for it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, as the Chair happened to be at the head of the Post Office Committee when the law was reported and passed.

Mr. STEVENS. The act of Congress pledges the Government to pay not exceeding $40,000 annually to that line.

The following paragraph having been read—

For compensation of the Assistant Treasurer at Philadelphia, $4,000—

Mr. HOLMAN said: I inquire how this item came into the bill. Is this an office already existing with a salary of $4,000 attached to it?

The SPEAKER. There are six Assistant Treasurers, one in Philadelphia. Whether the salary is $4,000 the Chair does not know.

Mr. STEVENS. Without looking at the old law I cannot tell. This is the recommendation of the Department for carrying on that branch of business.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the law fixes the salary at $4,000 the appropriation should of course be made; but it is very singular that the item should be in this bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I would not undertake to say whether that is the salary fixed in the law. We inserted it on the recommendation of the Department, and as the bill is not to be considered to-day I did not look into it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise a point of order on this appropriation.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Indiana will show the Chair that it is out of order, the Chair will so decide.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course the Chair will presume it to be in order; but the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means should be able to state whether or not this appropriation is according to existing law.

Mr. STEVENS. Perhaps so; but I confess honestly that I have not looked at the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not the law before me either.

Mr. STEVENS. If the appropriation is wrong, the merits of the question will be open.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. There are six Assistant Treasurers in the United States. One of them is stationed at Philadelphia. That brings this item within the rule. If the amount is wrong, that is a matter which the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union can remedy. The item is for compensation of the Assistant Treasurer at Philadelphia, which is according to existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the Chair whether any increase of compensation can be authorized in this bill?

The SPEAKER. That would be for the House to determine.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill itself cannot increase the compensation.

The SPEAKER. That would be a good point.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. An increase of compensation would be a change of existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to let this clause pass over till we see what the law is.

Mr. STEVENS. I have not the least objection. I am willing that it shall be reserved for consideration.

The following clause having been read—

For additional clerical force in the office of the Assistant Treasurer at Philadelphia, $4,500—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, said: This must be a change of existing law.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but the rule states that there may be contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government. If, in the opinion of the Committee of Ways and Means, this is a contingency for carrying on that Department of the Government the Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It is undoubtedly a change of existing laws; and, without this appropriation there cannot be this additional clerical force.

The SPEAKER. The rule is, that no appropriation shall be in order for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, except in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government. This is one of the two exceptions. The Chair thinks, therefore, that it is in order for the Committee of Ways and Means to report an item in the way of a contingency for carrying on a Department.

Mr. STEVENS. The clause is founded on an express communication from the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was then read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the bill be made a special order for Monday next after the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF MILITARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. MORRILL. Inasmuch as to-day, which was by unanimous consent set apart for the consideration of the business of the Committee on Military Affairs, is to be occupied in the consideration of the internal revenue tax bill, I think, therefore, it is but fair that another day should be fixed for the consideration of the business of that committee. I suggest that the first day after the tax bill is disposed of be set apart for the business of that committee.

Mr. STEVENS. I must object to any arrangement that will interfere with the consideration of this appropriation bill on Monday next.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think it will interfere with that. I hope there will be no objection to the proposition.

Mr. COLE, of California. I object.

Mr. WILSON. If the gentleman will say after the morning hour I think there will be no objection.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I hope there will be no arrangement made to interfere with the day which has been assigned to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MORRILL. Inasmuch as the Committee on Military Affairs was, by assignment of the House, entitled to to-day for the consideration of their business, I trust there will be general consent to the proposition I have made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that to-night, after the morning hour, will still be devoted to the business of the Military Committee, but the Chair presumes that the time remaining of to-day's session will be insufficient to transact the business of that committee.

Mr. MORRILL. That will be of course entirely insufficient to transact the business of this committee, much of which is very important business.

Mr. SCHENCK. There was some misunderstanding in reference to the assignment of this evening to the business of the Military Committee. When the proposition was made to set apart to-day after the morning hour I supposed that it was to include the entire day, but I subsequently learned that by an arrangement that had been made the morning hour was not to commence until the evening session, leaving to us, therefore, only the latter portion of the night session.

Now, this assignment of time will be entirely insufficient for our purposes. That committee has not been called for now some three months. We have our drawers stuffed with reports, some of them of not much consequence, but others of a very important character. I hope, therefore, there will be some arrangement made by which a day may be assigned to us in order to enable us to relieve ourselves of the very large amount of business before us.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair will state the assignments that have been made by unanimous consent for the next few days. The morning hour for this evening is assigned to the consideration of the Pacific railroad bill. To-morrow the entire day, including the morning hour, is set apart for the consideration of private bills. The House has given unanimous consent that to-morrow evening shall be devoted to the business for the District of Columbia. Saturday after the morning hour has been assigned to the Committee on Naval Affairs; and Monday after the morning hour has this day been assigned to the consideration of the civil appropriation bill as a special order.

MR. STEVENS. I understand that Saturday has been set apart after the morning hour, for the consideration of the business of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Do I understand that the Pacific railroad bill will come up during the morning hour?

THE SPEAKER. It will. The Chair will state, however, that if this internal revenue tax bill should not be disposed of to-day it will come up on Saturday after the reading of the Journal as unfinished business, and there will be no morning hour.

MR. STEVENS. I do not desire to give consent to anything that will interfere with the consideration of the Pacific railroad bill.

THE SPEAKER. The Pacific railroad bill will have the morning hour this evening. It will then go over Friday and come up Saturday immediately after the reading of the Journal, unless the tax bill should go over as unfinished business.

MR. SCHENCK. I will make one proposition which, although it will bring us very near the close of the session, I am willing to accept, and I hope there will be no objection to it. I propose to set apart Tuesday next after the morning hour.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States was received, by Mr. STODDARD, his Private Secretary, informing the House that he had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 383) to incorporate a Home for Friendless Women and Children;

An act (H. R. No. 149) concerning school lands in township forty-five north, range seven east, in the state of Missouri;

An act (H. R. No. 198) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 55) granting certain privileges to the city of Des Moines, in the State of Iowa.

MR. SCHENCK. I propose that we postpone the motion until next Tuesday after the meeting of the House and the reading of the Journal.

MR. STEVENS. I must object. If he says after the morning hour I will agree; but I fear that we will not get through with the Pacific railroad bill in that time.

MR. SCHENCK. When the Committee of Ways and Means have overridden us so long, it does seem to me, in a time of war, that the Military Committee, being one of some little importance, after three months' delay, should at least have one day. We had this day assigned to us after the morning hour, and we would have it now if the morning hour had not been shoved off until to-night.

MR. STEVENS. I do not think that the Committee of Ways and Means have done more than their duty.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks that the entire day next Tuesday be devoted to the reports from the Committee on Military Affairs.

MR. ANCONA. I object.

CIRCUIT COURT OF WISCONSIN.

MR. WILSON. I move that the House insist on its amendment to Senate bill No. 55, in relation to the circuit court in and for the district of Wisconsin, and for other purposes, and ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as managers of said conference on the part of the House Messrs. WILSON, BROWN of Wisconsin, and WOODBRIDGE.

OVERLAND MAIL.

MR. ALLEY. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House ordered to be engrossed and read a third time a joint resolution to authorize the Postmaster General to extend the contract with the Overland Mail Company. I withdraw that motion and ask that the engrossed bill be read.

MR. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman cannot withdraw the motion to reconsider.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The motion to reconsider cannot be withdrawn the second day after it has been entered.

MR. ALLEY. I hope, then, that the motion to reconsider will be voted down, and that the joint resolution will be put on its passage.

MR. STEVENS. I hope that the gentleman will not press the matter at this time.

MR. ALLEY. It is important that the joint resolution be passed at this time. If it is not passed now, it will be too late.

MR. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is it important to the contractor or to the Government?

MR. ASHLEY. The papers of this morning state that this contract has been let for four years. The motion to reconsider was rejected.

The joint resolution having been engrossed, it was read the third time.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 19.

So the joint resolution was passed.

MR. ALLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

MR. PENDLETON submitted the following privileged report.

The Clerk read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 193) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the eighth, twelfth, nineteenth, twenty-first, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, fortieth, eighty-eighth, and ninety-fourth amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their ninth amendment. That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the twenty-fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the thirty-fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the ninetieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the ninety-fifth amendment of the Senate and agree to the said Senate amendment with amendments as follows: in line two of said Senate amendment strike out the word "annual;" and in line three of said amendment, before the word "messengers," insert the following words: "females and of the;" and in line five of said amendment, after the word "building" insert the following words: "and the Commissioner of Agriculture and at the Capitol;" and in line six of said amendment strike out the following words: "1st day of June, 1864;" and in line seven of said amendment strike out the word "next," and after the word "year" in said line seven insert the following words: "ending the 30th of June, 1866;" and in line nine strike out "approval of this act" and insert in lieu thereof "1st day of June, 1864;" and in line eleven of said amendment strike out the word "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the House to the ninety-sixth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendment: strike out all after the word "thereof" in line ten of said House amendment to and including the word "one" in line thirteen, and the House agree to the same so modified.

JOHN SHERMAN,
GARRETT DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEORGE H. PENDLETON,
WILLIAM WINDOM,
ORLANDO KELLOGG,
Managers on the part of the House.

MR. PENDLETON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that there are but two or three important matters contained in this report. A number of recommendations relate to mere verbal amendments as to which there can be no difference of opinion.

There is one proposition that will excite a difference of opinion, and that is in reference to the salary of the Treasurer of the United States. The Senate added an amendment to this bill raising that salary; the House refused to agree to it; and the committee of conference recommend that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendment. I suppose, from my examination of the bill and my knowledge of the House, that that is the only question about which there will be difference in the House.

Another relates to the metropolitan police. We agree to the Senate amendment raising their pay fifty per cent., according to a rate of division which has been agreed upon by the respective corporations who are to pay the salaries.

There is one other point to which I will call the attention of the House. The Senate introduced an amendment into this bill raising the salaries of certain employes in the Departments twenty per cent. The House proposed to raise the salaries about thirty-three and a third per cent. The committee of conference recommend a concurrence in the Senate amendment, and a disagreement with the House proposition.

I think these are the only amendments upon which there will be any difference of opinion.

MR. HOLMAN. It seems to me that all these amendments agreed upon by the committee of conference ought to be concurred in by the House, with the exception of one, increasing the salary of the Treasurer of the United States from $5,000 to $6,000 a year. That subject, when it was before the House, received unusual attention, and upon it there can be no misapprehending the opinion of this House. The other amendments are such as the House might have expected upon the part of the committee, fairly acting in concert with the committee upon the part of the Senate. Therefore I take no exception to the balance of this report.

Now, I ask the unanimous consent of the House—for I suppose it can be done only by unanimous consent—that all these amendments be concurred in with the exception of the amendment by which the salary of the Treasurer of the United States is increased from $5,000 to $6,000 a year, and that that one be referred further, if the Senate desire it, to another committee of conference.

MR. PENDLETON. If that can be done, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection.

MR. STEVENS. It cannot be done.

THE SPEAKER. It cannot be done even by unanimous consent, as this is the report of a joint committee of conference, and must be accepted or rejected as a whole.

MR. HOLMAN. Of course, so far as these other items are concerned, there will be no diversity of opinion whatever. The House will recede from its disagreement to the extent recommended by the committee, and the Senate, as a matter of course, will recede to the extent recommended by the committee upon their part, leaving out this one item undisposed of. I think after so deliberate an expression upon the part of the House against that increase of salary it ought not to be tolerated at all. The present salary is a very respectable one. This is a time for sacrifices. The high officers of the Government, instead of demanding an increase of compensation, ought indeed to be content with a reduction of their salaries. The Treasurer of the United States—and I say nothing about his qualifications, capacity, and integrity, because all these are above any question—ought not at a time like this, it seems to me, to be willing to receive a compensation beyond that ample compensation which has been paid for many years past. If the House refuses to concur in the report of the committee it leaves to us this one question of the compensation of the Treasurer of the United States open.

Now, it does seem to me to be very unwise upon our part to increase these high salaries. The effect is ruinous, and discourages and destroys the patriotic sentiment of the country. It will create bickerings, heart-burnings, and jealousies among our people everywhere. They already begin to condemn the Administration of the Government and the Government itself, which so far discriminates between those who render one service and those who render another service as to the compensation they receive.

I regret to be compelled again to refer to the extraordinary service which is being rendered now by nearly a million men, who are giving their time, their talents, their blood, their lives, and everything which pertains to them, for the salvation of this country for a very insignificant compensation. The distinguished gentleman who is the Treasurer of the United States can do no more than this. The country has a right to the benefit of his services, and he has no right to ask, and his friends have no right to ask, that the compensation for those services should be increased to $6,000 per annum, when so many men just as worthy, just as intelligent, just as devoted to their country, are sacrificing health and life and their all for the salvation of this Republic.

It seems to me, without reference to increasing this salary from $5,000 to $6,000, that the precedent which we are setting to the country ought to be at once condemned and repudiated by the representatives of the people who are making sacrifices so unexampled in the history of the country. I hope the House will take a dispassionate view of this subject.

I know the difficulty of reaching a question pertaining to a report of a committee of conference, but we reach a final conclusion upon a single point, and in the event of the non-concurrence in this report, I trust my friend from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] will at once move that the House recede from their disagreement to the Senate amendments to the extent that the committee itself has recommended. That disposes of everything except that one point and two or three points from which the Senate has receded. I trust, therefore, that the House, in view of its former action, in view of its duty to the country, will not hesitate to adopt a policy consistent with the very best and highest interests of our common constituency.

Mr. BLAINE. With the permission of the gentleman from Indiana, I wish to state a few facts which are, perhaps, not entirely known to all the members of the House. When General Spinner was appointed Treasurer of the United States his salary was the same that is paid to the chiefs of bureaus, the Auditors and Comptrollers, $3,000 a year. During this Administration it has already been raised $1,000, and then another $1,000, and it is now $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. What was the salary of the Treasurer at the time the present incumbent came into office?

Mr. BLAINE. Three thousand dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. And it has been increased to $5,000?

Mr. BLAINE. It has been increased $2,000 on the top of that, whereas the Second and Third Auditors, who are harder-worked officers, receive still only $3,000. They have really more claim to an increase than the Treasurer has.

I do not think it will delay the business of the session a single day to have another conference upon this point, and I hope, for the credit of the House, that it will maintain its consistency and keep this salary at $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that in view of the facts now disclosed, and of which the House is well informed, the report of the committee of conference will not be concurred in, and that some gentleman who represented the House on the committee will, so far as the committee recommends, move that the House recede from its disagreements, which will embrace everything in substance except the ninety-fourth amendment, upon which another committee of conference can be appointed.

The facts are now well understood. Here is an officer—intelligent and competent, to be sure, but not more so than other officers in the employment of the Government—whose salary at the commencement of the present Administration was $3,000 a year. It was then increased to $4,000, and then to $5,000, and now, by this amendment and by the report of the committee of conference, it is proposed to increase it to $6,000. Here is an increase of salary in three years and a half of $2,000. No gentleman can say that the responsibilities of the office are increased. The Treasurer of the United States is required to bring his talents, his credit, and his experience to the service of the country at whatever compensation exists at the time he assumes the responsibilities of the office. The present occupant of the office assumed these responsibilities for $3,000. You have added $2,000 a year to his compensation even at a time like this. I do trust that the House will not set an example of further increasing salaries already munificent, in view of the hardships, perils, and privations that are being suffered by thousands and hundreds of thousands of men equally entitled to our consideration at a compensation so inadequate to the services rendered.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the House will not overlook the importance of this question, but that we will concur, to the extent recommended by the committee of conference, in all the amendments made by the Senate except this one amendment. After the report of the committee of conference shall have been non-concurred in, which is, of course, the first step, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] will undoubtedly propose to recede from our disagreement to the Senate amendments upon all points other than the ninety-fourth amendment, upon which the committee of conference has agreed. The duties of the committee will then be reduced substantially to one point, and upon that point we cannot doubt that the Senate will recede.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to get a vote on this report pretty soon, and that is why I have risen, and also to correct a matter of fact upon which my friend from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] does not seem to be very well posted. He spoke of the Auditors doing as much work as the Treasurer of the United States. If he had inquired into the matter he would have found that no officer of this Government, I do not care who he is, does one third as much labor in a day or works so many hours in a day as the Treasurer. Scarcely a day passes over his head when he is in bed before midnight. The Assistant Treasurer in New York who does not do half the labor gets $6,000 a year. The office of United States Treasurer in Washington three years ago was almost a nominal office. There was scarcely anything to do at that time. There passed through his hands, for which he was responsible, less than $10,000,000 a year. Now there passes through his hands, for which he is responsible, upwards of $1,300,000,000 a year. And gentlemen talk about $1,000 a year additional to his pay when the debates in this House of my friend from Indiana, for half the morning hour, to save money, cost a great deal more than this $1,000 which he is trying to save, and which he says the country will understand.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have heard that argument once before. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania, inasmuch as it is a matter which will strike the public mind, explain how it occurs that our remaining in session day after day and month after month in deliberating on questions of public concern increases the public expenses so that we had better increase salaries than devote any time to arguments?

Mr. STEVENS. I am not complaining of the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman must recollect that we are paid by the year, that our whole year of service is due to the public if required, and that the public officers are all employed by the year.

Mr. STEVENS. I am not complaining of the gentleman. He occupies no more than his fair share of time. I like his vigilance very much. I am only speaking of how small the item now in question is, compared with what we expend every day in our zeal for economy. As to the people seeing and condemning all this, I am afraid the poor people would never have heard of it if my friend from Indiana had not given notice, and I question now whether anybody outside of his own numerous readers will know anything about it. [Laughter.]

But that is not the question. The question is whether, for the responsibility of this billion of dollars that passes through his hands annually, and for those numerous hours in which he is wearing away his life with severe labor, this pitiful advance of $1,000 is too large an increase of salary. For my part I am sorry that this conference committee cut down the wages of the poor laborers about the grounds here. I regret the parsimony of the Senate which docked these men. But we cannot have everything our own way, and I am willing to concur in the whole report.

Mr. PENDLETON resumed the floor, but yielded to Mr. FENTON, who said: Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to discuss this question. I only rise to correct a remark of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE], who said that the Second Auditor, or some Comptroller, has harder work in his office than the Treasurer has.

Mr. BLAINE. As hard.

Mr. FENTON. That may be. I only desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that there is no officer under the Government who spends more hours in laborious industry than General Spinner does.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, the sum agreed upon by the conference committee as an increase of the compensation of the Treasurer of the United States is but a small increase compared with the increase of the price of living, and but very small compared with the increase of labor in his office. Believing that this Administration has one man of honesty and integrity in that Department of the Government, one man whose honesty I feel I can indorse, I am ready to vote for paying him $6,000 a year, or more, if the immense labor thrown upon him justifies it. I hope, therefore, that the report of the conference committee will be concurred in, giving him a reasonable compensation for the labor, the honesty, and the integrity with which he discharges his duty.

Mr. PENDLETON resumed the floor.

Mr. FRANK. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me.

Mr. PENDLETON. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, there is no member of this House more opposed to increase of salaries at the present time than myself; but I think the case of the Treasurer of the United States an exception. His arduous and constant labors, the vast responsibility resting upon him, and the large bonds necessary to be given, all show the justness and propriety of agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

It was stated a few moments since by the gentleman from Indiana that the salary had been and now was again to be increased without any increase of duty. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] intimated the same thing, although not in as broad terms. Both gentlemen, no doubt unintentionally, have erred as to the facts. We have just heard from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that the business of the office had increased some one billion dollars; but, sir, the increase is even larger than that. I find in the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury the aggregate transactions at the office of the Treasurer amounted in 1861 to $41,000,000, while in 1863 they amounted to $2,636,000,000—an enormous and unprecedented increase, requiring enlarged responsibility and care.

The Treasurer is required to give bonds to the amount of $150,000, making him responsible to that amount for the millions passing through his Department. To a certain extent he is also responsible for the clerks and employes in his office. His responsibilities are greater than almost any other officer of the Government, and few would assume those alone for the entire salary.

In addition to the duties devolving on him heretofore, he now has charge of the United States bonds deposited as security by the national banks, amounting at present to millions, and soon will amount to hundreds of millions of dollars. We can well afford to pay an honest, faithful public servant the sum named, a less one than his services might command in private business, saying nothing of the vast responsibilities resting on him in the transaction of such amounts as have been named. In view of the facts others, as well as myself, have stated it would almost seem unnecessary to urge upon the House for a moment the small increase of $1,000 asked by this report. It may not be out of place for me to state that since the appointment of the present Treasurer, now more than three years, he has not left the city for a single day, while many gentlemen present know personally that his labors have been the most arduous heretofore known in public business, such as to almost ruin his health.

Mr. BLAINE. I saw him this morning looking very well.

Mr. PENDLETON. I must now insist on my demand for the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman to withdraw and allow me to submit a motion to non-concur in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. PENDLETON. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The motion to non-concur cannot be entertained now; the question must be put on the motion to concur; if that be decided in the negative the gentleman will then be recognized to make the motion to non-concur.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

On concurring in the report of the committee of conference 52 voted in the affirmative, 55 in the negative.

Mr. UPSON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 52, nays 74, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. James C. Allen, Arnold, Ashley, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Blair, Boutwell, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cole, Denning, Dixon, Donnelly, Eliot, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Griswold, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hulburd, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Law, Littlejohn, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Morrison, Leonard Myers, Norton, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Patterson, Pendleton, Robinson, Schenck, Shannon, Stevens, Thomas, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Ward, Webster, Williams, and Woodbridge—52.

NAYS.—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Ames, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Bliss, Broomall, James S. Brown, Chanler, Cobb, Cox, Creswell, Daves, Dawson, Denison, Eckley, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Higby, Holman, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Lazear, Le Blond, Loan, Long, McDowell, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Amos Myers, Nelson, Noble, Orth, Perham, Perry, Pike, Price, Radford, John H. Rice, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Scofield, Sloan, Smith, Smithers, Spalding, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Sweat, Thayer, Wadsworth, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilson, Windom, and Fernando Wood—74.

NOT VOTING.—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Blow, Boyd, Brandegee, Brooks, William G. Brown, Clay, Coffroth, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Driggs, Dumont, English, Farnsworth, Fenton, Ganson, Grider, Grinnell, Hale, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Hutchins, Jenckes, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knapp, Mallory, Marcy, McAllister, McBride, Middleton, James R. Morris, John O'Neill, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Ross, Scott, Starr, Stebbins, John B. Steele, Stuart, Tracy, Voorhees, Whaley, Wilder, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—56.

So the report of the committee of conference was rejected.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. CRESWELL stated that his colleague, Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, was detained from the House by illness.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Ohio will move a concurrence on the part of the House in all the recommendations of the committee of conference, except as to the ninety-fourth amendment, leaving that single point for the decision of the future committee of conference.

Mr. STEVENS. I think that cannot be done.

The SPEAKER. The bill is before the House for its action.

Mr. PENDLETON. Then I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana to make the motion himself.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will then make the motion at the instance of the gentleman from Ohio that the House concur in the report of the committee of conference, except so far as relates to the ninety-fourth amendment, and that they further insist upon their disagreement to that amendment, and ask a further conference upon it. Upon that motion I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER stated the regular order of business to be the consideration of amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 405, to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes, and that, according to the understanding of the House, those on which a separate vote is not asked will be considered as concurred in.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the amendments.

Two hundred and seventh amendment:

In section sixty-eight strike out the words "the interest of all persons in default in;" so that it will read:

That in all cases in which the duties aforesaid, payable on spirits distilled and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, or beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors, shall not be paid at the time of rendering the account of the same, or at the time when they shall have become payable, as herein required, to the collector or deputy collector of the district, the person or persons chargeable therewith shall pay, in addition, 10 per cent. on the amount thereof; and, until such duties, with such addition, shall be paid, they shall be and remain a lien upon the distillery where such liquors have been distilled.

Mr. KERNAN. That is the same question which we had up last night. It changes the lien from the party in interest to the land; from the party who may violate the law to the innocent owner of the land. I hope that the amendment will not be concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL. I can see no injustice about it. If the owner of a piece of land chooses to allow a distillery upon it he must take the consequences.

The House was divided; and there were—ayes 53, nays 43.

The amendment was concurred in.

Two hundred and ninth amendment:

That in all cases in which the duties aforesaid, payable on spirits distilled and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, or beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors, shall not be paid at the time of rendering the account of the same, or at the time when they shall have become payable, as herein required, to the collector or deputy collector of the district, the person or persons chargeable therewith shall pay, in addition, 10 per cent. on the amount thereof; and, until such duties, with such addition, shall be paid, they shall be and remain a lien upon the distillery where such liquors have been distilled, and upon the brewery where such liquors have been brewed, and upon the stills, boilers, vats, and all other implements thereto belonging, and upon the lot or tract of land whereon the distillery or brewery is situate, until the same shall have been paid.

Mr. KERNAN. I avail myself of this amendment to answer what has been said by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL.] He said if a person chooses to allow a distillery upon his land it should be liable to be sold in fee for the fault of the distiller. He must know there is a great deal of real estate leased where the tenant has the right to build a distillery upon it, and the landlord cannot prevent it. The distiller may make default and allow his landlord's property to be sold and buy it in himself, for there is to be no notice to the owner. It seems to me that such legislation is not necessary or wise. When we impose the penalty upon the man who makes the default, when we make all his interest in the manufacture liable, I think that is as far as we ought to go. I think we cannot constitutionally, and should not if we could, forfeit any man's fee for the default of another. I hope the amendment will be non-concurred in, so that the whole matter may be revised.

Mr. MORRILL. This is done to remedy an evil in the internal revenue law. Irresponsible parties lease distilleries, distill for a certain time, and then abandon them, defrauding the Government of revenue. I think the case proposed by the gentleman from New York is rare. If there be one the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will have the power to remit the forfeiture.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 67, not voting 50; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ashley, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blair, Boutwell, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Daves, Denning, Dixon, Donnelly, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Kelley, Julian, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Loan, Longyear, McClurg, McIndoe, Samuel F. Miller, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Norton, Orth, Perham, Pike, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Schenck, Sloan, Smithers, Stevens, Thayer, Thomas, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Webster, Whaley, Wilder, Wilson, and Windom—65.

NAYS.—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chanler, Coffroth, Cox, Dawson, Eldridge, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hutchins, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Marcy, McAllister, McDowell, McKinney, Middleton, Moorhead, James R. Morris, Morrison, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Odell, Pendleton, Perry, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Scofield, Scott, Shannon, Smith, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Sweat, Tracy, Wadsworth, Ward, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Williams, and Fernando Wood—67.

NOT VOTING.—Messrs. Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Blaine, Bliss, Blow, Boyd, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Clay, Cravens, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, Eden, Edgerton, English, Fenton, Grinnell, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knapp, Littlejohn, Long, Mallory, Marvin, McBride, William H. Miller, Charles O'Neill, John O'Neill, Patterson, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Edward H. Rollins, Ross, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, John B. Steele, Stuart, Voorhees, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—50.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. A short time since I moved the appointment of a second committee of conference upon the legislative and executive appropriation bill. Inasmuch as it is important to have the bill acted upon speedily, I desire not to be a member of the committee, and to suggest, if it is proper to do so, that inasmuch as the present committee not only understand the subject-matters in controversy, as also the views of the House, which no doubt they will take in the nature of instructions, that it would be better for the public service that the same committee should be reappointed.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the suggestion made by the gentleman from Indiana, the Chair reappoints the same committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate have agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill of the House (No. 290) for the relief of Rhoda Wolcott, widow of Henry Wolcott.

That the Senate have passed a bill (H. R. No. 521) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of the claims of Peruvian citizens under the convention between the United States and Peru of the 12th of January, 1863," approved June 1, 1864, without amendment.

That the Senate have passed a bill (S. No. 278) prescribing the terms on which exemplifications shall be furnished by the General Land Office; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

That the Senate have disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate (No. 266) to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 356) requiring proof of payment of duties on foreign salt before payment of the allowances provided for by the acts of July 29, 1813, and March 3, 1819; and an act (H. R. No. 40) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1865, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

INTERNAL REVENUE—AGAIN.

Four hundred and sixty-first amendment:

In section one hundred and three, line four, strike out "three" and insert "two and a half;" so that the section will read:

That any person, firm, company, or corporation carrying on or doing an express business shall be subject to and pay a duty of 2½ per cent. on the gross amount of all the receipts of such express business.

Mr. HOLMAN. The effect of this amendment of course is easily perceived. It is to diminish the tax upon the gross receipts of these express companies from 3 to 2½ per cent. I do not know any companies in the country who can better afford to pay a large tax than these companies. It seems to me there is no reason for reducing the taxes they are required to pay. Three per cent., indeed, does not correspond with the tax we impose upon other departments of business, and the experience of every member must be that the express companies throughout the entire country make charges for the performance of their services far exceeding almost any other branch of public business. I trust the amendment will not be concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL. Representations were made to the Committee of Ways and Means which satisfied them that 2½ per cent. was a very large amount of tax to be paid by these companies. They have in the first place to hire and pay the railroad companies for freight cars, and their exhibits show that of their gross receipts they pay out 80 per cent. for expenses of all sorts. So that $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon the gross receipts is a very large tax.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to say one word further in reference to this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can only proceed by unanimous consent, as debate is exhausted.

No objection was made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to state a single fact in regard to the extent that these companies can bear taxation. Two weeks ago I wished to send to the city of Cincinnati the remains of a dead private soldier, whose friends desired his remains to rest at their home. The passage of a citizen from here to Cincinnati is $17. The charges made for the transportation of the body of a dead soldier from this city to Cincinnati, as freight, was the sum of $40.

I wish to say in this connection, that the State of Pennsylvania is the only State I know of which seems to have a proper regard for the sacrifices which are being made, both by the living, and the affections of the living, for those who fall in our service. That State makes arrangements by which their dead soldiers go to their home for interment.

The express companies, which are here for the favor of paying only $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. instead of the 5 per cent. imposed upon other persons engaged in business, charged for the simple service of transporting the remains of a dead soldier from here to a point but a short distance beyond the city of Cincinnati, \$40; and for its transportation a little distance beyond, they charged \$5 where a private individual would have charged 75 cents. Now, I do not see any reason why these companies should be favored. On the contrary, I believe that there is no department of business in the country that pays such enormous profits. I am told by those familiar with the subject that all of these companies have duplicated their stock, and still the stock retains its actual value, the nominal price at which it was originally established. It is profitable beyond all measure, because they are enabled by monopolies to control the transportation throughout the entire country. It does seem to me that there is no reason why this reduction should be made. I call for tellers on concurring in the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. McKINNEY and THAYER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 62.

So the amendment was not concurred in.

Six hundred and thirtieth amendment:

Strike out the following section:

SEC. 178. And be it further enacted, That all spirits of domestic production and held for sale on the 1st day of May, 1864, and upon which no tax shall have been paid, shall be subject to a duty of 50 cents per gallon, and all such spirits on hand for sale upon which a prior duty shall have been paid shall be subject to a duty of 30 cents per gallon: Provided, That bona fide retail dealers in spirits duly licensed shall not be taxed on their stock on hand whose quantity on hand does not exceed two barrels.

Mr. MORRILL. This question has been so often tried in the House that I suppose hardly any gentleman desires to make up a further record on the subject. I am assured by the friends of the proposition to tax liquors on hand that they have absolutely no hope of its passing the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I would like to know who those friends are.

Mr. MORRILL. I can see no reason for delaying the House on this subject. Every day's delay in the passage of this bill costs the Government at least half a million dollars. I think gentlemen must be satisfied with the record, and must also be satisfied of another thing, that if a tax should be levied on liquors on hand it would not reach the parties who have made most on them.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. In reply to the gentleman from Vermont I desire to say that whatever this House or the other House may have done upon this question, there is a great principle involved, and we are not prepared to yield it in consequence of any precedents. I believe that if liquor on hand is taxed the revenue to be derived from it will be three times what it would have been heretofore. We know that manufactories and stills have been going to an unprecedented extent for the last three months in anticipation of the passage of this bill, and that the quantity that can now be reached by the operation of the amendment of the House is unprecedentedly large. I am surprised, therefore, that the gentleman is not prepared to avail himself of the amount of revenue which can be derived from it. I hope the House will not concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. I move to strike out the proviso to the section. This question has been very fully discussed before the House, and the House has, as far as it has been able, on various occasions determined to tax the stock on hand. Upon the one side of the Chamber they tell us that they desire to furnish means to carry on the Government. Upon this side of the Chamber some of us say that we are ready to meet you and aid you to the extent of our power in adding every dollar possible to increase the revenue.

When this question first came before the House, I, with others, voted to tax the stock on hand. I did it because I honestly believed that it would add more money to the Treasury. I honestly believe now that this Government has lost millions of dollars by the debates that have been had and the controversy upon this bill.

One thing further, Mr. Speaker. I find that we upon this side of the Chamber who were willing to aid the Government by all the men and means necessary to quell the rebellion, we who joined with the gentleman from New York in voting with him when the question was first presented, when the issue was presented to the country on the tangible and practical question of adding dollars to the Treasury, every man who was extremely anxious to tax the stock on hand, because, as they said, it would add money to the Treasury, voted against the entire bill.

Mr. Speaker, there is but one single point in the issue, and that point is this: that the taxing of this specific article on hand is out of the ordinary course and rule of congressional action. No other species of property has been taxed as property. The theory and operation of the present bill is that it is a taxation not on property but on manufactures. That being so, I, for one, agreeing with those who desire to bring money into the Treasury, also agree with those who desire to stop this controversy, and to enable the Government to commence the receipt of customs from the proceeds of this business. When the time comes that it will be the policy of a majority of the House to tax property as property and not as manufactures, then will gentlemen who desire to put money into the Treasury join with those who desire to tax the stock on hand. When you tax real estate, when you tax personal property as property, not as manufactures, then we can all join together.

This controversy all arises from one cause. It arises from the opinions of men who are opposed to all taxation. The gentlemen of the House will find one fact, that every single man who is extremely anxious to tax the stock on hand, on the one side of the Chamber, invariably votes against every tax bill presented to the consideration of Congress. It is time that the country was receiving some money from this business; and the quicker we get out of the disagreement among ourselves the better it will be, at all events, for the Government.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I rise to oppose the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I ask leave to withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object to the gentleman withdrawing it. I must say that I was somewhat amused at the grave suggestion of my friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] made to us in reference to this amendment, which is deemed by a majority of the House very vital and important to their constituents who are the taxpayers.

The gentleman from Vermont says that we have made our record. We have. This side has made its record over and over again in favor of imposing a just and proper tax on the stock of whisky on hand. In every instance but one where we have taken a vote there has been a majority in favor of this proposition. And now we are asked by the gentleman who has from the commencement of this session been the champion of exempting this great speculating and gambling interest from taxation that the friends of this just taxation shall make no further record, and give no further trouble on the subject. I hope the gentleman's appeals will be disregarded. His statements as to what the loss of the Government has been, and what the future loss may be, on account of this delay, fall harmless before me. Let us, as representatives of the people here, the immediate representatives of the tax-payers, do our duty to our constituents and to the country. If the Senate see fit to interpose, let the responsibility fall upon that body.

I hope the House will insist first, last, and all the time, on this amendment. If there be a desire to save time and to let this bill go into operation, let the gentleman from Vermont call upon his friends in the Senate to recede from their action and accept the portion of the bill passed in this House. Let this tax fall upon those men who are so well able to bear it, and let us have the fifteen or twenty million dollars put into the Treasury which we need now most grievously.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to discuss this question at length. I only desired to express the hope that every man who has stood by this position heretofore, on the grounds of its justice and its policy, will stand so to the end. We can stand on this. I think the country has passed upon it. I think that our constituents at home who have canvassed our action are satisfied that this tax shall be laid.

Mr. NELSON. Can the gentleman name any other article in this bill taxed as property?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman asked that question before, and I am glad that he has again reminded me of it. He says it is unusual to lay a tax of this description. I tell him we have adopted a provision, which is now a law, taxing liquors on hand. We have established the precedent in the revenue bill which passed in the earlier part of the session. We imposed a tax on all foreign liquors on hand, and I want my friend from New York to tell me where is the difference in principle between imposing a tax on foreign liquors on hand and imposing a tax on domestic liquors on hand.

Mr. WILSON. I move the previous question on this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Is not the House acting as in committee? How can there be any previous question?

The SPEAKER. The motion is the same as one to close debate.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Do not the same rules apply as in committee?

The SPEAKER. The House is acting as in Committee of the Whole, and a motion for the previous question is precisely the same as a motion to close debate on an amendment under consideration in committee.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois.

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON. I reply to the gentleman from Illinois that there is a wide distinction between the two systems of taxation. Our people never before the present time have known such a thing as an internal revenue bill. It has now, however, become indispensable under the circumstances for the American people. The necessities of the Government require it. Congress has adopted a plan of taxation, and I state to the gentleman from Illinois that in that plan we have determined to tax articles, not as property, but as manufactures. Whatever tax may be laid upon all imported articles furnishes no precedent for the taxation of any article under our internal revenue system, because that is an entirely different system. Our internal revenue tax is a system per se in itself, and under that system no other article is taxed as property.

Mr. WILSON. I now ask for a vote on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will withdraw that demand for a moment.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If the demand for the previous question is to be withdrawn I desire to be heard in reply to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. INGERSOLL. My constituents are very

Mr. MORRILL. That is precisely the proposition I intended to make.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Then I do not think the gentleman stated it very clearly.

Mr. MORRILL. Perhaps not. I now move that we take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands, then, that any gentleman can to-night demand a separate vote on all the amendments.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. That is what I desire, and I assure the gentleman from Vermont that, so far as I am concerned, there shall be no factious action. The gentleman will recollect that I voted in favor of this tax bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair then understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania to reserve the right to claim a separate vote this evening on every amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. The Speaker understands me correctly.

Mr. FENTON. There is to be a separate vote on all those he or any other gentleman indicates, but on all others the vote is to be taken in gross.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman claims a separate vote on such amendments as he desires, indicating them as the Clerk reads them.

Mr. MORRILL. I now press my motion for a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at half past four o'clock, p. m.) the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock, p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House resumed its session at half past seven o'clock p. m.

VOTE RECORDED.

Mr. VAN VALKENBURGH. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to record my vote in favor of concurring in the six hundred and thirtieth amendment of the Senate to the internal revenue bill.

No objection was made; and Mr. VAN VALKENBURGH voted in the affirmative.

MICHIGAN LAND GRANT.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table bill of the House No. 227, granting lands to the State of Michigan for the construction of certain wagon roads for military and postal services, for the purpose of concurring in the amendments of the Senate. I will state that although I should have preferred the bill as it originally passed the House, regarding the Senate amendments as not very important, and not being willing to run the risk of losing the bill this session, I, as well as the Committee on Public Lands, am willing to concur. I therefore move to concur.

No objection being made, the bill was taken up, and the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. DRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OVERLAND MAIL ROUTE.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to inform the House what bids were made for carrying the mails on the overland route to the Pacific, giving each bid, and whether any of the bidders were persons belonging to the present Overland Mail Company; if so, what was his bid; also, what is the amount of the contract with the present contractors.

Mr. BROOKS. I read all that information in the newspapers this morning.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let us have it officially.

Mr. STEVENS. I am afraid there are some things that we do not know.

The resolution was agreed to.

WASHINGTON MARKET BUILDINGS.

Mr. THOMAS, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing some arrangement with the corporate authorities of Washington city for the removal of the unsightly buildings used as market-houses, standing between Pennsylvania avenue and the Washington canal, and for the au-nexation of the ground now occupied by these buildings to the area in which the buildings of the Smithsonian Institution are placed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The House proceeded, as a special order, to the consideration of House bill No. 438, to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862.

Mr. STEVENS. I have one or two amendments which I am directed by the special committee on the Pacific railroad to offer to this bill. I move to amend section twelve by adding after the words "railroad company" the words "now known as the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division;" so that it will read:

That the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company, now known as the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, shall build the railroad from the mouth of Kansas river by the way of Leavenworth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move a similar amendment to the same section at the end of the words "the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend the thirteenth section by inserting "one" instead of "two;" so that it will read:

At least one of said Government directors shall be placed on each of the standing committees of said company, and at least one on every special committee that may be appointed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend by inserting after the thirteenth section the following:

The next election for directors of said railroad shall be held on the first Wednesday of October, at the office of said company in the city of New York, between the hours of ten o'clock a. m. and four o'clock p. m. of said day; and all subsequent regular elections shall be held annually thereafter at the same place; and the directors shall hold their office for one year, and until their successors are qualified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend by inserting after the foregoing amendment the following:

The several companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads are hereby required to operate and use said roads and telegraph for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line, and in such operation and use to afford and secure to each other equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend that amendment by adding the following words:

And that said road shall be a public highway, and shall transport the property and troops of the United States, which transportation thereof shall be required free of toll or other charge.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. That is already in the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. The original charter provides for the transportation of troops and munitions of war. That transportation was to be charged and credited on the interest that the Government may pay on the bonds. The work was not to be done free of charge. The companies were allowed to charge for it, and the charge was to be credited on the Government bonds.

Mr. HOLMAN. I remember the original proposition substantially as the gentleman from Pennsylvania now states it. It provides for the transportation of military supplies of the Government on reasonable terms. The argument against the incorporation of this provision into another bill to construct a road to the Pacific—a northern road—was urged that this bill contained no provision of the kind at all. It has been said, and probably with truth, that no other land-grant road in the country has been constructed without a provision of this kind as a compensation to the Government that the troops and property of the United States shall be transported free of charge. We began that policy, I believe, as early as 1851–52, in the grant of lands to the State of Illinois, and for other roads running from Chicago and Galena on to Mobile; and so far as I am aware there has been no deviation from that policy since. Prior to that there was the same rule as to canals.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman whether he knows a single instance in which the troops and munitions of the Government have been transported free; whether all these roads have not charged and received pay?

Mr. HOLMAN. The question which the gentleman asks is easily answered. In 1861, when our difficulties sprang up, and when this subject began to acquire interest, it came up before the House. The question was referred to the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the fact whether these land-grant roads were bound to transport the troops and property of the Government free of charge. The committee reported that the companies were so bound. They reported that the companies were so liable. It was ascertained within the last few months that the Illinois Central railroad, built just as this is proposed to be built, by the Government, by a vast grant of public lands, and other roads had been receiving two-thirds of the ordinary cost of transportation that other roads throughout the country had been receiving. A certain uniform rate was paid to these land-grant railroads by the Secretary of War. The decision was made by the Secretary of War in the fall of 1861 that they should receive two-thirds of the amount paid to the other roads. This House in the month of February last adopted a resolution not only requiring the Secretary of War to cause the amount paid to them to be refunded, but to decline hereafter paying them one cent, because they were liable under the terms of the grant to transport the property and troops of the Government free of charge. That was to be the only benefit received by the whole people for these grants of public lands.

It is true, therefore, that there has been an effort to avoid that provision of these land grants. It was required that the amount paid, some $700,000, should be refunded, and that no amount should be paid to any one of these roads. That resolution was adopted unanimously by this House. So was the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, that these roads were bound to transport the property and troops of the Government free of charge.

I may say then, sir, that it is the settled policy of this body that corporations receiving these grants of land shall make this transportation without charge to the Government. It is only fair to the Government. These grants of land belong to the whole country, and not to the Territories through which the roads pass. The only compensation to the American people is that these roads become military highways, over which the property and troops of the Government could be transported free of charge. It is the only benefit you receive, and it is one the people demand.

Mr. PRUYN. This amendment to the amendment it seems to me is objectionable in the particular way in which it is put by the gentleman from Indiana, and it ought to be modified. I hope that the gentleman will consent to the modification that the roads shall carry troops and munitions of war without charge to the Government if the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that their finances will enable them to do so, or if not, that they shall carry them at cost.

The sixth section of the original charter of this company is as follows:

"SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the grants aforesaid are made upon condition that said company shall pay said bonds at maturity, and shall keep said railroad and telegraph line in repair and use, and shall at all times transmit dispatches over said telegraph line, and transport mails, troops, and munitions of war, supplies, and public stores, upon said railroad for the Government, whenever required to do so by any Department thereof, and that the Government shall at all times have the preference in the use of the same for all the purposes aforesaid, (at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amounts paid by private parties for the same kind of service;) and all compensation for services rendered for the Government shall be applied to the payment of said bonds, and interest upon the whole amount is fully paid. Said company may also pay the United States, wholly or in part, in the same or other bonds, Treasury notes, or other evidences of debt against the United States, to be allowed at par; and after said road is completed, until said bonds and interest are paid, at least five per cent. of the net earnings of said road shall also be annually applied to the payment thereof."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. PRUYN. The charter of 1862. The gentleman from Indiana thinks that the road should be opened to the use of the Government without charge. The Secretary of War puts the construction that there was nothing in the statute to compel these companies to furnish men and rolling stock to work these roads free of charge.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Who was the Secretary of War?

Mr. HOLMAN. Secretary Cameron. He was vice president of the Northern Central railroad, receiving a salary of $4,000 from that company and $8,000 from the Government.

Mr. PRUYN. It does not make a particle of difference who made the decision; the decision was made. The Department decided that the act incorporating the Illinois Central Railroad Company did not require them to furnish rolling stock and men to the Government, but only to give to the Government the right to use the road for that purpose, and that they were entitled to indemnity for their rolling stock and men.

Now, with reference to the report to which the gentleman has alluded, it was introduced into this House without a single member of this House knowing anything about it. It was not discussed; its contents were not stated; the company were not heard; and to the utter surprise of everybody that resolution passed without any officer of the company knowing anything about it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Secretary of War was called upon by a resolution to state the amount of money paid to the Illinois Central and other railroad companies which had received land grants. That was a public proceeding. He made a report showing the amount which had been so paid. The report, after being read at the Clerk's desk, was referred to the Committee of Claims, and they reported back the resolution to which I have referred, requiring these companies to refund the money, and directing the Secretary of War not to pay anything to these roads in the future.

So the gentleman from New York can scarcely say that so many transactions could have occurred here in such a public manner without attracting public attention, especially as that report embodied the resolution of the Judiciary Committee, reported to this House two years ago, and adopted by this body by a unanimous vote, declaring the principle that these companies were obliged to transport these troops free of charge.

Mr. PRUYN. I do not care what Secretary of War made the decision. The payment was continued down to a recent period, and, for aught I know, it is being made still. I have no interest in that road, and have nothing to do with it; and I heard of this by accident.

With regard to the report of the Committee of Claims, all I can say is this, that while that committee have considered every five hundred dollar case which came before it, it so happened that this subject was brought up, and at the first meeting, at which I was not present, was passed upon without discussion, the members present knowing the gentleman from Indiana was well acquainted with the matter, and relying upon the gentleman's judgment, which they supposed to be perfectly well informed. I have no hesitation in saying that some of them subsequently expressed great regret that the report was made under the circumstances in which it was made.

I hope that the gentleman from Indiana will consent that the bill may be modified in one of the ways I have mentioned, either requiring that the road shall carry the property of the Government without pay, provided the Secretary of the Treasury is of opinion that their finances will justify it, or be required to carry such property at cost.

Mr. STEVENS. I would suggest whether in ordinary legislation it is competent to alter the original charter. The original charter under which those who subscribed to this road acted gave the preference in the transaction of the business over this road to the Government at a reasonable rate, not exceeding that charged by other routes and individuals. But although the Government granted a subsidy of so many bonds a mile, the bill went upon the supposition that that was to be paid back by the company out of the part earnings of the company in doing the business of the Government.

I submit whether it would be fair to alter the fundamental condition upon which this road was established, so as to take away all the profits of the road from the Government business. After this road is built, I have no doubt the receipts from the business of the Government will be very large between its eastern and western empire. It will go very far, I have no doubt, toward paying the interest upon the Government bonds. I am sure it is not the intention of the gentleman from Indiana, or of any other gentleman in this House, to embarrass this road so as to prevent its construction. I hope every facility will be given by the Government for the building of this road, and least of all, that it will not violate the original law or charter under which this company was organized. I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be adopted. While we should not violate the charter, I do not say we may not amend it, because in the original charter Congress reserved the right to alter and amend, doing justice to the parties. We reserved the right to repeal the original charter, and I suppose that Congress can repeal it if Congress thinks that it is a work of such little benefit to the country. I hope that the bill, if it passes, will pass without the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. If, when the bill shall have been maturely considered—and I do not ask that it shall not be maturely considered—the House thinks it ought not to pass, that is another thing; but if it is to pass, let it pass in such a way as to be effective.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to be understood as throwing the slightest obstacle in the way of the passage of this bill. On the contrary, it has struck me from the beginning that every reasonable facility ought to be offered by the Government for the construction of this road; but after all it must be admitted that the benefits of these grants, to a large extent, must inure to certain companies.

Mr. SHANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks that the construction of a railroad, however it may inure to the benefit of the builders in the end, will not materially aid and inure to the benefit of the whole country? Now, I undertake to say, if the gentleman will permit me, that no company will undertake to build this road with such a provision as this amendment in it, and I undertake to say also, and the history of the past will bear me out, that the parties who build the road will be losers in the end.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not so much confidence in the capitalists of this country at this time in connection with railroad operations as to believe that they are going to make any such venture. I know that in the infancy of the railroad enterprises of the country there were immense investments made upon mere speculation, upon mere calculations, which were never realized, by which heavy losses were sustained. But the hour for that, resulting from the experience of the country, has passed, and men now make their investments with a view to the advantage that they themselves are to derive.

Mr. SHANNON. The gentleman must take into consideration that this railroad is a pioneer operation in advance of the settlement of the country. It is intended to connect two continents together, passing through a strip of country of over one thousand miles that will not be settled up for a great many years, and the road cannot be a paying enterprise; and if you undertake to cripple it by such a provision as this, I am afraid the road will not be built.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not the slightest apprehension in this matter. I would not on any account, considering the condition of the country, throw any embarrassments in its way. I have seen the calculations of capitalists and of the men engaged in this enterprise. I know exactly what they are relying on, whether their calculations are correct or not, and I know that their data are satisfactory to themselves. If this great thoroughfare be constructed by the aid of the Government and by the bonds of the Government, with the enormous grant of lands by the Government and the great encouragement and favor of the Government, the capitalists of New York and the other great cities on the Atlantic seaboard very properly anticipate an enormous benefit. It must throw the trade of the Indies right across this continent; it must command a trade unexampled in the history of mankind. It is with a view to this that this great work is entered on by capitalists. We look upon this work as a mere national thoroughfare, a mode of uniting the Pacific States with the Atlantic States. We contemplate it as a measure of union, to bridge over, if possible, that vast chasm that lies between the northwestern States and the States of the Pacific; and I never saw an argument in favor of this measure except the argument in favor of union and the necessity of creating fraternal relations between the States east of the Rocky mountains, lying contiguous to and drained by the branches of the Mississippi river, and the far-off golden regions. We look upon it as a mere Union question, uniting the two sections of the country together. Capitalists contemplate it in an entirely different light. With them it opens up the Indies, and Asia, with her wealth, to the traffic and commerce not only of the Pacific coast but of the Atlantic coast. Incorporated companies are to construct this road, and the question is, whether the sacrifices which the people themselves are to make, not simply the grant of lands but of money, are to have any possible compensation from the character of the services which these companies are to render. The companies themselves—looking at the subject as a mere enterprise, a question of dollars and cents—can never compensate us at all for our outlay except in the mode which I have indicated in my amendment—that is, transporting the property and troops of the Government free of charge. We have no other benefit from the road at all. We talk of it as a military road.

Mr. SHANNON. The gentleman is certainly aware of the fact that for every dollar the nation invests in the construction of this railroad it will receive a hundred in return. The advantages accruing from the construction of this road will be equivalent, in a few years, to a thousand dollars to one.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know exactly how it will operate so far as my own State is concerned. I represent an inland State, through which this road will pass. I can conceive how the great cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Boston may be built up by it and receive enormous benefits. But it will be in my State a mere thoroughfare, for the cost of building which my constituents are to bear the burdens of taxation; and I am yet to perceive in what manner my people are to be compensated for this outlay of money. I do not see how it is to be done. I can see how the commerce of the Pacific may be brought across this continent. I can conceive how the wealth of the Indies may be made to flow into the cities of New York and Boston. But I cannot conceive how my own State, which is to be a mere case-ment for the thoroughfare of the great cities of the country, is to be benefited by the tax which it must contribute toward paying this $95,000,000.

Mr. PRUYN. The whole country will be benefited by it.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from New York says, very justly, that the whole country will be benefited by this road. Every part of this nation reciprocates in some sense and feels the prosperity of every other part. But it is very remote. Agriculture receives but very little impulse from the benefits which this road may confer on the great cities of the Atlantic coast.

I hold in my hand a report, made to the Senate on the 11th day of last month, showing the amount of expenditure that the Government will be called upon to make in connection with the bill then pending before that body, and which was substantially the same as the present bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Oh, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. This report shows that the amount to be expended in this work by the Government between 1864 and 1876 is $95,088,000. That is independent of the grant of lands—the most stupendous grant ever made in the history of mankind. You lose sight of that in the contemplation of the appropriation of over ninety-five million dollars of the public treasure between 1864 and 1876. And for the benefit of whom? For the benefit of these corporations. Whatever view we may have in contemplation of uniting the Pacific States with the Atlantic States, the companies themselves look upon the investment as a mere question of dollars and cents. They are actuated by no other motive. They make no other calculation. We see here every day figuring in this business a gentleman from New York; and if the gentleman from California will take his estimates he will find that the value of this work as a Union enterprise is never taken into consideration at all. The patriotism of this thing does not weigh a feather in the estimation of these people. It is not the question of connecting the Atlantic coast with the Pacific coast, but it is a question of dollars and cents. It is a question of capital and revenue.

This work is necessary. We consider it to be necessary. We want to unite ourselves by this great thoroughfare. But we are asked to confer everything upon this company and to receive nothing at their hands. We know the avariciousness of the other companies to which these grants have been made. We know the rapacity of the Illinois Central railroad that was willing to take out of the Treasury half a million dollars at a time like this—a road, every inch of which was built by your capital, and the stock of which is in the possession of foreign capitalists. That grant ought to teach us a lesson in reference to the grants of lands made to these corporations, to see that some benefit accrues to the Government. Yes, sir, European capitalists hold the Illinois Central railroad, every inch of which was built by the public land which we granted, and yet they were not willing in a time of war to transport a pound of freight or a soldier without compensation. They did that when every dollar of their profit, every dollar of their original capital, was derived from the munificent grant of land made to them fifteen years ago.

I trust the House will not consent to make these enormous grants in addition to those already made, without requiring that the property and the troops of the United States shall be transported in time of war free of charge. It is all that we get for the immense outlay that we are making.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is with regret that I have to occupy for a moment the attention of the House in regard to this important measure. The bill under consideration is a mere amendment to the law passed by the last Congress; and the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will introduce an entirely new feature; it will substantially and radically change the fundamental law of last Congress. Everybody understands that the whole system of legislation with regard to this great national work has been upon the supposition that it was a great national necessity, that the entire country was interested in it, and that Congress was justified in making large appropriations of land and money for the purpose of carrying it forward.

The last Congress made appropriations of money, and in order to encourage the men who should undertake to build this road with the hope that they may some day repay that money, or at least repay the interest, they provided that the freight for carrying the property of the Government over this road should be applied to the payment of the money which the Government advanced. It seems to me that, in considering a measure which seeks to amend some of the provisions of the act to enable this company to build this great public work, for us to change the entire principle on which the law was adopted is a complete stepping aside of the legitimate objects of legislation at this time. If the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana should be adopted, these companies, instead of being benefited by the legislation which we propose to extend to them, would be a hundred times worse off under this bill than under the law as it now stands. And I cannot understand how so clear-headed a gentleman as my friend from Indiana can expect that anybody will give him the credit of being a friend to this bill when he comes here and proposes that which is utter death to it.

Why was it that the Thirty-Seventh Congress was willing to give such an amount of money and land for the purpose of aiding in the construction of this road? Because it was considered a great public necessity. It was considered that all they could give, provided the road was built, would be repaid in a thousand ways to this great country. In the amendments proposed by the committee we have not granted one single further dollar of Government aid, we have not attempted to make the Government responsible for one single dollar more, but we have tried to give such further assistance in an indirect way as would enable the enterprising men who have undertaken this work to go on with it.

And here allow me to disagree with my distinguished friend from Indiana in the idea that the men who are engaged in this great public enterprise are engaged only with the hope of making money. I could name to him many patriotic men who have come forward with their ten and twenty thousand dollars to put into this road for the purpose of encouraging the enterprise—and I need not go out of this House to find some of those examples—without any hope or expectation of ever being pecuniarily benefited by the advance thus made.

Now it was because this was a great public work that the last Congress thought it wise to give this aid. They thought that this company, if it was organized, would be able to pay back this money. And I apprehend that the moment this road is in operation the business of the Government may, and probably would, in time of war particularly, absorb so much of the entire working stock of the road that they cannot go on and pay their expenses except by receiving some compensation for it. And it was thought that if the transportation which the Government received was credited upon advances, it would be equitable and fair. The question was ably and thoroughly discussed in this Hall when the original bill was under consideration; and that Congress in its wisdom thought proper to enact this law, and I do not think it is fair and legitimate now to go back to the original law and attempt to change its entire scope and meaning, and thereby defeat its object, after men have invested their money, relying upon its provisions. Better far that this bill should be defeated; better far no legislation whatever in regard to this great public work by this Congress.

I hope, therefore, that after weeks of anxious labor by the committee, after weeks of careful deliberation and study, with a view only, if possible, of helping forward this great public work, this great national necessity, that we shall be allowed to consider their simple amendments without going back and attempting to root up the law which is the foundation of this enterprise.

Mr. A. MYERS. It is very refreshing, Mr. Speaker, for us to have the privilege occasionally in this House of listening to those who scarcely ever occupy its time. I do not intimate that I am about to refresh this House in any sense at all, but I was very favorably struck with the fact that the honorable gentleman from Indiana had once more risen to give his views upon an important question. We who are in the habit of keeping our seats here nearly all the time know that the honorable gentleman rarely has the privilege of being heard. I presume, sir, it arises from his innate modesty, a bashful merit which usually seeks retirement.

I am inclined to think that some of us must be looking for a renomination, or we would not be offering all things at all times, but never at the right time. I am forcibly reminded of that old amusing allusion to a certain fact which I read when a boy, in a work not exactly proper for a Sunday school, although it was written by a clergyman of the Established church. I allude to a little incident which occurred in the very earliest life, I think, of Tristram Shandy. He tells us he has it by information historical, traditional, or in some other way, that at a certain time the old clock which stood in the corner had run down, or at least at a critical juncture a certain old lady was fearful it (the clock) might stop, and she put this question to the old gentleman: "John, did you wind up the clock to-night?" "Good Lord," says he, "such a question at such a time!" [Laughter.]

Sir, such an amendment to such a law and at such a time is just as inopportune. The gentleman's argument did not apply to the amendment which he offered. The argument was not to show, at least very little of it, that his amendment is legitimate, that it is proper, that it is reasonable, that it is sound, that it is advantageous. If I heard his speech correctly I could only conclude that it was intended more to defeat than carry this bill; that it was intended more for ridicule than to promote legislation. This amendment looks to me as if the gentleman who offered it was opposed to the whole measure, and offered it merely for the purpose of making a speech to gratify his constituents, on the ground that the railroad did run through the State of Indiana, and made that State merely a way station, with nothing but a stopping depot, where the iron horse that started from the golden sands of the Pacific shores would only stop to breathe a little, take in water, and then start off for Philadelphia and New York. It looks to me as if the gentleman was opposed to the measure for the reason that it will make Indiana only a way station on this great railroad or its connections. From his argument I was almost led to believe he was as fearful of the expediency or propriety of this great national work as that eminent member of the British Parliament who, when the question of constructing a railroad was first agitated in the United Kingdom, got up with all the solemnity of his legislative dignity, with all the wisdom and profundity which he could command, and shaking himself into the proper parliamentary position, said, "Mr. Speaker, it is my deliberate opinion that a railroad could not compete with a canal." [Laughter.] Sir, I consider his argument credulous, and one which looks upon this measure as another innovation upon the venerable system of common carrying by means of pack-saddled horses. He almost intimates that the road will not pay either the people or the Government. He does not say so directly, but he insinuates it by saying that he is afraid that this corporation will be injurious, and hence if we grant them lands we must have some little boon as a consideration for the favor which the Government holds out to it.

I am in favor of this bill. I am pleased to know that there are many members on the other side of the House who are in favor of the main policy of the original bill, and of the amendments as proposed by the committee. Many of us were not here to vote for the original bill as passed by a former Congress. Perhaps the gentleman from Indiana was. I have not hunted up his record. I have not a political scrap-book here to which I can turn on all occasions; but I think that the man who opposes or throws obstructions in the way of the commencement and early completion of this great highway, the Pacific railroad, will not have to live very long, or, in other words, will have to die very soon, not to regret such action. Yet my charity would impel me to hope that the honorable gentleman may long live. But when he or any other person, if there be one other man in the House so curiously constituted, who so habitually retains his seat, or when he does happen to express himself gives vent to such crude ideas as that the great State of Indiana is to be turned back into a wilderness, and blossom no longer in her roses of Democracy or Republicanism!—I say that when a gentleman so rises here suddenly and unexpectedly and speaks in that way, he is to be forgiven, and therefore I hope that the gentleman from Indiana may be spared and may live long enough to ride upon this road from one end of it to the other. All who favor this measure may go home perfectly satisfied with their action. He who supports, not he who opposes, the amendments of the committee will find an approving constituency. Neither will that constituency approve the less from the fact that a resolution urging an early completion of this great work has been made a plank in the platform of the Union party.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from the iron region of Pennsylvania—

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; the oil region.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, the gentleman from the oil region of Pennsylvania has had a good time generally this evening. He has not told us whether he has received a renomination or not. I suppose he has.

Mr. A. MYERS. Certainly I have.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is renominated, so that he is able to talk deliberately. There was an intimation, however, made by the member from New York [Mr. STEELE] which is the key-note of all this wonderful flowery declamation of gentlemen on this subject. The gentleman from New York went on to say that certain benevolent gentlemen on this floor, having, of course, no interest at heart except the interest of the country, had certain stock in this road. And it struck me, Mr. Speaker, that instead of the anecdote related by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. A. MYERS] the anecdote would be more appropriate which is told of a county judge living in the peanut region of his own State, which the gentleman, I believe, represents.

Mr. A. MYERS. No, sir; we have no nuts but hickory nuts up there. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. His are ground nuts. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. A case came before that judge in which a bridge and a road were involved. There was some sort of connection between them, but it did not seem clear to the judge how the connection was. He had no interest in the road, but he had an interest in the bridge. When the case came up for deliberation, he said, "If the court understands herself, and she rather thinks she does, the bridge is all right, but the road is all wrong." [Laughter.] I think it probable that my friend from Pennsylvania, having been engaged in the ground-nut business, or in the peanut war business, or, it may be, in the oil business of that part of the country, sees a chance of speculation, according to the intimation of my friend from New York; and the real source of mortification is this: that the gentleman, in his pleasantry, (which is very cheering indeed, especially, as he says, in a time like this,) has been turning argument into ridicule. It may be possible that the gentleman covers up, under fog and amusement, a grave and sober subject of consideration.

I was startled, sir, as a Representative on this floor, when it was stated—at a moment when we are voting away, in effect, $95,000,000 of the public treasure, and uncounted bodies of the public lands, without any recompense whatever—to hear the intimation made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. STEELE] that benevolent men on this floor had stock in the corporation by which this road is to be constructed.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I apprehend that the gentleman cannot very well fail, after making an attack of that kind, to yield to me.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield very freely to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I think that my friend from Indiana has departed from his usual fairness when he undertakes to pervert what I said in reference to men in this country having subscribed to stock in the Pacific railroad for the purpose of helping on this enterprise, by saying that I had intimated that any member of this House was interested directly or indirectly in this road. What I said on that subject I have no hesitation in repeating. I said that this was looked upon as a great public work, and that after the bill was passed by the last Congress, the men who took an interest in it sought to obtain subscriptions to stock, and that many were induced to subscribe without any idea of ever having a valuable investment in it. They did it as a matter of patriotism. And if the ideas of my distinguished friend from Indiana are so contracted and so belittled by his continual habit of dealing in 'small things' and talking about sixpences while spending dollars, that he cannot appreciate the possibility of a man having patriotism enough to invest in a work of great public necessity for the purpose of encouraging that work, without some idea of dollars in it, then I must confess that my distinguished friend's mind is more belittled and contracted than I supposed.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. Let me say a word further.

Mr. MORRILL. You will have another time. I call for the regular order of business.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read, and those on which a separate vote is not asked will be considered, under the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means, as non-concurred in.

Ninth amendment:

Strike out the following:
That for the purpose of assessing, levying, and collecting the duties or taxes hereinafter prescribed by this act, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to divide, respectively, the respective States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia into convenient collection districts, which he may alter, lessen, enlarge, or merge in other districts, as the public interests shall appear to him to require, and to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint, an assessor and a collector for each such district, who shall be residents within the same; Provided, That any of said States and Territories and the District of Columbia may, if the President shall deem proper, be erected into and included in one district: Provided further, That the number of districts in any State shall not exceed the number of Senators and Representatives to which such State shall be entitled in the present Congress.

And in lieu thereof insert the following:
The second section of an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government and to pay interest on the public debt," approved July 1, 1862, shall remain and continue in full force.

Mr. STEVENS. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in this amendment. I think that we ought to concur in it. The second section of that act provided that the States were to be divided into as many districts as were then represented in Congress, except where by the next apportionment they were increased in this Congress, and they were then to be made according to that apportionment already made. That has been done. If the House section be adopted it would take the apportionment of the present House for all, and New York, Pennsylvania, Maine, and some other districts would lose one district each; it would require a readjustment of all the districts; whereas if the Senate amendment is concurred in it will leave the districts precisely as they are now.

Mr. MORRILL. There would be no difference of opinion in relation to the point stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the propriety of concurrence with the Senate. It will be noticed that by the original section the committee has the right to alter these districts, and if we take the Senate amendment alone it will not leave that power. Therefore it had better be referred to the committee of conference.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Senate amendment will throw us back upon the act of 1862. At the time the several States were divided into districts it was found impracticable in Kentucky to make more than three or four districts. Such was the unsettled state of the country that it was deemed unwise to district Missouri and Kentucky according to the number of Representatives they had in Congress. The Attorney General decided that the President had not the power to reconstruct the districts. If we accept the Senate amendment Kentucky and Missouri will be kept as they are now, a provision which is unwise in reference to a state of peace. I think it important that the conference committee should adopt something to give the President power to change these districts. I hope we will non-concur, and send it to the conference committee.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-fifth amendment:

Strike out "2½," in the twenty-fourth section, and insert "3," so that it will read:

That there shall be allowed to collectors, in full compensation for their services and that of their deputies, a salary of $1,500 per annum, to be paid quarterly, and in addition thereto a commission of 3 per cent. upon the first $100,000.

Mr. PIKE. I hope that will be concurred in. It is for the benefit of the smaller districts. It is to give 3 per cent. on the first $100,000. In sparsely settled districts, composed of a number of counties, it is worth more to make collections than in large, populous districts.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to close debate on the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventy-ninth amendment:

In the following, strike out "4" and insert "5" so that it will read:

Provided, however, That the salary and commissions of no collector, except in the cases mentioned in the proviso in the twenty-second section of this act, exclusive of stationery, blank-books, and postage, shall exceed $10,000 in the aggregate, nor more than $5,000 exclusive of the expenses for deputies and clerks, to which such collector is actually and necessarily subjected in the administration of his office.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a vote on that amendment.

The balance, from four or five thousand dollars up to $10,000, is expended for the benefit of the deputies and clerks throughout the district, and the collector himself receives whatever pay we fix, either four or five thousand dollars, as an absolute compensation for the mere responsibility of holding the office. A decisive vote of the House fixing the amount of salary at $4,000—and which I think is not near low enough—will be considered even at this late moment as indicative to that little legislative body, the committee of conference, of the exact position of the House upon the subject.

Mr. WILSON. I move that all debate be closed upon this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Two hundred and fifty-seventh amendment:

On page 93, at the end of line twenty-three, add the following proviso:

Provided, That each savings bank except such as have no fixed capital, and whose business is confined to receiving deposits and loaning the same, and who do no other business of banking, shall be liable to pay $100 for license as a banker.

Mr. KERNAN. I hope the House will concur in this amendment. It will be observed that a license of $100 must be paid by all banks using or employing a capital not exceeding $50,000, and $2 for each additional $1,000. Then the Senate adopted this additional proviso, which was read by the Clerk. In other words, all savings banks are to pay a license of $100, except where they receive money of depositors and loan it out and do no other business. There are some savings banks which are simply agencies created by a Legislature, with directors who have no interest and receive no pay, to receive money and loan it out for humble depositors. As to them it is proposed they shall pay no license. And surely they should not. We might as well levy a tariff upon a charity-box, it seems to me. The proviso is well guarded, so that all those who do a business for a profit shall pay a license.

Mr. MORRILL. If this proviso is suffered to remain some small verbal changes ought to be made in order to render the provision perfectly secure. The expression used is "fixed capital," a phrase liable to different interpretations. These banks are not subject to any income tax upon profits, and they are composed of the deposits of such persons as see fit to make deposits, and they are not taxed in any other way.

Mr. KERNAN. If it will suit the gentleman any better, I will move to strike out the word "fixed," so as to make the proviso apply to banks that have no capital at all. I will say to the gentleman that this provision was drawn, I believe, by a Senator from his own State, and was intended to be so guarded as to exempt only those banks which simply loaned the money of poor depositors.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. It strikes me that the best course to pursue in reference to these savings institutions is to non-concur in this amendment. It is not perfect, as suggested by the gentleman from Vermont, and I would rather trust a committee of conference with it.

Mr. KERNAN. If the House desires to pursue that course, with a view to perfecting the amendment, I will accept it.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Three hundred and seventh amendment:

Strike out the words "miners actually producing shall pay for each and every license the sum of $10. Every person, firm, or company who shall employ more than one person under him or them in the business of mining coal, gold, silver, quicksilver, copper, lead, iron, zinc, spelter, or other minerals, shall be regarded as a miner under this act," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Assayers, assaying gold and silver, or either, of a value not exceeding in one year $250,000, shall pay $100 for each license, and $200 when the value exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $500,000, and $500 when the value exceeds $500,000. Any person or persons or corporation whose business or occupation it is to separate gold and silver from other metals or mineral substances with which such gold or silver, or both, are alloyed, combined, or united, or to ascertain or determine the quantity of gold or silver in any alloy or combination with other metals, shall be deemed an assayer for the purpose of this act.

Mr. SHANNON. I hope the House will concur in the amendment. The House will remember that this subject was discussed to a limited extent when the proposition was made in the House originally to tax miners and mining. The whole proposition is materially changed by the Senate amendment. The amendment proposes to tax the assayers, those engaged in the business of assaying gold and silver.

Now, my objection to sending this matter to a committee of conference is, that that committee will have no member upon it to lay before them the facts in relation to this proposition.

Now, sir, there is no justice in taxing a man for taking out of the earth a thousand dollars of a material that the civilized world fixes an absolute value upon. It is not like a manufacture, because the tax upon manufactured articles is paid after all by the consumer, and not by the manufacturer.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1864.

NEW SERIES.....No. 190.

But if I mine out a thousand dollars in gold your Government stamps an absolute value upon it, and I have to pay the tax. There is therefore no comparison between a miner and a manufacturer, and I undertake to say, and I think I know something about this mining question, that the proposition, as originally adopted by this House, to tax the miner 5 per cent. upon the gross proceeds of his mine, would absolutely discourage, cripple, and retard the development of our mineral resources. Sir, it is the most suicidal policy that this Congress or the Government could possibly adopt. That it will lessen the yield of gold and silver is beyond all question. That the tax as originally adopted by the House cannot be paid by the miners is clear, and the proposition of the Senate will certainly yield more revenue. I hope therefore that we shall concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. I move to close debate on this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The question was put on concurring in the amendment of the Senate; and there were—ayes 57, noes 24; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILSON demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORRILL and SHANNON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 31.

So the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Three hundred and eighty-first amendment:

Page 137, at the end of line eighty, insert the following: And provided also, That naphtha of specific gravity exceeding eighty degrees, according to Baume's hydrometer, and of the kind usually known as gasoline, shall be subjected to a tax of 5 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. PIKE. I ask the Committee of Ways and Means if they will not recommend concurrence in that amendment? It is an amendment drawn by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the interest of the revenue.

Mr. MORRILL. All the committee desire is to prevent frauds. I dare say this amendment is right, but I have no particular information on the subject.

Mr. PIKE. As the gentleman from Vermont has no doubt the amendment is right, I presume the House will concur in it.

The amendment was concurred in.

Four hundred and tenth amendment:

Page 147, in the three hundred and twenty-four, strike out "50 cents" and insert "$2" in lieu thereof; so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That when a duty upon the iron from which rivets, nuts, and bolts, as aforesaid, shall have been made, has been assessed and paid a duty of not less than $3 per ton, a duty only, in addition thereto, shall be paid of $2 per ton.

Mr. HOLMAN. In this rapid mode of going over the amendments by their numbers only, it is difficult to keep pace with the Clerk, and we have passed several amendments in relation to iron without my attention being drawn to them. I wish, however, to call particular attention to this amendment. Here is an increase from 50 cents to $2 per ton. Now, I have observed in the press throughout the country that the impression is that the duties levied on iron by the bill as it passed the House are too low. Indeed I think that, so far as the public press is any indication of public sentiment, there has been more complaint upon that one point than any other; that iron, the great interest of certain sections of the Union, has been entirely underrated in its capacity to bear reasonable taxation. This amendment of the Senate presents the subject somewhat fairly, but I understand that the Committee of Ways and Means recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that we propose to non-concur, not for the purpose of reducing the duty, but in order to leave the amendment open that the committee of conference may insert some further words to make the provision perfectly clear.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to obtain a vote upon this proposition for the purpose of indicating the sentiment of the House in regard to all these amendments relative to the duties on iron.

Mr. MORRILL. If the House concurs it will preclude the insertion of the words we propose.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to concur in the amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am in favor of concurring in every one of these amendments of the Senate in regard to iron, but unfortunately we have already passed over three or four of them and non-concurred. They have increased the duty on iron castings from $2 to $3 a ton. They have increased the duty on stoves and hollow ware from $3 to $5, and so on.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the gentleman that it is for no purpose of reducing the duty, but of changing the language as it should be changed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that these amendments will be concurred in for the purpose of instructing the committee of conference. We all know what these committees of conference are. We know that through them legislation is placed practically in the hands of three members from each House, and that in the ordinary course of proceeding the conference committee on this bill will comprise two members of the Committee of Ways and Means. We must legislate on this subject here, or we cannot legislate upon it at all. The public voice is never heard in a committee of conference. It can only be heard here in this House. I therefore move that the House concur in all these amendments, including those in regard to iron. Is that motion in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain the motion in regard to all the amendments in this paragraph, commencing at the four hundred and sixth amendment, but not in regard to the paragraphs which the House has passed from entirely.

Mr. MORRILL. The four hundred and seventh amendment is, I think, wrong. It actually reduces the duty. It is to strike out the words "not less than four ounces each in weight" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "exceeding five sixteenths of one inch in diameter."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to close debate on this paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time was up a minute or so.

Mr. HOLMAN. My motion is to concur in the four hundred and eighth, four hundred and ninth, and four hundred and tenth amendments.

These amendments are as follows:

Four hundred and eighth amendment:

Strike out "4" and insert "5."

Four hundred and ninth amendment:

Add the words "not less than."

Four hundred and tenth amendment:

Strike out "50 cents" and insert "$2;" so that the paragraph will read:

On rivets exceeding one fourth of one inch in diameter, nuts and washers not less than two ounces each in weight, and bolts exceeding five sixteenths of one inch in diameter, a duty of $5 per ton: Provided, That when a duty upon the iron from which rivets, nuts, and bolts, as aforesaid, shall have been made, has been assessed and paid a duty of not less than $3 per ton; a duty only, in addition thereto, shall be paid of $2 per ton.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Debate is exhausted. Two speeches have been made on each side.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I think the gentleman from Indiana ought to have more time. [Laughter.]

The question was taken; and there were, on a division—ayes 15, noes 73.

So the four hundred and eighth, four hundred and ninth, and four hundred and tenth amendments were non-concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. While I did not expect to have the yeas and nays ordered I desire to call for them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is too late in calling for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rose instantly after the division.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has always ruled that whenever a gentleman makes a speech before calling for the yeas and nays, the call comes too late.

The four hundred and eleventh amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out of the proviso in the foregoing paragraph, in regard to rivets and washers, "$1 50" and insert "$3;" so that it will read:

Provided further, That all iron and castings of iron of all descriptions advanced beyond pig iron, blooms, slabs, or loops, upon which no duty has been assessed or paid in the form of pig iron, shall be assessed and pay, in addition to the foregoing rates of iron so advanced, a duty of $3 per ton; and when no duty has been assessed or paid thereon in the form of blooms, slabs, or loops, shall be assessed and pay, in addition to the foregoing rates of iron advanced as aforesaid, a duty of $3 per ton.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a vote on that amendment, to see whether Pennsylvania overrides all other interests.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I have a word to say, Mr. Speaker, in regard to that amendment. The gentleman from Indiana has twice said that Pennsylvania overrides other interests. I consider that Pennsylvania has been overtaxed; and yet we are willing to bear every reasonable amount of taxation. But I am not willing to let the gentleman from Indiana rise in his seat and say that Pennsylvania controls this House in so far, at least, as taxation is concerned. On the contrary, we have submitted and are still willing to submit to every taxation that does not place the last straw on the camel's back.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Four hundred and thirteenth amendment:

Strike out the following:

On gold and silver produced from quartz mines, from beds of rivers, from the earth, or in any other way or manner, a duty of 5 per cent.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. COLE, of California. I move that the amendment be concurred in. A substitute for this provision is found upon page 153 which contains all the necessary provisions upon this subject. It provides as follows:

On bullion in lump, ingot, bar, or otherwise, a duty of one half of one percent. ad valorem, to be paid by the assayer of the same, who shall stamp the product of the assay as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe by general regulations. And every and all sales, transfers, exchanges, transportation, and exportation of gold or silver assayed at any mint of the United States or by any private assayer, unless stamped as prescribed by general regulations, as aforesaid, is hereby declared unlawful; and every person or corporation who shall sell, transfer, transport, exchange, export, or deal in the same, shall be subject to a penalty of $1,000 for each offense and to a fine not exceeding that sum, and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years nor less than six months. No jeweler, worker or artificer in gold and silver shall use either of those metals except it shall have first been stamped as aforesaid, as required by this act; and every violation of this section shall subject the offender to the penalties contained herein. No person or corporation shall take, transport, or cause to be transported, export, or cause to be exported, from the United States any gold or silver in its natural state, uncolored or unassayed and unstamped, as aforesaid; and for every violation of this provision every offender shall be subject to the penalties contained herein: Provided, That the foregoing subdivision of this section providing for a tax on gold and silver shall only be in force from and after sixty days after the passage of this act.

It will be noticed that this provides all necessary restrictions against the gold going out of the country until a proper tax on it is paid.

It is to be regretted, Mr. Speaker, that not a member of the Committee of Ways and Means is acquainted by experience or observation with gold and silver mining, and that there are few members of the House, not more than two or three outside of the Representatives from the Pacific coast, who know anything about it. Let me say that it is the hardest and most poorly requited business in the country. This is susceptible of proof. I can state that although the State of California has been in need of revenue it has never levied a dollar of tax upon the miners, whereas other employments in the same localities have paid heavy taxes, in some instances more than seven per cent. a year.

This House has passed several measures to keep down the price of gold. Now, let me say that this tax if imposed will have the effect to increase the price of gold beyond any reduction that you will be able to secure by other measures. I hope that the members of the House will take a reasonable view of this matter, and concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I am the last man in this House to do California or any other State injustice. I am willing to avow my ignorance on the subject of gold mining; and I acknowledge there are other gentlemen in the House as ignorant as I am. I regret that we do not possess some of the information possessed by the gentlemen from the Pacific slope; but I understand that more than one gentleman from that region was willing to accept this provision.

I was precluded from saying anything on the first amendment taxing the license. I would have been willing to exclude those mining for gold, but for what reason should we exclude the tax on all those who are engaged in mining coal, in mining iron, in mining copper, in mining lead, in mining zinc? It seems for no other purpose than to have the gold mines exempt. The proposition is to strike out the tax of 5 per cent. upon all the gold that is mined, and yet the gentleman from California declares that if this tax is imposed it will raise the price of gold!

I am willing to put it in any shape acceptable to California, but I protest against the idea of so large and profitable an interest as this entirely escaping from taxation in such a crisis as that in which the country now is. It should be made to contribute its fair proportion.

I hope my friend who has so much more information will come forward with a better provision. I am not actuated by any feeling of ill nature or spite. I have the greatest kindness for that section of the country. I look upon it as a marvel in our history.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to reduce it to 3 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, when this bill was up before in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union each one of the three members from California had five minutes in which to discuss this all-important question. I find, in conversation with all men here upon this subject, that they look upon it precisely as I did before I went to that country and lived fourteen years and had experience there. It is necessary that men should have practical knowledge upon this subject to understand it fully and properly.

I will present three or four considerations to the House which will throw a little light upon this subject. While the State of California has sent out of the State, as an article of exportation, from six to eight hundred millions of gold, the taxable property in 1863 of the whole State was $160,000,000, and of that taxable property the city of San Francisco had at least one third, and the population of the city was about one fifth the population of the State. Now you may take the population of the mining sections of the State and compare the taxable property there with that in the agricultural and commercial portions of the State, and you will find the preponderance in the agricultural and commercial portions—that the mining district has far less wealth in proportion to population. What deduction is to be drawn from these facts? It is that the laborers in the mining districts receive far less pay than those in the agricultural and commercial districts. It illustrates the idea, which we have tried to show to this House in the few moments we have had, that the labor of the miner receives less pay than that of any other business.

What was the direction of this tax? As the bill went from the House it followed the miner into his claim, and taxed his first and his last dollar he took from it. It is not the amount of taxes you take from the State of California of which we complain, but of the way in which it is taken, the inequality of the burden, and of the persons from whom it is taken. While this subject was before the House I proposed an amendment by which the tax should be imposed upon the earnings of the miner, after deducting $600 for the support of his family, as you do in all other kinds of business; and immediately members here declared that we objected to being taxed. Why? Because we objected to being taxed differently from other men. We objected because you wanted to tax us where you do not tax other men. There you follow the laborer down to his first dollar and tax it. Nowhere else in this bill do you find the principle applied to any other class, for in all other cases you have given the laborer a living—you exempted to him $600 before you began to tax him. But when you go to our coast, and apply the tax to a business which, I tell you, pays less than others, there, for the first time, you impose an extra tax. You would do differently if you could understand this matter as we do. A great deal of gold is taken out of the mines, it is true. But the miners do not get the benefits of it. They are the poorest class in that country, and yet your bill proposes to tax them 5 per cent. upon every dollar their labor produces.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] says he has been informed by men from the Pacific coast that they would be satisfied with a tax of 3 per cent. The gentleman never got that statement from me. I say let this taxing of gold alone. Tax all branches of business, but let the miner get out the gold and put it into circulation. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENS. A most remarkable scene, illustrating the old doctrine, "Give him an inch and he will take an ell." By what authority does any miner in California dig gold upon the land of this Government? Not one of them but is a trespasser upon the public lands. No one of them that has paid a dollar for the privilege.

Mr. HIGBY. I would like to hear the gentleman say that to the miners. He says it here, but he would not say it there.

Mr. STEVENS. I say it here and everywhere. I say that not one of them has any title to the land. They are taking the gold out by the permission of the owner of the land. This nation owns every foot of it, and so far she has allowed anybody to go and use it, but when she comes now to ask what all nations on the face of the earth have asked when they suffered their precious metals to be taken from the bowels of the earth, a seigniorage, why, we see as much spirit and energy and indignation shown here as if you were trying to take back from a man the horse he had stolen from you.

Sir, I do not like to say a word against these Californians. They are good men, but they have been indulged until they are spoiled—absolutely spoiled. I do not like to hear this indignation expressed, as though we were robbing men, when we only ask for what does not belong to them at all.

Mr. SHANNON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment? I know he is very kind and obliging.

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHANNON. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not infer from the earnest style of my senior colleague [Mr. HIGBY] that he is indignant. It is only his peculiar style.

Mr. STEVENS. It is his fervor.

Mr. HIGBY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to say to him in what respect he misunderstands me?

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly.

Mr. HIGBY. As I said when this question was originally before the House, my objection is not to your taking a portion of the gold in California, but the objection is to your taxing the men who take it out of the earth.

Mr. STEVENS. I understand that. We are asking a seigniorage for the metal no matter who takes it out. If a man digs in my iron mine I charge him 25 cents a ton. No matter whether he be poor or rich, he must pay me for my own. We are asking but a little trifle for that which belongs to the nation.

Now, I want to have the amendment non-concurred in, and let the subject go to the committee of conference. If 5 per cent. is too much make it 4 or 3 or 2 or 1. But every nation imposes a tax like this, and I hope we are not to be driven from it because we like California so much.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to close debate on the amendment.

Mr. SHANNON. I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois to allow me two and a half minutes.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Well, I will allow the gentleman that time. I cannot refuse him.

Mr. SHANNON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that the nation owns the mines and the minerals. We have never disputed that fact; but the nation, on the discovery of gold in California and the admission of the State into the Union, positively refused to impose any tax on the people going there to mine; on the other hand, they invited the people of this nation and of the world to go there and dig out the gold; and Mr. Benton well said that the men who dug it out would earn every dollar of it. And that is our experience. The fact is that not half of the men who work in the mines get as much for their daily labor as the people who work in mechanics' shops and upon farms throughout the country; and to tax a man who takes out $50 a month in the mines 5 per cent. is a proposition which I undertake to say the good sense of the House will at once see the injustice of.

I undertake to say further, and I believe it honestly, that the proposition contained in the amendment of the Senate will absolutely yield more revenue to the Government than you can derive from sending your tax-gatherers into the gulches of the mountains to collect a tax of four or five per cent. from the miners. Why, you cannot reach half the miners by sending your tax collectors to hunt them down. A man's mine is worth nothing. You cannot sell it for anything. He has his money in his pocket and he will not pay the tax. But by the Senate proposition we tax it at the mint or assay office where the miner is obliged to go with his bullion and have it assayed, and you get it there; but you will not get it if you send your tax collectors into the gulches of the mountains.

Now let me tell the House that if you undertake to hunt down the miners you will not get your revenue; you will discourage the development of your mineral resources, and you will do an amount of injury that will far outweigh the petty, insignificant sum that you might expect to realize by this tax.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I ask that the gentleman from California shall have a few minutes more time.

Mr. SHANNON. I thank the gentleman, but I think that the House understands the proposition.

The SPEAKER. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. HIGBY withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SHANNON. I hope the House will concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and there were, on a division—ayes 66, noes 39.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The four hundred and fourteenth amendment was read, as follows:

To the paragraph "On oil-dressed leather and deer-skins dressed or smoked, a duty of 5 per cent. ad valorem," add the following proviso:

Provided, That when leather or skins, upon which a duty has been previously assessed and paid, shall be manufactured into gloves, mittens, or moccasins, the duty shall only be assessed upon the increased value thereof when so manufactured.

Mr. MARVIN. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is a question of great importance to my constituents. The mittens and gloves to be affected by this amendment are almost exclusively manufactured in my district. The skins are imported in a raw or untanned state, paying the required import duty. They are then tanned and dressed in a manner adapting them for the manufacture of mittens and gloves. The factories in my district do the whole of this business. They never sell the skins after being dressed, but manufacture them into mittens and gloves; hence it is unjust to impose a double tax, or in fact three taxes on these articles: first, the import duty; second, the tax on the skins when dressed; third, the tax on the mittens and gloves when manufactured.

The Senate has justly and wisely amended the bill, assessing the tax 5 per cent. ad valorem on the increased value when manufactured, and left the principle of taxation the same as in the old law. More than 90 per cent. of the material used in the manufacture of these articles is imported, and pays the Government duties. To levy the tax upon the increased value of the skins, when made up into mittens and gloves, it is plain to see, under the circumstances, is evidently just and proper. We do not ask for any special favor or side legislation, but only that the same principle of taxation may be applied to us that is applied to other similar interests with which we have to compete. We refer to the article of woolen mittens and gloves. The latter pays a tax on the increased value of the yarn used. All we want, as a competing business, is to pay the same tax on the increased value of the goods we manufacture.

This subject was thoroughly discussed in the Senate, and the yeas and nays being ordered on the passage of this amendment there were but five dissenting votes. These manufacturers are perfectly willing to pay any fair tax that Congress chooses to impose upon them, but they think, as the bill originally stood without this amendment, it would be an act of oppression to them and injustice to their interests.

Mr. Speaker, I leave this question with the House, confident that they will not allow the business of these men to be destroyed by exorbitant and onerous taxation. I trust the House will concur in the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I should be very glad indeed to have the House oblige the gentleman from New York, who so seldom troubles us with any impertinent addresses, but I desire to state the facts in this case. The amount of revenue involved in the amendment is very small, but the principle is very important. As I understand there are in a single town in New York parties who tan sheep-skins and deer-skins for gloves, mittens, and moccasins, and they ask to have these fine skins exempted from taxation. There is no more propriety in exempting them than there would be in exempting leather made into shoes or harness. If we are to adopt the principle in this case we furnish a precedent for shoemakers and harness-makers to come here and claim that there shall be no tax on leather that is put into boots and shoes and harness and trunks. I hope the House will keep the bill clear of any such principle as that.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to close debate on the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in, amid much laughter.

The four hundred and seventieth and four hundred and seventy-first amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out "one eighth" and insert "one twenty-fourth." Strike out "half year" and insert "month;" so that the section will read:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of one twenty-fourth of one per cent. each month upon the average amount of the deposits of money, subject to payment by check or draft, with any person, bank, association, or corporation engaged in the business of banking.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the Committee of Ways and Means recommends non-concurrence in all of these amendments.

The SPEAKER. In all of them.

Mr. PRUYN. I would like to inquire whether there is any difference made between the State banks and the national banks.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House section, as it originally stood, placed the national banks and the State banks on the same footing, but there is a discrimination made between them in the Senate amendments. As the Committee of Ways and Means recommends non-concurrence, there can be no objection to that course.

Mr. GANSON. I call for a separate vote on these amendments. I do so for the purpose of asking the Committee of Ways and Means why it recommends non-concurrence in them.

Mr. MORRILL. For the purpose of offering a substitute for the whole section; with the various amendments it makes a long and rather confused section, which could be drawn better in half the space. The Committee of Ways and Means has also another purpose in recommending non-concurrence. We propose to fix about the same rate of taxation on the State banks and on the national banks, with this difference: banks having a large capital, instead of being restricted in the issue of notes to 90 per cent. of their capital, are to be further restricted by a proportionally large tax on the issue. These banks do not object to this.

Mr. GANSON. Do I understand from the gentleman from Vermont that if these amendments be concurred in the State banks will stand so far as the tax is concerned precisely as the national banks?

Mr. MORRILL. Not precisely.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

Five hundred and twelfth amendment:

Insert:

And upon the annual gains, profits, or income, rents, and dividends accruing upon any property, securities, and stocks owned in the United States by any citizens of the United States residing abroad, not in the employment of the Government of the United States, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 2 per cent. more than on resident citizens.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I hope that that amendment will be non-concurred in. The whole section, as amended by the Senate, is crude, and I hope that it will be referred to a committee of conference.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a separate vote, that it may go to the committee of conference as an instruction.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Five hundred and thirty-sixth amendment:

Add:

Not shall the portion of premiums returned by mutual life insurance companies to their policy holders be considered as dividends or profits under this act.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I hope that that amendment will be concurred in. I think that these mutual life insurance companies should be encouraged. They are already becoming savings institutions in which the poor provide for their families. In England the Government itself has authorized the Chancellor of the Exchequer to issue the highest possible rate of premiums.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to close debate on the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The House divided; and there were—ayes eighty-two, noes not counted.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Five hundred and twenty-sixth amendment:

In the section reciting the various tax laws, strike out the words "and upon the execution of new bonds, or taking anew the oath of office," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And provided further, That no direct tax whatever shall be assessed or collected under this or any other act of Congress heretofore passed, until Congress shall enact another law requiring such assessment and collection to be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. The one hundred and seventy-fifth section of this act substantially accomplishes the same purpose, and I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

That the one hundred and nineteenth section of an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government and to pay interest on the public debt," approved July 1, 1862, shall remain in full force.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be observed that the Senate have unintentionally omitted to strike out that section. There is no necessity for retaining that, because it only suspends the collection of the direct taxes for 1865. The amendment before us is an entire repeal of the act of 1862.

I trust that this amendment of the Senate will be concurred in. There is no better way to collect these taxes than by indirection. It approaches nearest to the old mode of securing revenue by duties upon imports. It is not felt to the same extent as a direct tax.

I will say that if anything could give confidence in the financial policy of the Government on the part of the agricultural portions of the Union it would be the fact that we have abandoned the law for the collection of direct taxes, and provided for the imposition of duties in such manner as to be less burdensome to the people. It is like the old policy of raising forty or fifty millions by indirection which the people did not feel at all. We levy the duties on the manufacturers themselves. We have made that the policy as approaching more nearly the old policy.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved that debate be closed on the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment was concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The House has disposed of all the amendments of the Senate except those in which the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence with amendments.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments.

Third amendment:

On page 2, line thirty, strike out "and."

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended concurrence in the same, with an amendment inserting in lieu of the word to be stricken out the following:

But the printing of said forms, decisions, and regulations shall be done at the public printing office, unless the Public Printer shall be unable to perform the work.

So that the clause will read:

He [Commissioner of Internal Revenue] may also contract for or procure the printing of requisite forms, decisions, regulations, and advertisements, but the printing of said forms, decisions, and regulations shall be done at the public printing office, unless the Public Printer shall be unable to perform the work.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Eighth amendment:

On page 6, strike out the sixth section, as follows:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a competent person, who shall be called the cashier of internal duties, with a salary of $2,500, who shall have charge of the moneys received in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and shall perform such duties as may be assigned to his office by said Commissioner, under the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury, and before entering upon his duties as cashier he shall give a bond with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Solicitor, that he will faithfully account for all the moneys or other articles of value belonging to the United States which may come into his hands, and perform all the duties enjoined upon his office according to law and regulations, as aforesaid; which bond shall be deposited with the First Comptroller of the Treasury.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended concurrence in the same, with an amendment inserting in lieu of the section to be stricken out the following:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a competent person, who shall be called the cashier of internal duties, with a salary of $2,500, who shall have charge of the moneys received in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and shall pay over the same daily to the Treasurer of the United States, and shall perform such duties as may be assigned to his office by said Commissioner, under the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury, and before entering upon his duties as cashier he shall give a bond with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Solicitor, that he will faithfully account for all the moneys or other articles of value belonging to the United States which may come into his hands, and perform all the duties enjoined upon his office according to law and regulations, as aforesaid; which bond shall be deposited with the First Comptroller of the Treasury.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Thirty-eighth amendment:

On page 15, line sixty-four, insert the words "or neglect, except in cases of sickness or absence from the State;" so that the clause will read:

And in case of the return of a false or fraudulent list or valuation, he shall add 100 per cent. to such duty; and in case of a refusal or neglect, except in cases of sickness or absence from the State, to make a list or return, or to verify the same as aforesaid, he shall add 50 per cent. to such duty.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended concurrence in the same, with an amendment striking out from the words proposed to be inserted, the words "from the State."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Fifty-eighth amendment:

On page 24, at the end of section twenty-one, strike out the following:

And the said court shall also render judgment against the said assessor or assistant assessor for double the amount of damages sustained in favor of the party injured, to be collected by execution.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended concurrence in the same, with an amendment inserting the matter proposed to be stricken out, and striking out the word "double" in the second line of said amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Sixty-eighth amendment:

Insert after section twenty-two the following as a new section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That if any assessor shall demand of, or receive directly or indirectly from, any assistant assessor, as a condition of his appointment to or continuance in his said office of assistant assessor, any portion of the compensation herein allowed such assistant assessor, or any other consideration, such assessor so offending shall be summarily dismissed from office, and shall be liable to a fine of not less than $50 upon conviction of said offense in any district or circuit court of the United States of the district in which such offense may be committed.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended concurrence in the same, with an amendment striking out "$50" and inserting "$500."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

One hundred and fifth amendment:

On page 45, line fifteen, strike out "for" and insert "with."

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended concurrence in the same with an amendment, adding after the word "with" the words "the amount of."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

One hundred and seventeenth amendment:

At the end of section thirty-five strike out the following: And the said court shall also render judgment against said collector or deputy collector for double the amount of damages accruing to the party injured, to be collected by execution.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended a concurrence in the same with an amendment, inserting the matter proposed to be stricken out and striking out the word "double" in the same.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

One hundred and twenty-second amendment:

At the end of section thirty-seven insert the following: Provided, That if any assessor or assistant assessor shall divulge to any party, or make known in any manner other than as provided in this act, the operations, style of work or apparatus of such visited manufacture, said assessor or assistant assessor shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in section thirty-five of this act.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended a concurrence in the same with an amendment, striking out after the word "any" the words "assessor or assistant assessor," and inserting the words "such officers;" and also striking out the words "such visited manufacture, said assessor or assistant assessor," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "any manufacturer or producer visited by him in the discharge of official duties, he."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

One hundred and sixty-third amendment:

In section fifty-four, in reference to the time when duties shall commence on spirits, strike out "May" and insert "June."

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended concurrence in the same with an amendment, striking out "June" and inserting "July."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

One hundred and sixty-eighth amendment:

Page 64, line thirteen, after the word "gallon," insert the following:

On and after the 1st day of January, 1865, a duty of $1 50 on each and every gallon. And all spirits which may be in the possession of the distiller on either the 1st day of June, October, or January aforesaid, no duty having been paid thereon, shall be held and treated as if distilled on each of those days respectively.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended concurrence in this amendment with an amendment, to strike out "June" and insert "July."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

One hundred and ninety-second amendment:

Page 63, section fifty-nine, in line three, strike out the words "of iron, stone, or brick, with metal or other fire-proof roof, and such warehouse," and insert in lieu thereof, "established in conformity with such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and such warehouse;" so that the section will read:

That the owner or owners of any distillery or oil refinery may provide at his or their own expense a warehouse established in conformity with such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and such warehouse when approved by the collector, is hereby declared a bonded warehouse of the United States, and shall be used only for storing distilled spirits or refined coal oil, or naphtha, and to be under the custody of the collector or his deputy. And the duty on the spirits, coal oil, or naphtha stored in such warehouse shall be paid before it is removed from such warehouse, unless removed in pursuance of law.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended concurrence in this amendment with an amendment, to strike out the word "established" in the matter proposed to be inserted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

All the amendments of the Senate having now been disposed of,

Mr. MORRILL moved that a committee of conference be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. FARNSWORTH, (at a quarter to eleven o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 17, 1864.

Prayer by Rev. M. C. BRIGGS, of California. On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FOOT presented five petitions of citizens of Vermont, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of Grinnell, Minturn & Co., Howland & Aspinwall, and other merchants of New York, praying that the duty on tea may be made specific, and no part thereof ad valorem; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN also presented the memorial of John Graham, praying compensation for services rendered in the transportation of mail between New Orleans and Key West during the quarter ending July 1, 1855; which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Philadelphia and New York, remonstrating against the proposed increase of the duty on marble; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented two petitions of citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHANDLER presented five petitions of men and women of Michigan, praying for the abolition of slavery, and such an amendment of the Constitution as will forever prohibit its existence in any portion of the Union; which were referred to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

Mr. DIXON presented a memorial of men and women of Connecticut, praying for the abolition of slavery, and such an amendment of the Constitution as will forever prohibit its existence in any portion of the Union; which was referred to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of James R. Quinter, praying for compensation for services rendered in recruiting volunteers for the first District of Columbia regiment, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 461) for the relief of John C. McConnell, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 393) for the relief of Peter Navarre, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 60) to refer the case of James H. McCulloh to the Court of Claims, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 61) referring the case of Charles Wilkes to the Court of Claims, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. COLLAMER. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 93) to authorize the Postmaster General to extend the contract with the Overland Mail Company, have directed me to report it back with an amendment. If this resolution is to be passed at all it should be done at once; efficiency depends on its present passage. I am therefore directed to ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. HALE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution cannot be considered at the present time.

W. B. MATCHETT.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution

(H. R. No. 47) for the relief of Rev. W. B. Matchett, have instructed me to report favorably; and as it is a trifling matter, I ask of the Senate the favor to consider it at the present time.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Paymaster General to adjust and pay to W. B. Matchett the amount due him as chaplain of the tenth regiment of New York volunteers from the time up to which he was last paid to the time the regiment was mustered out of service.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT JUDICIAL FEES.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 296) in relation to the fees and emoluments of the marshal, attorney, and clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia was passed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think that motion is too late.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The record shows that the time allowed by the rules for a reconsideration has elapsed, and the bill has gone to the House of Representatives.

LAND ENTRIES IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BROWN. I move to take up House bill No. 217, which has been pending for a long while. I have not troubled the Senate much, and I should be glad to have this bill passed.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 217) to confirm certain entries of land in the State of Missouri was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to confirm all entries heretofore made under the graduation act of August 4, 1854, in township forty-five north, of range nine west, south of Missouri river, in the district of land subject to sale at St. Louis. This confirmation is not to extend to any entry of land upon which there was an actual settler other than the purchaser at the date of such entry; and it is first to be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the entry was made in good faith, and is founded upon actual settlement and cultivation, or is for the use of an adjoining farm.

The Committee on Public Lands had reported the bill with an amendment, which was to insert the following proviso at the end of the bill:

Provided further, That the lands shall be paid for in money or in land warrants to the amount of $1 25 per acre.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the amendment reported by the committee will not be agreed to, and I will state to the Senate the condition of the bill and of the lands mentioned in it. They were entries that were made under the graduation act, some half a dozen in a county in my State, but it was found afterwards that there had been some defect in bringing the lands into market; that is, they had not been enumerated, perhaps through some clerical error, and the parties who made those entries could not get a title in consequence. It is now proposed to confirm those entries. But the committee have reported that they shall pay the price of $1 25 an acre as though the land had never been subject to the graduation law. While that might possibly be right technically, I think it would work an injustice to the parties and would not come within the meaning and the intent of the graduation act, for those lands had been there in that condition for a long time; they are just like all the other surrounding lands that have been taken up in this manner. It was simply a clerical error that was not discovered until after they had been occupied, and I do not think there is any need of insisting upon the amendment of the committee. The greatest objection, however, is that if the amendment of the committee obtains it will take the bill back to the House of Representatives and it will be lost for this session. It is one of those things where I think the merit is altogether on the side of the settlers who entered the lands in good faith, and it would be proper for the Senate to pass the bill as it stands. The Senator who reported this bill can state what the ground was upon which the committee acted. The Senator from Indiana I believe reported it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Perhaps in reference to the amendment which the committee thought it proper to make to this bill it is right that I should say a word. It was supposed that these lands had been offered at public sale in 1819, but upon an examination of the books of the General Land Office they did not agree with the books in the register's office in Missouri, and it was ascertained that they had not, in fact, been offered at public sale, and therefore were not subject to private entry, and not subject to the graduation law, and no steps have ever been taken by the General Land Office to bring them into market; therefore they were not in fact subject to the graduation entry, and the General Land Office would not confirm these entries. Under the circumstances the committee were of opinion that it would be favorable legislation to these parties to allow them to enter the lands at $1 25 an acre and not subject them to competition at public sale, in view of the fact that they are actual settlers. It is not an amendment of much consequence, but any amendment at this stage of the session will endanger its passage in the other House. If the Senate think proper to allow the bill to pass without the amendment, I have very little concern about it. I thought the amendment was a proper one.

Mr. HARLAN. In order that this matter may be fully understood by Senators who have not examined the case, I think it ought to be stated that these lands were never in market; they were never subject to sale at public outcry to the highest bidder, nor were they subject to entry at $1 25 an acre. They have not been offered at any time. They have been lying there until they were surrounded by settlements; but have been surveyed, and in other respects would be subject to the graduation law if they had once been offered. These parties now seek to enter them at twelve and a half cents an acre. It did not appear to the committee that those lands were embraced properly within the purview of the graduation law.

Mr. BROWN. I will state to the Senator that the lands were settled upon and occupied for some time under the impression that they came under the graduation law. It was only upon the discovery of this defect that application was made to Congress to correct the title.

Mr. HARLAN. But the graduation law was enacted originally on the ground that lands which had been in market and subject to sale at private entry for a series of years and had not been entered were probably lands of an inferior quality and would not sell at $1 25 an acre. Hence they were graduated at $1 75, fifty cents, twenty-five cents, and twelve and a half cents, depending on the number of years they had been exposed to sale at $1 25 an acre and had remained unsold. These lands never were subjected to that test. If the amendment proposed by the committee should prevail, it would confer on these parties the right of preëmptors, the right to take them at $1 25 an acre without involving the necessity of competing in the market with other parties who might be willing to give more than $1 25 an acre. No facts came to the knowledge of the committee to justify them in the conclusion that these lands were not worth $1 25 an acre. The lands have been kept in the nature of a reservation; have been excluded from sale, and hence I am very clear in my own mind that they ought not to be sold at twelve and a half cents an acre, and that it is a favor to the parties to permit them to enter them as preëmptors at $1 25 an acre.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator from Iowa is mistaken as to the value of the lands and as to the fact of their being held as a reservation. It was simply a defect that amounts to a reservation; it was not the idea in which they were held, because they are just like all the surrounding lands which were occupied, and it was simply a clerical error by which they were not. They have been occupied now under the graduation bill; and under the idea that this was the case the parties ask simply to have this error corrected and their entries confirmed. I am more desirous that the amendment shall not be put upon the bill because it amounts to a very trifling sum, and it may defeat the bill if it goes back to the House of Representatives. It is a long-delayed act of justice to these parties in which their titles are involved. They are poor persons, and I am anxious to get the matter settled for them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Perhaps it is right that I should say, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, that the settlers acted upon the information that they derived from the books of the local land office. The books of the local land office showed a public sale, but the books in the General Land Office showed the fact that they had not been offered at public sale, and the settlers acted on the information they derived from the local office.

Mr. HARLAN. It will be observed that this is a general bill and it may embrace any quantity of land. It is not confined to the few cases the Senator from Missouri has in his mind, but is a general law and may sweep thousands and tens of thousands of tracts of land in its purview.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HARLAN. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Davis, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, Morgan, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Van Winkle—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Conness, Dixon, Grimes, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Cowan, Fessenden, Harding, Henderson, Howard, McDougall, Morrill, Pomerooy, Sherman, Sumner, Wilkinson, and Wright—13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That twenty thousand copies of the report on agriculture be printed for the use of the Senate.

C. W. SCOFIELD'S COURT-MARTIAL.

Mr. GRIMES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to the Senate copies of the proceedings and findings in the case of C. W. Scofield, a naval contractor, before a naval court-martial now or lately in session in the city of New York.

ARMY NEWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the War Department:

WAR DEPARTMENT,

June 17, 1864, 9½ o'clock a. m.

SIR: The following dispatches have been received by this Department:

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA, June 15,

via JAMESTOWN ISLAND, 5.30 a. m. June 16, 1864.

Smith with fifteen thousand men attacked Petersburg this morning. General Butler reports from his observatory near Bermuda Hundred that there has been sharp fighting, and that the troops and trains of the enemy were, as he writes, moving across the Appomattox as if retreating. Hancock is not near enough to render General Smith any aid. The Richmond papers have nothing to indicate a suspicion of our crossing the James river. They expect to be attacked from the direction of Malvern Hill.

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA,

June 15, 1864, 7.30 p. m.

Our latest report from Smith was at 4.04 p. m. He had carried a line of intrenchments at Beatty's House, the colored troops assaulting and carrying the rifle-pits with great gallantry, but he had not yet carried the main line. He describes the rebel artillery fire as very heavy. He expected to assault this line just before dark. Hancock is within three miles of Smith.

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA, 7 a. m., June 16, 1864,
via JAMESTOWN ISLAND, 11.45 a. m.

At 7.20 p. m. yesterday, Smith assaulted and carried the principal line of the enemy before Petersburg, taking thirteen cannon, several stands of colors, and between three and four hundred prisoners. This line is two miles from Petersburg. Hancock got up and took position on Smith's left at 3 a. m. to-day. There was heavy firing in that direction from 5 to 6. No report yet.

DONTHARD LANDING, VIRGINIA,
1 p. m., June 16, 1864.

After sending my dispatch of this morning from the heights southeast of Petersburg, I went over the conquered lines with General Grant and the engineer officers. The works are of the very strongest kind, more difficult even to take than was Missionary Ridge, at Chattanooga. The hardest fighting was done by the black troops. The forts they stormed were, I think, the worst of all. After the affair was over, General Smith went to thank them and tell them he was proud of their courage and dash. He says they cannot be exceeded as soldiers, and that hereafter he will send them in a difficult place as readily as the best white troops. They captured six out of the sixteen cannon which he took. The prisoners he took were from Beauregard's command. Some of them said they had just crossed the James above Drury's Bluff. I do not think any of Lee's army had reached Petersburg when Smith stormed it. They seem to be there this morning, however, and to be making arrangements to hold the west side of the Appomattox. The town they cannot think of holding, for it lies directly under our guns. The weather continues splendid.

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA, June 16, 4.15 p. m.,
via JAMESTOWN, 11.45 p. m.

General Butler reports from Bermuda Hundred that the enemy have abandoned the works in front of that place. His troops are now engaged in tearing up the railroad between Petersburg and Richmond.

The following dispatch does not designate the hour, but it is supposed to be later than the preceding ones:

JAMESTOWN, VIRGINIA, June 16, 1864.

I came down from the pontoon above Fort Powhatan with dispatches for Secretary Stanton. Just as I left Captain Pilkin reported to me that Petersburg was in our possession.

Nothing of a recent date has been heard from General Sheridan, but the Richmond Whig of the 15th contains a dispatch from General Lee stating that Sheridan had been routed in an engagement with Fitz Lee and Hampton, losing five hundred prisoners, and leaving his dead and wounded on the field.

From General Sherman, a dispatch dated last night at 9 p. m. has been received. It only states the relative position of the forces. No serious engagement had yet occurred.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

HON. DANIEL CLARK,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

PUNISHMENT OF GUERRILLAS.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the House bill (No. 511) to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes.

Mr. POWELL. I hope the Senate will not take up that bill this morning.

Mr. WILSON. We had it up yesterday morning.

Mr. POWELL. I desire to take up Senate bill No. 37, to prevent military interference with State elections. I have been trying now for two months to get it up. Sometimes I can be recognized by the Chair; at other times I cannot. I hope the Senate will not take up the bill proposed by the Senator, but will take up that bill. I will say to the Senate that I am willing to take a vote on it without one word of debate. It was up and discussed some four days two months ago. I have moved half a dozen times since to get it up, always without success. It is one of the most important bills on the Calendar.

Mr. WILSON. I will say we had this bill up yesterday morning, and it is an important bill. I am very anxious to have it settled one way or the other. It is a question of humanity.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 511) to provide for the more speedy punishment of guerrillas, and for other purposes, was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS. When this bill went over yesterday morning I was endeavoring to arrest the attention of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] who had made some remarks upon it, with a view to get his particular attention to the character of the bill and to some objections which it was my purpose to make to it. It will be seen from the provisions of this bill that it is intended to punish guerrillas for "robbery, arson, burglary, rape, assault with intent to commit rape, and for violation of the laws and customs of war." These are heinous offenses that strike at the safety of society, and that ought to be certainly and severely punished. But, sir, they are not offenses "arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger." It is only offenses that are characterized by the words which I have just read that are amenable, or that can be made amenable, to courts-martial by martial law. The fifth amendment to the Constitution provides:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger."

All the offenses which this bill proposes to declare and punish are either capital or they are otherwise infamous crimes. The question then occurs, do these offenses, as the bill under consideration proposes to define and punish them, arise in the military or naval service of the United States, or in the militia when in actual service? They do not. They cannot. I suppose it is not our own guerrillas that are proposed to be punished. If it was, and those guerrillas were in the military service of the United States, or in the militia of any State in actual service, the power to try and punish them might be given to courts-martial; but I presume that this bill is intended to punish the guerrillas of the rebels; at any rate its terms will embrace guerrillas, if we can ascertain what a guerrilla is, in the service of the rebels.

Mr. President, the bill under consideration is subject to two insuperable objections in my opinion. The one was assumed by the Senator from Maryland yesterday morning in his objection to the bill, and it is the vague and indefinite import of the term "guerrilla." What is a guerrilla? I am not a Spanish scholar, but the term guerrero means warrior, according to my understanding. I suppose that "guerrilla" means a partisan warrior. That is about the best meaning of it I presume. Here is a bill before the Senate of the United States that proposes to punish guerrillas of the enemy—for I assume that to be the meaning—for the commission of robbery, arson, burglary, rape, assault with intent to commit rape, &c. These offenses when perpetrated by the guerrillas of the enemy, however wicked and deserving of punishment they may be, are not cases arising in the military or naval service of the United States Government, nor in the militia of any of the States in that service. Is it competent, then, for a military court to punish such offenses committed by that class of persons by martial law? Is it competent for Congress to confer upon a court-martial such a power? It seems to me that it is only necessary to state the proposition that it may be answered in the negative. Congress cannot confer any power upon a military court; Congress cannot add to the powers of a military court; Congress cannot extend the jurisdiction of a military court. The existence of military courts and all their jurisdiction result from the Constitution and from national law.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understand the Senator from Kentucky to be arguing as to the jurisdiction of these courts. Now, his argument may or may not be a very good one; but I am quite sure that the bill under consideration confers no jurisdiction whatever to try any case. It does not propose to do it. It is not a bill for that purpose. The object of the bill is merely to allow the sentence pronounced by a court-martial to be carried into execution without its being approved by the President, but it does not confer on a court-martial any jurisdiction, nor purport to do it.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, what is a more important constituent in the jurisdiction of a court than the execution of its judgments and sentences? My position is, that if this bill is intended to confer upon the courts the power to execute their sentences without the intervention or approval of the President, it is a subject over which Congress has no cognizance. What power has the President over the subject of courts-martial, and whence does he derive that power? Not from the legislation of Congress. All the power that he possesses in relation to courts-martial and their jurisdiction and their judgments and sentences, he derives from national law, to the extent and only to the extent that that power of national law is vested in him by the Constitution; and Congress has no authority whatever to enlarge or to modify either the jurisdiction and power of the courts, or to modify or restrict the power of the President over courts-martial.

Now, let me accept the interpretation of the honorable Senator, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, in relation to what is the intention and what is to be the operation of this bill. It then resolves itself into this simple question: has Congress the power by its act or its law to authorize a court-martial to execute a sentence upon an individual over whom it has or has not jurisdiction without the intervention of the President?

Mr. TRUMBULL. That has been done from the foundation of the Government in a certain class of offenses. The law has designated what cases should be reported to the Commander-in-Chief, as I understand, and what might be carried into execution without reporting to him. It has always been so, I think.

Mr. DAVIS. Whether it has been always so or not, it is improper. It is not within the competency of Congress to interfere with that matter. Show me the evidence. I do not care if there were a hundred laws, to that effect, I maintain that it is an interference with a matter over which Congress has no authority whatever.

Sir, whence does the President derive his power in relation to courts-martial? Does he derive it from the law of Congress? Not at all. Congress has no jurisdiction over such subjects. It has no power to enlarge the authority of the President; it has no power to restrict the authority of the President. But here is an objection which I take to this bill that is practical, and that is of essential interest in connection with it, and it is that a court-martial cannot have properly any jurisdiction to try a guerrilla for robbery, or arson, or burglary, or any other offense, unless that offense arises in the military or naval service of the United States. Will the honorable Senator from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, will that honorable Senator, who is one of the ablest lawyers in this body, assume the position that a court-martial have a right to try any man for any offense that does not arise in the military or naval service?

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Kentucky will allow me, I will state that in 1806 the Congress of the United States revised the rules and articles of war. It was a reenactment pretty much of the rules as they before existed, and in this respect I think it will be found entirely so. Article sixty-five provides who may carry into effect the decisions of courts-martial; it provides:

"Any general officer commanding an army, or colonel commanding a separate department, may appoint general courts-martial whenever necessary. But no sentence of a court-martial shall be carried into execution until after the whole proceedings shall have been laid before the officer ordering the same, or the officer commanding the troops for the time being; neither shall any sentence of a general court-martial in time of peace, extending to the loss of life, or the dismissal of a commissioned officer, or which shall, either in time of peace or war, respect a general officer, be carried into execution until after the whole proceedings shall have been transmitted to the Secretary of War, to be laid before the President of the United States, for his confirmation or disapproval and orders in the case. All other sentences may be confirmed and executed by the officer ordering the court to assemble, or the commanding officer for the time being, as the case may be."

The Senator wanted the evidence that the decision of courts-martial were carried into effect without the approbation of the President. It has been the rule of law and the practice of the Government from the day of its organization.

Mr. DAVIS. Now, sir, concede that I am right and the Senator is wrong on that point—

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not concede that. I concede you are wrong and I am right.

Mr. DAVIS. I put the cart before the horse. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUMBULL. You have done that all the way through your argument. You have been arguing something that is not in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Now I will endeavor to put the horse before the cart, and I ask the honorable Senator's attention. The Constitution invests Congress with power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." Now admit that there is authority for the passage of such a law as the Senator has just read, I ask him if it authorizes the passage of this bill? What is this bill? I ask the Senator to answer me this question: has a military court the power under any law, whether it be national law or the articles of war passed by Congress, to punish a man for any offense that does not arise in the military or naval service of the Government of the United States?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will reply very cheerfully to the question of the Senator from Kentucky when we propose to pass any such law. I have already stated to him that there is not in this bill one single line or word authorizing the trial of anybody. It merely provides for the execution of the judgment of a court-martial or a military commission in cases where they heretofore have had authority to try. It confers no jurisdiction. The military commission or the court-martial under this bill can try no case whatever, either in the military service or out of the military service, that it could not try before the passage of this bill. There is the answer to the question. The Senator from Kentucky is talking about what is not before the Senate. He had better introduce a bill to repeal some other law, and then his argument would be applicable, but it has nothing to do with this case.

Mr. DAVIS. The honorable Senator evades my question, he does not answer it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not propose to answer a question that is not under consideration.

Mr. DAVIS. I will show that it is under consideration, and it is necessarily involved in the consideration of this bill. I understand the Senator, then, as conceding, though I may be mistaken in assuming that position, that no court-martial in the United States has any power to try a man for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless it arises in the land or naval forces, or in the militia in the actual service of the United States in time of war or public danger.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The Senator will excuse the Chair; it becomes his duty at this hour to call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senator will be allowed to go on for a few minutes. I desire to dispose of this bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I prefer to go on, if the Senate will permit me. I shall not occupy a great deal of time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot tell how long my honorable friend from Kentucky intends to continue his remarks, and I do not want the regular order delayed for any considerable time.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not propose to consume many minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is something else to be said.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand there is to be further debate on the subject. I think we had better go on with the regular order. I am very anxious to finish the tariff bill to-day, and it is quite important that it should be done if possible.

Mr. DAVIS. I submit myself to the pleasure of the Senate.

THE TARIFF BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 494) to increase the duties on imports, and for other purposes.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was after "Cologne water" in line forty-two of section eleven to insert the words "and other perfumery of which alcohol forms the principal ingredient;" so as to make the clause read:

On Cologne water and other perfumery of which alcohol forms the principal ingredient, $2 50 per gallon, and 50 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out line forty-five of section eleven: "On cloves, 40 cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend the bill by inserting at that point: "On clove stems, 15 cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out line fifty-six of that section. Provision has been made for it elsewhere.

The words proposed to be stricken out are: "On lead, sugar of, 10 cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was after the word "juice," in line fifty-eight of section eleven to insert "and fruit juice;" so as to make the clause read:

On lemons, oranges, pine-apples, plantains, cocoanuts, and fruits preserved in their own juice, and fruit juice, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In the next two lines, the committee propose an alteration. After the word "or" in line sixty-one, I move to strike out the words "juice, 10 cents per pound; on licorice in rolls, 12," and insert "rolls, 10;" so as to make the item read: "On licorice root, 2 cents per pound; on licorice paste or rolls, 10 cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in lines sixty-three and sixty-four of section eleven, to strike out "On nutmegs, 75 cents per pound; on mace, 50 cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eleven, line sixty-five, to change the word "oil" to "oils;" after "castor," in line sixty-six, strike out "oil," and in line sixty-eight to strike out "pound" and insert "ounce;" so as to make the clause read:

On oils, croton, $1 per pound; olives, in flasks or bottles, and salad, $1 per gallon; cloves, $6 per pound; cognac or anesthetic ether, $4 per ounce.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The largely increased duty on cloves having been struck out it will be necessary to change the duty on the oil of cloves as fixed in the item just acted on. I move, therefore, in line sixty-seven, to strike out "6" and insert "3;" so as to make the duty on the oil of cloves $3 per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in line sixty-nine of section eleven to strike out "4" and insert "2;" and in line seventy to strike out "6" and insert "3;" so as to make the clause read: "On pea-nuts, or ground beans, 2 cents per pound; shelled, 3 cents per pound."

Mr. SUMNER. I certainly do not wish to enter into this pea-nut war that has been raging for several days about the Capitol, but I long since learned that we here do not choose our duties. A large number of my constituents are interested in this trade, some of whom have called on me and others have written. I have here half a dozen communications on the subject. After gathering all the information that I have been able to gather, I am entirely satisfied that the duty proposed by the House of Representatives was a killing duty, and I incline to the opinion that though the case is improved by the amendment of the Committee on Finance, still their proposition is almost a killing duty.

This is a small article, however, and the time that is taken up by the Senate to discuss it will cost the country almost as much as we shall gain by the proposed duty; but still to these people it is important. There are one or two houses in Boston at this moment who will suffer very seriously if the duty proposed by the committee is adopted. They have cargoes afloat which have been ordered under the old duty, and in their opinion the article cannot pay the new duty and be reasonably productive.

I said that it was a small article. We all know that it is an article that is chiefly for the poor and the humbler classes. It is rarely met with on the tables of hotels and in society, but it is met with at the corners of streets. It is very generally used in that way, and it is also used to make an oil. I have been led to believe that a duty of 1 cent a pound on the pea-nut itself and of $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents on the shelled would be on the whole best for the Government and for the importers: best for the Government, because in that way we should upon the whole get the most money; and best for the importers, because in that way the trade would not be broken up or discouraged. I fear that if even the tax proposed by the committee should be adopted the trade itself would be broken up. One consequence would ensue at once, that we should no longer be able to send our goods to Africa in exchange. We do not pay for these articles in gold, but we send to Africa productions of our country, and all that is so much clear gain to our commerce. By having the high duty you do interfere with our commerce, and I fear, also, you will interfere with the revenue itself. I therefore propose to make a modification of the amendment by reducing 2 to 1 and 3 to $1\frac{1}{2}$.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All I have to say about it is that we heard these people by their delegates on the subject of pea-nuts at length, both in writing and verbally, and we came to the conclusion to reduce the duty to one half that fixed by the House of Representatives, and we thought that would be about right.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. This is an article which is produced very largely in this country. A great proportion of the supply was drawn from the State of North Carolina before the rebellion. It can be produced there and in other southern States.

In fact, I have grown these nuts in my own garden at Parkersburg. It is a considerable interest here and should be protected, I think, against the imported article, which is of inferior quality.

In fact, in former years quantities of these nuts were exported from this country. They were sent to France, as I understand, for the purpose of extracting the oil from them. These imported nuts also enter into competition with various other kinds of nuts that are produced here, and there is no reason that I can perceive why a discrimination should be made, why this article of home production should not be protected as well as many others, and also why a revenue should not, under present circumstances, be derived from it. I understand that the African trade generally is now in the hands of Englishmen; they do the carrying trade in English bottoms; and if articles are sent there in exchange they are probably sent on foreign account. They send to Africa, for the palm oils, pea-nuts, and other articles that they bring from there, English cotton manufactures and not our own. The proposed duty, I think, is not excessive, nor do I think it is out of range with many other duties imposed by the bill. The raising of nuts is a considerable interest here. As I have already stated, the article is largely, and can be still more extensively, produced in this country. It therefore seems to me that it falls under the category of goods which ought to be protected to a sufficient extent.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts tell me what pea-nuts and ground-beans sell for now? The importation I am told is a large business in Massachusetts. Are they sold by the pound?

Mr. SUMNER. They are sold generally by the bushel, I understand, except at the street corners, where the Senator knows they are sold in small quantities.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are there any grown in Massachusetts?

Mr. SUMNER. None that I am aware of.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am satisfied.

Mr. SUMNER. I will observe in reply to the Senator from West Virginia who alludes to the fact that pea-nuts are the growth of North Carolina, that we are not now, in the present condition of the country, able to receive any from North Carolina. We are now dependent upon the African trade for them. He then reminds us that the African trade is in the hands of the English. Let me tell him that there is a very considerable African trade now conducted from Salem, Boston, and New York. Interrupted it has been by pirates, but it still goes on. I do not wish to take up time on this matter, for, as I have already said, the discussion costs more than the tax will bring; but I am satisfied from the papers I have examined that the tax proposed by the committee is too much and cannot be advantageous to the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out lines seventy-six, seventy-seven, and seventy-eight of section eleven, "On pimento, and black, white, and red or cayenne pepper, 20 cents per pound; on ground pimento and pepper of all kinds, 25 cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. After "acid," in line eighty-two, I move to insert "and gallic acid;" so as to make the clause read, "On tannin and tannic acid, and gallic acid, $1 50 per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert after line eighty-seven of section eleven, "On crude saltpeter, $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line eighty-eight of section eleven to insert, "On strychnine and its salts, $1 50 per ounce."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line ninety of section eleven to strike out "25" and insert "30;" so as to make the item read, "On tagger's iron, 30 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following item in lines ninety-three and ninety-four of section eleven: "On zinc, oxyd of, dry or ground in oil, 2 cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line ninety-eight of section eleven, to strike out "25" and insert "35;" so as to make the clause read:

On wood pencils, filled with lead or other materials, 50 cents per gross, and in addition thereto 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section five:

On playing cards, costing not over 25 cents per pack, 25 cents per pack; costing over 25 cents per pack, 35 cents per pack.

Mr. DIXON. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "25" in the first item and inserting "20," and by striking out "35" in the second item and inserting "25."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have the Senator give some reason for that proposition.

Mr. DIXON. I think the duty as fixed by the committee is prohibitory. I think more money will be obtained by the Government by fixing it at 20 cents for the cheaper kind and 25 cents for that costing over 25 cents per pack. That is the reason of my motion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The internal revenue duties fixed on playing cards at first were 2, 4, 10, and 15 cents, according to their price, and 5 cents on fractional differences. We have raised the 2 to 5, the 4 to 10, the 10 to 15, and the 15 to 30. That is a very large increase. The duties on the imported article before were 15 cents for those costing under 25 cents a pack. We have raised that to 25 cents, and where the existing duty is 25 cents we have raised it to 35. The increase of duty in the tariff does not bear the same proportion as the increased duty which we have laid on the domestic article. I see no reason, therefore, for interfering with the proposition of the committee.

Mr. DIXON. I do not believe that the kind of cards costing not over 25 cents a pack will be imported at all if the duty be put at 25 cents. If the object is to get revenue, the duty had better be lowered. If the object is prohibition and to encourage the domestic article, that is another matter.

Mr. CLARK. We have increased the tax both on the foreign article and the domestic article. I take it that whatever the tax may be there will not be many the less cards used. If we do not get the duty on the foreign article we will get it on the domestic, and if not on the domestic we will get it on the foreign. The committee adjusted the one to the other, and I think we had better let the matter stand as they have adjusted it. If any change be made, it seems to me the duty should be higher.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected. The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines twelve and thirteen of section thirteen, to strike out "manufactured, 25," and insert "unmanufactured, 30;" so as to make the clause read:

On cork, bark or wood, unmanufactured, 30 per cent. ad valorem. On corks and cork bark, manufactured, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out the provision in regard to furs in the fifteenth and sixteenth lines of the thirteenth section, and in lieu of it to insert:

Hatters' furs not on the skin, dressed furs on the skin, 25 per cent. ad valorem; furs on the skin, undressed, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in line twenty of section thirteen, to strike out "35" and insert "40;" so as to make the clause read: "On gutta percha, manufactured, 40 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "dollar," in line thirty, to strike out "25 cents," so as to make the duty on "marble, white statuary, brocatella, sienna, and verd-antique, in block, rough or squared, $1 per cubic foot, and in addition thereto 25 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line forty-three of section thirteen to strike out "2 cents" and insert "1 cent;" so as to make the clause read: "On palm-leaf fans, 1 cent each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section thirteen, line forty-six, after "porcelain" to insert "lava;" after "pipes" in line forty-seven to insert "and pipe-bowls, not herein otherwise provided for;" and in line forty-nine to strike out "50" and insert "75;" so as to make the clause read:

On meerschaum, wood, porcelain, lava, and all other tobacco-smoking pipes and pipe bowls, not herein otherwise provided for, $1 50 per gross, and in addition thereto 75 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line fifty of section thirteen, after "stems" to insert "tips;" in line fifty-two after "fixtures" to insert "and all smoker's articles," and to strike out "100" and insert "75;" so as to make the clause read:

On pipe cases, pipe stems, tips, mouth-pieces, and metallic mountings for pipes, and all parts of pipes or pipe fixtures, and all smoker's articles 75 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line fifty-four of section thirteen to strike out "pipe" before "tips;" and insert "pen," so as to make the item read: "On pen-tips and pen-holders, or parts thereof, 35 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of section thirteen: "On rice, cleaned and uncleaned, 2 cents per pound; on paddy, 1 cent per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eighteen, line two, to strike out "aforesaid" and insert "this act shall take effect."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eighteen, lines five, six, and seven, to strike out "silk, raw or unmanufactured, or not more advanced in manufacture than singles, tram, thrown, or organzine," and insert "raw cotton;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 18. And he it further enacted, That on and after the day and year this act shall take effect there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, and merchandise of the growth or produce of countries east of the Cape of Good Hope, (except raw cotton,) when imported from places west of the Cape of Good Hope, a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem, in addition to the duties imposed on any such articles when imported directly from the place or places of their growth or production: Provided, That section three of the act approved August 5, 1861, entitled "An act to provide increased revenue from imports, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," and section fourteen of the act approved July 14, 1862, entitled "An act increasing temporarily the rates of duties on imports, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I have received a letter on this subject to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate, and as the letter states the matter much better than I can I will read it. My objection is to striking out that portion of this exception which applies to "silk, raw or unmanufactured, or not more advanced than singles, tram, thrown, or organzine." The letter to which I have referred refers to the section as it passed the House of Representatives, and claims that that is right. It says:

"The Senate Finance Committee have reported an amendment to the 'tariff bill' as passed by the House, to make 'tram and organzine in gum pay 10 per cent. additional duty, being shipped from countries this side of the Cape of Good Hope,' the raw material being a growth of countries beyond the Cape of Good Hope. We have been struggling hard for the past three years to manufacture 'bonnet ribbons' in this country, and have succeeded in making them equal in quality to foreign ribbons; but labor being so much lower in England, France, and Switzerland, we cannot compete in price. There are now some twenty ribbon manufacturers in America. If you put this additional duty on tram, organzine, and spun silk, you will ruin every one of us. We pray you to pass the bill as it came from the House, and in a few years you will find thousands of foreign weavers will come to this country, and we shall be able to produce all the ribbons and silk piece goods required for home consumption."

This letter comes from New York from parties with whom I am not familiar and of whom I have no knowledge; but from the facts stated here, it would seem that the section should stand as it was framed by the House of Representatives. I believe the Senator from New York has also some information on this subject, and is in favor of the section as it came from the other House. Under these circumstances I ask that the amendments proposed by the committee be not concurred in. This is a very inferior kind of article, I understand; it is generally the waste of another kind of article, the silk in the gum, or a portion of it is; and if this amendment be adopted it will be subject to a duty of 10 per cent., and the manufacture of ribbons made from this article will be interrupted and the business ruined in this country.

Mr. HARRIS. I also am opposed to the amendment proposed by the Finance Committee so far as it proposes to strike out the exception made by the House of Representatives. That portion of the amendment which proposes to add "raw cotton" to the exception I have no objection to. Indeed I am in favor of that. I understand that there are in this country now quite a number of silk manufactories; that that kind of manufacture has been growing, increasing in the country; that it is yet in its infancy, that it has to struggle hard with foreign competition. Now it is proposed to place upon the raw silk, the article that they use in their manufactures, a duty of 10 per cent. It is 10 per cent. when imported from England, in fact, and not when imported from beyond the Cape of Good Hope. In fact practically it is 10 per cent. upon the importation of the article. These manufacturers cannot import it from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, and do not. They go to England for their stock. Here is a duty of 10 per cent. imposed upon the raw material that they use in this manufacture. If its effect should be, as I apprehend it may be, to stifle, to crush, to destroy these factories, the Government will be the loser by it. If we allow these factories to go on, if they can be sustained, if they can import this raw material and work it up, they will pay an internal duty of 5 per cent. on their manufactures and we shall get much more by that duty than we shall if we stop these factories or cripple their interests so that they cannot go on. In my judgment, it will be wise, the Government will increase its revenues, to abandon this proposition to put a duty of 10 per cent. upon the raw silk imported.

Mr. CLARK. I think, from the remarks of the Senator from New York and also those of the Senator from New Jersey, they have not considered another interest that there is in the country, and that is the manufacture of this raw silk. If you allow it to come in free from duty you strike at the manufacture of it in this country, which is a large interest. The committee desire to protect both. They desire to put a protection upon the manufacture of raw silk and also on the manufacture of ribbons. The manufacture of the lower kinds of raw silk has gained a considerable foothold, such as would come in under this duty. We had deputations from both branches before us, and while the ribbon manufacturers said they would be stricken down without protection, the silk manufacturers said they would be stricken down unless they were protected. The true way is to lay such a duty as will protect the domestic manufacture against the foreign, and then put an additional duty on the foreign article so as to protect the ribbon manufacturer and let him make ribbons. If Senators will turn their attention to page 26, section eight, they will find that we have already laid a duty of 60 per cent. ad valorem on ribbons. That would seem to be enough to protect the ribbon manufacturers in this country. If it is not, the committee will have no objection to make it more.

Mr. HARRIS. The factory that I more particularly know about, is one engaged in importing this raw silk and manufacturing it into patterns.

Mr. CLARK. But then it comes directly in competition with the man who manufactures the raw silk in this country. The ribbon manufacturers also are opposed to the duty, because they want to import the article and make it into ribbons. It is necessary to impose your duty so as to protect them all around. There is another consideration, that if you strike out this exception you encourage our people to import directly from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, and you do not give a protection to those who take the articles from that region into England and other countries and then bring them here. It is very true that our commerce is swept away from those seas to a very great extent now, but the principle is an important one.

Mr. HARRIS. The manufacture is not extensive enough to justify the manufacturers to import from Asia

Mr. CLARK. And yet it may under the fostering care of Congress grow up to be a very large manufacture. So with many foreign wools introduced. We should encourage the direct importation. Now our foreign wools are brought through England to a large extent, but we hope that by and by our interest will be so great that we shall encourage the direct importation.

Mr. HARRIS. I am very much afraid that this will add 25 per cent. and stop the silk manufacturers. The 10 per cent. duty at the present price of gold is equal to 20 per cent. on the importation, and the importers of course will add 5 per cent.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator desire to break down those who manufacture the raw silk in this country?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not understand that there is much of it.

Mr. CLARK. Not a very large amount, but it is growing into quite a business.

Mr. HARRIS. My apprehension is that if you add 25 per cent. to the cost of the raw silk imported you crush those who use it as the raw material of their manufacture in this country.

Mr. CLARK. Undoubtedly we do add something, and we do it for the purpose of protecting our own manufacturers.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I think the Senator from New Hampshire designs to do the same thing that I desire to do, to protect the manufacturer of this raw silk. Now, I understand that it is to be done in just this way: by striking out this amendment of the Finance Committee. The manufacturers who use this raw material say that London is the great center for it, that five sixths of all the raw silk that is manufactured in this country has to be procured in London, that it cannot be obtained beyond the Cape of Good Hope in sufficient quantities to answer the demands of the manufacturers. The consequence is that this duty will debar them from having an opportunity of acquiring this material free of duty, and the Senator from New Hampshire by insisting on this amendment is actually crippling the very business that he designs to aid and protect—this young silk manufacture in this country. I am informed by gentlemen of high intelligence engaged in this business that upon this class of material they do not want discrimination, but the very same men ask for the duty on other silks imported which the Finance Committee have conceded to them. They are the identical persons engaged in the same business. I hope the committee will not insist upon their amendment to this section; but if they are not satisfied they can look further into the subject, and we can alter the provision when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. If we make no amendment but agree to the section as it comes from the other House, the question will be beyond the power of further consideration. Undoubtedly what the Senator from New Jersey says would be true if there were but one variety of manufacture; then they would desire to have their raw material free of duty that they might manufacture it; but there are manufacturers that need protection as well, and so it becomes necessary to protect the whole. It is very similar to the matter of railroad iron.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think this matter is hardly understood. It will be noticed that for several years our policy has been as a general rule to levy 10 per cent. additional duty upon goods coming from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, when they are imported into this country from places this side of the cape. The English having the ability to import perhaps at a cheaper rate than we can import these eastern articles, our merchants and manufacturers get them from England. To encourage direct importations and the use of our own ships, we have provided heretofore that on all articles the production of countries beyond the Cape of Good Hope 10 per cent. additional duty should be levied when they were imported from places this side of the cape. That operates precisely in the way it was designed to operate; but with reference to two or three articles there have been exceptions. One is this raw silk, and the committee propose to except raw cotton. The importation of raw cotton is not very large, but in the present wants of the manufacturers it is deemed advisable to allow it to be imported without the additional duty.

The 10 per cent. additional which is put on here is a protection by so much to the silk manufacturers in this country. If we should not make the exception of raw silk, they would have to pay 10 per cent. additional if they chose to deal with England; but by making the exception they get it from England of course without the additional duty. Those who manufacture a certain class of articles are anxious that the exception should continue; but the mercantile interest, on the contrary, is desirous that the exception should not be made. The duty on these articles of which we have been speaking was 25 per cent. Calculating this 10 per cent. additional as so much protection, it would bring it to 35 per cent., but at their suggestion we raised the 25 per cent. to 40 per cent., adding 15 per cent. to the duty by way of protection. They are very anxious in addition to be relieved of the 10 per cent.

The committee on looking at it thought the exception should not be continued. They did not feel particularly anxious, to say the truth, to give English merchants, under existing circumstances, any advantages which we were not required to give for our own interest. We deemed it wise to increase the duties and strike out the exception. The ribbon manufacturers complain, I know; but I do not see how they can reasonably do so, having 60 per cent. protection by the bill on all manufactures of silk not otherwise enumerated. At present the general rate is about 35 per cent., and we have raised it to 60. As we did that, it seemed to me that this exception might very well be struck out. As we have increased the duty on the particular article from 25 to 40 per cent., I thought it would amount to protection enough. It will be of advantage to our trade to encourage as far as possible direct importations where we can do so without interfering with our own interests. It is, however, a matter upon which I have not any very strenuous opinion, and I believe the committee are in the same position. We thought it wisest under the circumstances to make the alteration here proposed and leave it open for consideration afterwards.

Mr. HARRIS. I agree with the Senator from Maine in his views so far as trade with England is concerned. I have no desire to encourage trade with that country any further than our own interest will be promoted by it. In relation to this particular article my conviction is that the manufacturers at present will have to get their stock from England, that the trade is not large enough to justify them in attempting to import directly from beyond the Cape of Good Hope. I am sure that the stock of raw silk for these little manufacturing establishments will have to be ordered directly from England. I am not sure but that the views expressed by the Senator from Maine in relation to it are correct. My belief is, however, that it will operate very severely and very unjustly on these silk manufacturers. Still, I am not disposed to press the matter further here, but I desire to ask the careful attention of Senators who will be engaged upon the committee of conference on this bill to this point. My impression is that the House of Representatives have got it right, and I desire that Senators who may be upon the conference committee shall give it their attention when they come to consider it hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Finance to the eighteenth section of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in line three of section nineteen to strike out the word "aforesaid" and insert "this act shall take effect;" so as to read:

That all goods, wares, and merchandise which may be in the public stores or bonded warehouses on the day and year this act shall take effect shall be subjected, &c.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think those words, "on the day and year," should be stricken out, so as to read simply, "when this act shall take effect."

Mr. FESSENDEN. The language of the preceding sections is, "the day and year this act shall take effect."

Mr. SHERMAN. Are the new duties to be applied to the goods in warehouse after the day and year the act takes effect?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The act takes effect on a certain day, and it is to apply to everything that is there on that day.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the chairman if that will not apply to goods that are in bond and have been there for some time before the passage of this act?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The provision is that goods in warehouse "shall be subjected to no other duty upon the entry thereof for consumption than if the same were imported respectively after that day." In fact it lessens the duty in a great many cases, because the 50 per cent. resolution increased the duty above this act. It is intended to bring everything within the operation of this act on the day it goes into effect.

Mr. JOHNSON. That I understand; but then goods in warehouse which were responsible only for the duties imposed at the time they were warehoused, and for which, therefore, a bond to that amount was given, will have to pay more, provided the tariff on that class of goods is increased by this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir; but the importer has an opportunity between now and then to take them out if he pleases.

Mr. JOHNSON. But the next section continues the joint resolution in force.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Only up to the time this act goes into effect. The importer can take them out under the joint resolution if he desires to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON. By paying 50 per cent. additional. When we come to that I shall have a word to say.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "1846," in line seven of section nineteen, to insert the words "or any other act," and after the words "fire-crackers," in line eight, to strike out "deposit" and insert "or prohibits their deposit;" so as to make the clause read:

And so much of the act of August 6, 1846, or any other act, as requires the sale of fire-crackers, or prohibits their deposit in bonded warehouse, is hereby repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it meant to authorize the deposit in bonded warehouses of fire-crackers?

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the intention.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is there not some danger in that? It was prohibited by the act of 1846.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was under the idea that there was danger; but they say there is not the slightest danger, and the evidence was conclusive to the committee on that point. There is very great inconvenience from the present law requiring them to be sold.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That on and after the day and year this act shall take effect, it shall be lawful for the owner, consignee, or agent of any goods, wares, or merchandise which shall have been actually purchased, or procured otherwise than by purchase, at the time when he shall produce his original invoice, or invoices, to the collector, and make and verify his written entry of his goods, wares, and merchandise, as provided by section thirty-six of the act of March 2, 1799, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," and not afterwards, to make such addition in the entry to the cost or value given in the invoice as, in his opinion, may raise the same to the true market value of such goods, wares, and merchandise in the principal markets of the country whence they shall have been imported, and to add thereto all costs and charges which, under existing laws, would form part of the true value at the port where the same may be entered, upon which the duties should be assessed. And it shall be the duty of the collector, within whose district the same may be imported, or entered, to cause the dutiable value of such goods, wares, and merchandise to be appraised, estimated, and ascertained, in accordance with the provisions of existing laws. And if the appraised value thereof shall exceed, by 10 per cent., or more, the value so declared on the entry, then, in addition to the duties imposed by law on the same, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem on such appraised value: Provided, That the duty shall not be assessed upon an amount less than the invoice or entered value, any law of Congress to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided further, That, on and after the day and year aforesaid, the eighth section of the act entitled "An act reducing the duty on imports, and for other purposes," approved July 30, 1836, and the act amendatory thereof, approved March 3, 1837, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should be obliged to the chairman of the committee if he would inform me whether the law now is not pretty much as it will be if this amendment be adopted. I speak from recollection merely; but it seems to me that it is but reenacting the present law, except so far as it repeals at the close a section of the act of 1846.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It makes a little more stringent provision in regard to the time when the correction shall be made, and increases the penalty, I think.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think it increases the penalty.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think it does.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest to the honorable chairman that he will find in the act of 1799, perhaps, and in this provision, an apparent inconsistency which may give rise to some questions hereafter. As I read the section, speaking, as I repeat, from recollection, it seems to me very much a reenactment of the present law. Have the Treasury Department seen this section?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir; it was drawn at the Treasury to make the law a little more stringent.

Mr. SUMNER. I confess myself unable entirely to see the full bearing of this, or its necessity, and I shall content myself now with making a statement from a gentleman than whom no one in the whole country is a better authority on the whole question; who can have no personal interest in it; a gentleman who in New England is most familiar with the operation of our revenue system, and with the practical construction of our laws. His remark on this provision is that it is "already substantially contained in the revenue laws, and useless, and will only cause litigation." I have not familiarity enough, I confess, with the old revenue laws to verify this statement.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the Senator refers to the section succeeding the one now under consideration.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the remark might have been applicable to both. It surely is to this. I quote it here that the committee may have the benefit of it. The gentleman speaking of it, I may say, is an authority. There is no one in the country whose acquaintance with the subject is greater than that of the gentleman I have now quoted. He does not go into any details, to be sure, but he has had occasion practically to become conversant with our revenue laws, and has been relied upon in the custom-houses at Boston and New York no other man has for a long time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the substantial operation of this section is to change the time when the invoice shall be corrected, and make it the time when the entry is made for duties.

Mr. SUMNER. In line nine of this section there is a reference to the act of March 2, 1799, which I understand is obsolete. I understand also that there is some other incongruity in the line that follows, by the introduction of the words "and not afterwards," but I have not been able to verify the statute myself. My attention was only called to this clause this morning.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Before the next amendment is read I wish to make an alteration or two. In the first line the word "fixing" should be "determining," and in the third line, after the word "countries," the words "except as hereinbefore provided" should be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

The amendment, as modified, was read as follows:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That in determining the valuation of goods imported into the United States from foreign countries, except as hereinbefore provided, upon which duties imposed by any existing laws are to be assessed, the actual value of such goods on shipboard at the last place of shipment to the United States shall be deemed the dutiable value. And such value shall be ascertained by adding to the value of such goods at the place of growth, production, or manufacture the cost of transportation, shipment, and transshipment, with all the expenses included, from the place of growth, production, or manufacture, whether by land or water, to the vessel in which shipment is made to the United States, the value of the sack, box, or covering of any kind, in which such goods are contained, commission at the usual rate, in no case less than 2½ per cent., brokerage, and all export duties, together with all costs and charges paid or incurred for placing said goods on shipboard, and all other proper charges specified by law.

Mr. SUMNER. That is clearly a very important change. It provides that the actual value of the goods on shipboard at the last place of shipment to the United States shall be deemed the dutiable value. That is a change, and I believe it will be found to be inconsistent with the part of the bill relating to wool, which especially provides for a different mode of valuation. It has already been established by judicial decisions that the dutiable value is the bare cost at the port of purchase. Under those decisions, as I understand, it has been the habit to purchase Australian wool in quantities of four or five hundred bales, send it to London, and tranship it there, and that is because it would be too large a venture by the whole cargo to send it directly here. A full cargo would be worth $500,000. Under the old system that was practicable. Fruits also are sent from Smyrna by steam to England and transhipped to get early into the market. Now, is the Senate disposed to make this change? Is the change sustained by sound policy? If it be, then of course it should be made. I do not myself at this moment appreciate the policy of the change. I should like to know what has influenced the committee to recommend it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All the view we had was to fix the duty at the place where the article started on its journey to the United States, and to avoid the frauds, if you may call them frauds, the advantages that may be gained by shipping an article to one place, keeping it at that place, and then shipping it to the United States without adding the cost of transportation from the one place to the other. I drew this section on the suggestion of an appraiser, certainly one of the very best in the United States, who stated it ought to be done in accordance with the original intention when the law of 1846 was passed, and I drew it from the regulations under that law. When the law of 1846 went into operation, Mr. Walker issued his directions as to how the duties should be collected, and those directions were substantially as I have drawn this section; but under judicial decisions those directions could not be carried out according to the true construction of the act. My view was to control the decisions of the courts on that subject. The fact that we are interfering with judicial decisions amounts to nothing, because the judicial decisions simply show that we did not happen to accomplish what we intended by the act, and there is no great harm in our drawing another act to see if we can accomplish the purpose. The decision of the courts on one act is only a notification to us that we have not accomplished by that act what we designed to accomplish. My belief is that the operation of this section will be beneficial in defining exactly what is to go into the valuation at the foreign port where goods are shipped for the United States.

I was told this morning that substantially most of those things are included by the mode of proceeding at the custom-house; but the principle of taking the cost at the last port of shipment is not recognized. Take the case of goods imported from India into England, and there transhipped to this country. Where would you put the valuation? On the original cost in India or the valuation at the place where they are shipped to America? That is the question. The committee think it will be a useful change to require the duties to be levied upon the valuation at the last place of shipment.

In regard to the argument of the Senator in reference to wool, I believe wool has always stood on a different footing, and the reason why it stands so is that it is graded, and I have already put in this section the words "except as hereinbefore provided" with the very object of excepting wool from its operation, as I think it ought to be, for the simple reason that if this section applied to wool it would entirely change the grades fixed for wool in another part of the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. Does the Senator propose to establish the same rule in regard to the appraisement of wool?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No; I propose to leave that to the rule which has heretofore prevailed in regard to it, to take the value of the article itself, not on shipboard but free from the charges of putting it there. You have fixed grades; you say that wool costing not over so much a pound shall pay such a duty.

Mr. GRIMES. Costing it where?

Mr. FESSENDEN. At the place from which it is exported to this country.

Mr. GRIMES. But suppose it is brought from Australia to Liverpool in the first place.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am speaking of the provisions of the section which go on to designate and define what shall enter into the valuation. If the Senator has read the section he will see that it cannot apply to wool. In all acts that have been passed laying duties on wool it is provided that the cost of the article at the port from which it is shipped to this country shall be taken. That price or cost does not include what I have included on other articles in this section, the expense of putting it on shipboard. We have graded wool at 13 cents a pound, 24 cents a pound, and 32 cents a pound, imposing a different rate of duty on each grade; and if this section were to be passed in such a way as to apply to wool it would entirely change those rates which have been agreed upon, and render a revision of the provision in regard to wool necessary. It could not stand the rates of this bill if this section were applied to it. I design to leave it, therefore, precisely as it was before.

Let me explain to the Senate precisely what this section means. It is that the actual value of goods on shipboard at the last place of shipment in the United States shall be deemed the dutiable value. "And such value shall be ascertained by adding to the value of such goods at the place of growth, production, or manufacture, the cost of transportation, shipment, and transhipment, with all the expenses included, from the place of growth, production, or manufacture, whether by land or water, to the vessel in which shipment is made to the United States, the value of the sack, box, or covering of any kind in which such goods are contained, commission at the usual rate in no case less than $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. brokerage, and all export duties, together with all costs and charges paid or incurred for placing said goods on shipboard."

If you were to add these items to the value of the wool you would change entirely the rates on wool already fixed by the bill. That I do not design to do. I have had some conversation with gentlemen connected with the custom-house this morning, and they say this section will make a great deal of difficulty. I do not know enough about it to say that it will not, but I think we may as well adopt the amendment.

Mr. SUMNER. Of course the Senator is right when he says that there can be no question that we have full legislative power over the matter. We can correct the decisions of the courts. He is right, also, when he suggests that the very fact that the courts have been called upon to decide questions connected with this matter seems to show that it is envolved by certain doubts and difficulties. But on the other hand it is possible that those very decisions of the courts may have removed those doubts and difficulties; and now the question that I wish to present to the Senate is one on which I confess I have no strong impression one way or the other myself. I simply wish that the Senate should understand what they are deciding. They are deciding that the value shall be determined by the price at the last place of shipment, instead of at the place of original purchase. The latter rule, as I understand, down to this time has been followed. We are now going to depart from it. Business has unquestionably adapted itself to the latter rule. It is therefore for the Senate to determine whether the good that may be accomplished by the change is sufficient to justify such a change. I do not know but that it is. I confess that I have no positive opinion one way or the other.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. With the consent of the Senate—although the amendment has been agreed to—I wish to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Finance. I am not entirely certain that I understand the section just adopted. It fixes the place where the last shipment is made as the place where the value of the goods shall be ascertained. What I want to know is this: if a cargo or half a cargo of goods is purchased in London, and the vessel containing them stops on the way, making a round trip, not meaning to come here perhaps at all, unless eventually, but finally comes, having stopped on the way without landing those goods, without having reshipped them, is the dutiable value to be the value as of the time of shipment in London?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator will observe the language: "at the last place of shipment."

Mr. JOHNSON. I looked at that, but I did not know what it meant entirely.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are not shipped at the port where the vessel merely stops. I should think that could not affect it.

Mr. JOHNSON. "From the last place of shipment" might mean the place from which the ship last came.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That would not be decided.

Mr. JOHNSON. You and I would not decide it so, but I am by no means sure what the Treasury Department may decide.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They will decide sensibly, I suppose.

Mr. JOHNSON. That, like other legal presumptions, is not always correct in practice.

The next amendment was to insert as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That so much of section twenty-three of the act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of outstanding Treasury notes, to authorize a loan, to regulate and fix the duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1861, as exempts from duty all philosophical apparatus and instruments imported for the use of any society incorporated for philosophical, literary, or religious purposes, or for the encouragement of the fine arts, or for the use or by the order of any college, academy, school, or seminary of learning in the United States, is hereby repealed. And the same shall be subject to the rate of duty prescribed by said act for manufactured articles therein enumerated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to amend the last clause by striking out the words "the rate of duty prescribed by said act for manufactured articles therein enumerated," and inserting "a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. SUMNER. I must confess that I am against that. I am against the amendment and against the original proposition. I am against it in whole and in part.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the Senator will allow me to amend it. As it now stands the duty would be 30 per cent., and I want to fix it at 20.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. SUMNER. Now, Mr. President, the first aspect of this proposition appears to me just this: the country will get very little by it, and it will do a great deal of mischief. Little money, much mischief—these are the two first features that present themselves. That we shall get little money is obvious from this circumstance, that the philosophical apparatus and instruments imported by colleges and literary institutions, particularly when exposed to this tax, will not be of great value. Twenty per cent. on their value will not be much for the country. But the detriment that will be done will be that the importation will be discouraged. Now, sir, I wish to encourage such importations. I wish to encourage everything by which these associations may be benefited. Not only the associations will gain by such encouragement, but the whole land will be benefited.

I do not wish to go into any protracted argument on this question, for I have no doubt that the minds of Senators will be made up at once as soon as the question is stated; but I do appeal to Senators not to impose this additional tax upon the education of the country. In your excise law you have already shot away from all civilized nations in imposing a tax even on school-books.

Mr. COLLAMER. Allow me to suggest to the Senator that while this tax may be somewhat hard on the colleges and other institutions of learning, the interests of our own mechanics are also to be consulted on the other hand. Let me refer the Senator to the case of that eminent and successful mechanic, Mr. Clark. Would it not be advisable for us to lay such a tax as would encourage such men in this country?

Mr. SUMNER. The case of Mr. Clark, to which the Senator refers—I know him perfectly well—is very exceptional. His achievements in the manufacture of glass employed in astronomical instruments has been unexpected and astonishingly successful. I should be glad to see him encouraged, but I doubt whether in all the country there is another case to take advantage of this section; but the Senator from Vermont will pardon me if I say that I cannot, under this section, look at an individual case.

Mr. COLLAMER. What I meant by the reference was to suggest that it may be of some importance to direct the attention of the mechanics of the country generally to this higher department of mechanism.

Mr. SUMNER. It seems to me that you have a question, then, between two protections, the protection of the mechanics in what the Senator calls this higher branch of mechanism, and the protection of education at large. Now, sir, I am for that which will be of advantage to the whole country, to society, to the poor as well as the rich, to all, and I believe that advantage will ensue by every opportunity that you give, every encouragement that you afford institutions of learning and science. If I could have my way I would lavish upon them bounties; I would give them a bounty for the importation of every instrument of science or that could be used by one of these associations. I believe that the education of our country would be advanced by stimulating such importations rather than by discouraging them. But there is no question now of stimulating them; the proposition is to discourage them, because when you impose this tax it will be practically a discouragement. I hope it will not be imposed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I feel bound to say for the committee that their view in regard to this matter was a very simple one. The amount of revenue from this source will not be large; but as there was considerable complaint because of this exception, and as we thought the manufacture of instruments of all kinds in our country, and especially in this department, should be encouraged, and particularly as where we have encouraged them they have attained a very great degree of excellence, we thought it better to do away with the exception. It is said that some of our best men who have made improvements in philosophical apparatus have contemplated going abroad to set up establishments, for the reason that there is now no protection to them, and, with the high rates of labor in this country, they cannot compete with foreign manufacturers. Under the circumstances we thought it best to lay a duty of 20 per cent. on these instruments imported for colleges and educational institutions. It is not a very large tax. We thought it better on the whole to submit them to the general system. It is, however, for the Senate to decide.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harris, Hicks, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, and Wiley—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Dixon, Harlan, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Morrill, Nesmith, Richardson, Trumbull, and Wright—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose we may as well go back now to section four.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMEROY.) The fourth and fifth sections of the bill which were passed over yesterday at the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Foot] will now be taken up.

The Secretary proceeded to read the fourth section of the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In the seventh line of the section, after the word "States," I move to insert the words "exclusive of the charges in such ports," to make it conform to the law as it stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification will be made, if there be no objection.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance in the fourth section was in line eight to strike out "12" and insert "13," so that it will read:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That on and after the day and year aforesaid, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the importation of the articles hereinafter mentioned, the following duties, that is to say: on all wool, unmanufactured, and all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, unmanufactured, the value whereof at the last port or place from whence exported to the United States shall be 13 cents or less per pound, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this amendment. The House of Representatives have fixed the duty on all wool valued at 12 cents or less at 3 cents per pound, and so on. They adjusted the duty on manufactured articles to suit that scale, and it would be unjust for us to disturb that arrangement, especially by a reduction of the scale and therefore a reduction of the duty on wool. This is an interest in which my constituents will be very deeply affected. The effect of this amendment as a matter of course would be to allow wool that was classified as worth 13 cents per pound and over 12 cents to come in at a duty of 3 cents per pound; in other words, it reduces the duty on wool. I am told that the duties on woolen goods have been carefully adjusted in the House of Representatives with a view to meet the duty on wool. We have in the Senate increased the duty on woolen goods. Many articles of woolen goods, I believe most of them, are increased by our amendments; in some cases very considerably. I think, therefore, the duty on wool ought to be allowed to stand at least as favorably to the farmer as it was in the House bill. I believe I heard all that was said in the Committee on Finance in regard to the proposed change from 12 to 13 cents, but I know of no reason why the change should be made, and therefore I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have rather reduced than increased the duties on woolen goods.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not. My impression is that the duties are increased. The Senator will perceive by reference to the 17th page of the bill that the duty is increased from 35 to 40 per cent. ad valorem on "woolen cloths, woolen shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description made wholly or in part of wool, not otherwise provided for." On the 18th page of the bill the duty on "flannels, uncolored, valued at 30 cents or less per square yard," is raised from 18 to 24 cents per pound, and also in two or three other places Senators will perceive the duty on woolen goods is increased in the Senate, and therefore I see no occasion for the reduction of the duty on wool.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The motion to insert "13" instead of "12" in the clause was made in the House of Representatives; but we know how everything passes there, and it was hardly heard. The mere object of changing "12" to "13" was not to reduce the duty in point of fact; but simply to make provision for what the wool importers stated, that this bill would be very likely to increase the rates of wool in foreign ports, so that what now cost them 12 would cost them 13 cents. It was not considered as affecting the rate fixed by the bill materially one way or the other, even by those who are interested in wool themselves. I did not suppose it would, or I should not have agreed to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will suggest to the Senator that the amendment already adopted on his motion just now will probably make a slight difference; I cannot tell exactly what.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It leaves the charges as they were before.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but under the bill as it came from the Committee on Finance, especially under the last section of the bill, the cost at the port of importation would be added to the cost of the article. That has been changed now, so that the value of wool is fixed at the place of exportation, which would be in South America or some remote port. True, it may touch at several ports on its way home; but as we have amended the bill and imposed the duty on the basis of the importation, deducting from that value the costs and charges at the port of delivery, it seems to me we ought not now to make another discrimination against the wool-grower.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now it will be necessary to reject the succeeding amendment.

The next amendment was in section four, line nine, to strike out "12" and insert "13," so that it will read: "Exceeding 13 cents and not exceeding 24 cents per pound, 6 cents per pound."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was in section four, line eleven, after the word "pounds" to insert the words "and not exceeding 32 cents;" so that the clause will read: "Exceeding 24 cents per pound, and not exceeding 32 cents, 10 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. COLLAMER] has some statements to make in regard to the amendment proposed in the thirty-seventh line of this section which, if his views are adopted, might materially change my vote on this amendment in the thirteenth line on which we are about to act; and I should like to have him make his statement now. I am in favor of this new grade of wool; but after the explanation he has made to me, I doubt very much whether I should vote for the amendment proposed in the thirty-seventh line. I have no objection, therefore, to letting the vote go any way on the pending amendment as to the new schedule of wool until we can act on the other proposition, but I should like to hear the statement of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. COLLAMER. Other gentlemen object to my making any remarks about it until it is reached. The portion of the section which I propose to amend is the latter part, which has not been read.

The next amendment of the committee was in section four, line thirteen, after the words "ad valorem" to insert "exceeding 32 cents per pound, 12 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section four, line twenty-two, to strike out "10" and insert "12;" so that it will read:

Provided, That any wool of the sheep, or hair of the alpaca, the goat, and other like animals which shall be imported in any other than the ordinary condition, as now and heretofore practiced, or which shall be changed in its character or condition for the purpose of evading the duty, or which shall be reduced in value by the admixture of dirt or any foreign substance, shall be subject to pay a duty of 12 cents per pound and 10 per cent. ad valorem, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section four, line thirty-six, to strike out the words "increased in value by being scoured or cleansed" and to insert the words "imported scoured;" and in line thirty-eight to strike out the words "addition to" and to insert the words "lieu of;" so that the proviso will read:

And provided further, That wool which shall be imported scoured shall pay, in lieu of the duties herein provided, double the amount of such duties.

Mr. COLLAMER. I have an objection to that amendment. I do not wish to take up time uselessly, and therefore, if the gentleman from Maine will not object to its rejection, I shall say nothing about it.

Mr. President, last year, under the existing law, the law of 1861, there were imported into the United States in round numbers 71,000,000 pounds of wool. There were produced in this country a little over 80,000,000 pounds. By that law, all wool which cost not exceeding 18 cents a pound paid 5 per cent. ad valorem; and all above 18 cents up to 24 cents a pound paid 3 cents a pound; and all exceeding 24 cents was 9 cents a pound. Now, I say there were imported 71,000,000 pounds, and as that wool was entered at the custom-house to pay duties, it averaged 17 cents a pound, falling just one cent short of the minimum price named in the law. They were to pay 5 per cent. on all below 18 cents a pound, and that caused the average of the whole to be 17 cents a pound.

I have a statement of the number of pounds which were introduced at the different rates of duty. There were imported under 18 cents, 61,572,000 pounds; from 18 cents to 24 cents, over 7,000,000 pounds; above 24 cents, 1,114,000 pounds. So you perceive that of the whole 71,000,000 pounds 61,000,000 that came in was in the 5 per cent.

Mr. HOWE. What was the appraised value?

Mr. COLLAMER. There never was an appraisement put upon it. They paid by the cost at the place from which it was imported. Some came in in this way: under our reciprocity treaty with Canada we had something over a million pounds, almost two millions, in that way; but the first point I am at is to show by these tables the amount imported, and in the next place at what rate it came in, and that in point of fact less than half a million of dollars upon the whole 71,000,000 pounds of wool was ever realized into the Treasury. There is no importation into this country, and especially of articles produced in this country, that bears any sort of resemblance to this.

But there is another material thing. The capacity of our woolen manufactories established in this country amounts to about 120,000,000 pounds. Including those who have converted their machinery from cotton to woolen manufacturing they can work about 120,000,000 pounds. The effect is that there remains in the hands of the wool-growers now nearly the whole of their last year's clip. Wool has been brought from abroad in the manner I have shown you, and under the exceedingly low rates now fixed, and the amount used by the manufacturers has been very nearly the same as formerly; where there were 150,000,000 formerly they have worked up about 120,000,000 pounds. Of course, the domestic wool-growers furnished but 50,000,000 pounds to them, and the rest of their clip is on hand and liable to destruction. This is the situation and condition in which the matter stands in relation to the prospects and condition of the wool-growing interest in this country.

There is some fine wool imported which went above the 24 cents before fixed and will go above the 32 cents fixed here, high-priced Saxony wool. There is but very little of the Australian fine wool brought to this country from London. That is very fine wool and very high-priced wool. The Australian wool is worth in London 80 or 90 cents even in their money. We get very little of that, but we do import some of the fine Saxony wool. In relation to the great body of the imported wool, all of the 61,000,000 pounds imported as valued at 17 cents, it is a wool which when cleansed, the dirt all got out of it, and washed and scoured, actually fit to go into cloth, will make about one pound of cloth to four pounds of wool. Out of some of the best of it you will get a pound of cloth to three pounds of wool, and out of some of the worst of it you will not get a pound of cloth out of five pounds; but upon the whole as an average, you may calculate they will make just about a pound of cloth to four pounds of that kind of wool. There are various ways in which that wool is cleansed. There are burring machines which they run it through; and then there are picking machines where it is run through and much of the dry dirt taken out of it. Then there is the washing. Washing will clean it, but if you go through the whole process and actually scour it, by which I understand not only using water but soap by which you scour it so as to be fit to go into the cloth, then I say it will produce about one pound of cloth to four pounds of the original wool. You will observe that the committee and the House too in this very bill recognize the same thing. You will see when you come to the great duties upon cloth in the fifth section:

Second. On woolen cloths, woolen shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description, made wholly or in part of wool, not otherwise provided for, 24 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance propose there to strike out "35" and to insert "40." I would here remark that under this head will be included eight tenths if not nine tenths of all the woolsens there are. You will perceive that the duty they lay upon it is, in the first place, on each pound of that cloth, 24 cents; and why? Because they laid a duty of 6 cents a pound on that kind of wool when we imported it, showing you that, as they estimated it, four pounds of that wool went into one pound of this woolen cloth; and hence they laid a duty of 24 cents a pound on the cloth by the pound. Then they laid a percentage of 35 per cent., which makes the great protective distinction between foreign and American manufactures. They laid it upon the wool in the cloth, laying the whole amount of what wool goes into it to make that cloth, being four pounds to one; and the whole arrangement of this bill in all its parts is made consistent with this view which I have been endeavouring to present. It is all in consistency and keeping with that view.

Now, Mr. President, if by any means men who purchase this wool abroad in the condition in which it is ordinarily bought, and hitherto has always been, commence a process upon it there, and especially carry on the process of cleansing up to its highest grade, that of scouring it so as to be fit for cloth, what additional duty should there be on it? Just four times as much. It is worth just four times the money. There should be four times as much duty upon a pound of it. That is all perfectly plain and clear. The provision of the House bill in case it undergoes this process of scouring prior to its being imported is in these words:

And provided further, That wool which shall be increased in value by being scoured or cleansed shall pay, in addition to the duties herein provided, double the amount of such duties.

That is to say, it shall pay the duty herein provided and twice more in addition thereto. That would make three times the amount of the duty. According to my view, it ought to be four times as much if that cleansing be perfect. What I mean by perfect is, put in that condition in which it would go into the cloth. It should have been four times, but they make it but three because they thought it would be imperfect. They can sort this wool abroad just as well as we do, but this is to prevent their washing or scouring it there. It does not prevent them from doing things as they have been heretofore, bringing it in hereafter as before, sorting or not sorting it as they have done it heretofore; but it is that if they scour it it shall have an increase of duty, which the House said should be three times and our committee say should be only twice. That is, the committee say that the wool which shall be imported scoured shall, in lieu of the duties herein provided, pay double the amount of such duties, whereas the House bill is that they shall pay double the amount in addition to the duties provided.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I desire to know if I understand the honorable Senator's statement Does he mean to say that after it has been thoroughly scoured it takes four pounds to one?

Mr. COLLAMER. I mean that when that wool is scoured and made fit to put into cloth one pound of it will make a pound of cloth.

Mr. SHERMAN. And one pound of scoured wool is equivalent in value to four pounds of ordinary wool.

Mr. COLLAMER. Certainly, that is what I mean.

Mr. CLARK. Allow me to suggest that you not only clean out the impurities of the wool and have your pure wool left, but when you come to sort it you have but one fourth of it to go into one grade.

Mr. COLLAMER. I mean to average your cloth through. I know that when you get it beamed and get it sorted, you generally make three and sometimes four sorts, but those sorts are all made into cloth in the end.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator said the sorting might be done abroad, but I think it is always done here according to the manufactures for which it is sorted.

Mr. COLLAMER. The sorting is a trade by itself.

Mr. CLARK. But each man sorts according to what he is going to use it for and the grade he wants.

Mr. COLLAMER. A man will sort large quantities of wool. The best quality of it he may not use for his cloth, and he will sell it to another manufacturer who makes a different grade. I say that taking the wool and cleaning it, fit to be made into cloth, whether you make it into more or different kinds of cloth, is not a matter of any consequence. It will make four pounds of cloth. That is the ordinary average. Sometimes you may get a little more, sometimes a little less, but I think on the whole it will be about that.

I may further remark that as a general rule our American wool will shrink one half on the average. You may make it into different qualities of cloth by sorting, and when you have averaged through the weight of the cloth you have got out and the wool you had at the beginning, you will find that you have just about one half the weight. While the foreign wool shrinks 75 per cent., ours shrinks 50.

If you run the parallel through you see that in point of fact, if it really be scoured as is here mentioned, fit to be worked into cloth, then it is worth just four times as much by the pound; and of course to equalize the duty it should pay four times as much as the other, because it took four pounds of the dirty wool to make one pound of the scoured wool, and it should pay 24 cents a pound duty instead of 6 cents. If, when you bring it in in the dirt you pay 6 cents, you ought to pay 24 cents when you bring it in cleaned, scoured, finished, fit for cloth. The other House put it at three times the duty on the dirty wool; that is, 18 cents per pound, and our committee recommend putting it at 12 cents, or twice as much.

For these reasons I object to the amendment of the committee, and hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. So far as that part of it is concerned, I will simply say to the Senator, as he has referred to the action of the House of Representatives, that it was at the suggestion of the House committee that we proposed to insert the words "in lieu of" instead of "in addition to." They say it was a mistake.

Mr. COLLAMER. I think I have explained that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It now reads, "wool which shall be increased in value by being scoured or cleansed." We propose to strike out "increased in value by being scoured or cleansed," and to insert "imported scoured." It may be increased in value in many different ways, by washing on the sheep's back, &c., all the way through, so that it is difficult to make any rule on the subject. If the Senator does not like the rate of duty on the wool imported scoured, I have no objection to his making a change, but I want the words "increased in value by being scoured or cleansed" stricken out, because they are impracticable.

Mr. COLLAMER. I have no objection to making it distinct and clear by inserting the word "scoured." We all understand what that means.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I understand there is no objection to the first part of the amendment, which is to strike out the words "increased in value by being scoured or cleansed" and to insert "imported scoured."

Mr. COLLAMER. I have no objection to that, but I think the duty ought to be four times as much on the scoured wool as on the other, instead of double.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; that alteration can be made afterwards.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment to this clause is, in lines thirty-six and thirty-seven of section four, to strike out the words "increased in value by being scoured or cleansed" and to insert "imported scoured."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment is in line thirty-eight, to strike out "addition to" and insert "lieu of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLLAMER. Now, I move to amend the clause by striking out the word "double" in line thirty-eight and inserting "four times." This will carry out the views which I entertain, and will leave the matter for a committee of conference.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section five, line sixteen, to strike out the word "five" after the word "fifty;" so as to make the clause read: "On Brussels and tapestry Brussels carpets and carpeting, printed on the warp or otherwise, 50 cents per square yard."

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that the duty specified by the House of Representatives in this particular ought not to be changed. The duty of 55 cents per square yard, although it seems large, is not by any means more than it should be, as I think a duty of 55 cents upon the square yard is equal to 4 1/4 cents on the running yard. The neutralizing duties or taxes upon that 4 1/4 cents the running yard are made up in this way: in the first place there are 6 cents on the pound of wool which goes into the manufacture of that running yard of carpet; then there is 35 per cent. duty on a pound and a half of linen yarn, worth 27 cents. That makes 9 45-100 cents. Then the duty on the dyestuffs which go into the running yard of carpeting is 2 cents; then there is 5 per cent. excise tax on $2, the average price of a yard of this carpeting, which amounts to 10 cents. That makes the total amount of neutralizing duties on a yard of this carpeting 27 45-100 cents. Subtracting that from 41 25-100 cents and it leaves the duty on the running yard 13 80-100 cents. That really is all the duty upon this running yard of carpeting, nominally in the bill 55 cents. That sum of 13 80-100 cents per running yard is about 21 per cent. on the imported article, which costs about 65 cents per yard. That I submit to the Senate is not too much. A duty of 20 per cent. or 25 per cent. is not too high a duty, and has not been so considered in ordinary times, on goods of this description. It is no more than a fair protective duty. I submit that reducing it from 55 cents to 50 cents, when the duty at 50 cents will really be a protection of only about 21 per cent., is not proper.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is an error in the Senator's calculation. In the first place, the wool that enters into this carpet is a cheaper grade of wool, and therefore pays a duty of but 3 cents per pound. We are informed that scarce any of the higher grade of wool is put into this carpeting. It is the cheaper wool costing less than 12 cents in the dirty condition in which it comes to this country that goes into this kind of carpet. Another fact was stated to us, that in this kind of carpet there are but about seven or eight or twelve ounces of wool—I have forgotten the precise number; the great body of it is made up of linen warp. If I do not use the technical terms, the Senator will know what I mean. A very small portion of the material of this kind of carpeting being wool, there is on the linen warp a discrimination in favor of our manufacturers amply sufficient.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have changed that duty and increased it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Still the discrimination is large, and this is the reason why it was deemed proper to lower the rate of duty on Brussels and tapestry carpeting in order to conform to the corresponding duties on other articles. I remember very well the statements made, both in writing and in person, by very intelligent importers and persons dealing in this business, and they made the impression in our minds that 50 cents per square yard was at least as high a rate of duty on this kind of carpeting as upon the others in proportion to the value of the carpeting and the amount of wool consumed in its manufacture.

Mr. FOSTER. The rate of 55 cents per square yard on this kind of carpeting is no higher than a duty of 80 cents per square yard on the class of carpeting named in the immediately preceding clause of this same section. There the duty amounts—I can give the items which will show it, but it is unnecessary—to 20 per cent., and here 55 cents per square yard on this kind of carpeting amounts to but the smallest fraction more. Fifty-five cents come nearer than 50 cents to making the rate of duty on this kind of carpeting precisely the same as on the class of carpeting mentioned in the immediately preceding clause in the same section; and so it is of the next clause in regard to treble ingrain and three-ply carpeting, &c. If you let this carpeting stand at 55 cents, it will be equal and no more than equal to the other classes of carpeting in the same section. If you put it at 50 cents it will be less.

I have given here a statement of the items which I derived from a manufacturer in whom I have the highest confidence, and I am persuaded that his statement is entirely correct. The wool used, which he says pays a duty of 6 cents per pound, I am sure is wool which pays that duty. The 35 per cent. on a pound and a half of linen yarn which is worth 27 cents, I am persuaded is the kind of yarn that goes into the manufacture; and so of the duty on the dye-stuffs, and the 5 per cent. excise tax on $2 a yard, the average price of the material. I think I can speak with certainty when I say that the figures which I give here are correct, and that if this duty remains at 55 cents a square yard, it will be a protective duty of only 21 per cent.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Ohio is incorrect, and my colleague is entirely correct, I think, in the statement with regard to the duty paid on the wool used in this kind of carpeting. The duty on wool exceeding 12 cents and not exceeding 24 cents a pound in value, as it now stands, is 6 cents per pound. That is the kind of wool which is used in this carpeting, and not the species of wool which is of a price less than 12 cents and which pays a duty of 3 cents per pound. It is within my knowledge, from information received from those in whom I have entire confidence, that the kind of wool used is that which pays a duty of 6 cents a pound.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have now the precise computation of the ad valorem duty proposed by this section of the bill. Fifty-five cents on the tapestry carpeting amounts to 83 per cent. of the actual cost of the imported carpet. I find that on another class of carpeting the duty is 72½ per cent., on another class 70 per cent., on another class 66 per cent.; and on another 60 per cent. The purpose of the committee was by reducing this rate to 50 cents to bring it down to pretty much the same ad valorem duty that is imposed on other carpeting. It reduces the ad valorem duty to 73 per cent., a protection higher than the ad valorem duty on any other kind of carpeting. This statement, I am told, was made up from actual importations, and the gentleman vouches for its accuracy. The cost in gold and paper money and the percentage is given, I have no doubt, accurately.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The committee had considerable discussion about this matter, and were somewhat in doubt in regard to it, but upon the whole came to the conclusion that 50 cents a yard was enough protection on carpeting of this description. Of course the committee will be satisfied with what the Senate do in regard to it. As we are looking for revenue it is not desirable to put on any more duty than it is absolutely necessary to put on for purposes of protection, because we do not want to exclude anything just at present, whatever we may find it proper to do hereafter. I think we had better reduce this duty from 55 to 50 cents, and leave the matter for further consultation with the other House.

Mr. JOHNSON. It will make a wonderful difference to the consumer, because the domestic manufacturers will be sure to carry their price up to within a small fraction of that of the imported article. I have supposed that the object of this bill was rather to raise revenue than to give protection. The protection in point of fact is given already from various causes. A time like this, when each individual citizen is suffering from the additional cost of everything, would seem to be, in my judgment, a very bad time to increase the duties upon foreign importations, when the effect can only be either to exclude the articles altogether or to add very much to the cost of the articles consumed. I do not suppose that at any period of the Government the manufacturers of the United States have been more flourishing than at present under the existing tariff. If the 55 cents proposed by the other House will not exclude this article, then it is certain that the price of the domestic article will go up to nearly the same with that of the foreign article, and we who buy carpets will have to pay for them. There is not a family in the United States that are not anxious to have the best kind of carpeting they can get; they may not want much, but they want some of it, particularly in the parlor. They have to pay now, because of the difference in our currency, very much more than they ever had to pay before; and if you impose a very heavy duty on the foreign article they will have to pay much more hereafter than they are paying now. Just in proportion as you make it difficult for them to meet their own current expenses you take from them the means of meeting conveniently, if able to meet at all, the calls which the Government has made and will be obliged to make upon them in the future. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cadille, Clark, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Harris, Hendricks, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Dixon, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Lane of Indiana, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wilkinson, and Wilson—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Harding, Henderson, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Richardson, Wade, and Wright—13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twenty, of section five, I move to strike out "S" and insert "6½," so as to make the clause read: "On hemp or jute carpeting, 6½ cents per square yard."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in line thirty-four, of section five, to strike out "35" and insert "40," so as to make the clause read:

On woollen cloths, woollen shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description, made wholly or in part of wool, not otherwise provided for, 24 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. SUMNER. There is a discrepancy between this provision and a provision in a later page. I will call attention to that first.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is proposed to strike out the provision on page 20.

Mr. SUMNER. That was what I was about to call attention to. Now, I come to the matter of substance, the question as to the tax ad valorem. The committee propose to substitute "40" for "35." I take it their object was in order to counterveil the excise tax which is imposed on the manufacturer.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That and other additional expenses.

Mr. SUMNER. But especially that. So far as I understand the question, that is one special element which has been recently introduced into the cost of the article. Now, unless I am misinformed, the object of the committee will not be completely accomplished by putting this at 40 per cent. ad valorem; they must go still higher, to 45 per cent. I have here a letter from very excellent authority, certainly as good as could be quoted, that makes some explanation of the operation of the different taxes. It comes from a gentleman whose statements and reasoning are entitled to consideration.

Mr. POWELL. Will the Senator tell us who he is?

Mr. SUMNER. As it is a private letter, I prefer not to give the name of the writer. It is from a gentleman entirely familiar with the subject and of incontestable integrity and character.

Mr. POWELL. If the statements of the letter are to be authority, I should like to know who the writer is.

Mr. SUMNER. After setting forth the details and showing that the amount of tax he will pay on one yard of goods will be 36½ cents, he proceeds:

"Now the importer of manufactured goods will pay duty on similar fabrics at a valuation not exceeding $1 per yard, and in many cases at a less valuation. But taking the largest valuation and we have the following:

A specific duty of 24 cents per pound, on fourteen ounces, the weight of the goods, 21 cents..... 21
Ad valorem duty of 35 per cent. on $1, the value of the same..... 35

Making the total amount of duty..... 56

"Deducting from the amount of duty paid by the importer of manufactured goods (56 cents) the amount paid by the manufacturer as duty on his wool and excise tax when manufactured, (36½ cents,) and it will show the actual protection which I receive from the tariff, namely, 19½ cents on a yard. From this should be deducted the excess of the cost of importing the wool over the cost of importing the same when manufactured into cloth, say 3 cents, which leaves a protection of only 16½ cents per yard. This is equal to an ad valorem duty of 16½ cents with wool free and no excise tax.

"Is not this a less protection than we have ever had? I think it is, while there is paid a higher rate for labor than was ever known in this country before. Will not the result of such legislation be the increase of importations, and the stopping of our own machinery until American wool falls to a price at which we can compete with foreign manufactures?"

"I notice that the specific duty on manufactured goods just covers the duty on wool, but not the excise tax. To cover both, the specific duty will have to be raised to 30 cents per pound, or the ad valorem duty to 45 per cent.; and unless this is done the wool-raiser will not be benefited by the proposed changes."

This writer, it will be perceived, goes on the idea that the specific duty is intended as a balance to the excise tax, and in order to make that balance effective he says it must be raised to 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts tell us about how much percentage that manufacturer made this year on his manufacture.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no means of knowing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not the slightest doubt that he has made 50 per cent. I am informed that there is not a woollen manufacturer in the country who does business on a large scale that has not made under the existing duties from 20 to 50 per cent. profit, and in some cases more. The iron manufacturers have made more. The writer admits in his letter, as I understand, that the increased duty is at least correspondent to the amount of the increased taxation, so that he still has the benefit of the old protection.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. He says "the specific duty on manufactured goods just covers the duty on wool, but not the excise tax."

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the Senator from Mas-

Massachusetts to allow me a moment to reply to the argument which has just been made by the Senator from Ohio, and which has been used on this floor a number of times during the session. It is said that large profits have been made by manufacturers. Those profits have been made by the rise in material. The value of the material has been constantly rising. Cotton has gone up from 20 cents to $1.30. Everything has doubled. From the time the manufacturer takes in his raw material until he turns out his manufactured product everything rises. In many cases if he had kept the raw material without manufacturing it he would have made just as much as he made by turning out the manufactured article. It will not do to take profits made under this exceptional state of things as a rule that may be expected in future.

Mr. FOSTER. Some of the very greatest profits made by manufacturers, to my knowledge, have been made by those who had a large stock of cotton on hand, and who shut their mills and kept their cotton until it rose to the maximum, and then sold it without turning a spindle.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This amendment is about woolen manufactures, not about cotton.

Mr. ANTHONY. Woollens have risen to pretty much the same extent.

Mr. SUMNER. There is an answer that I wish to make to the Senator from Ohio. He asks me if the gentleman whose letter I have read did not within the last year make large profits. I do not know whether he made large or small profits. But suppose he did make large profits, is that any reason why we should compel him to carry on a losing business hereafter, or impose a tax which would make his business a losing one? The question is precisely that, whether the tax we are going to impose will not make his business a losing one. To that it is said that with a smaller tax we shall have large importations which will give a very large income. I am not insensible to that argument at this moment. At this crisis, with me it is next to controlling; but I take it we have gone on the idea with this bill from the beginning of harmonizing the interests of the Government with the interests of individuals.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let me tell the Senator that here in the first place is a specific duty of 24 cents a pound, which offsets the duty on the wool, taking four pounds of the dirty wool at 6 cents per pound. The additional burden on the domestic manufacturer of which he speaks is 2 per cent. It was 3 per cent. before, it is now 5 per cent. To countervail that we give him an addition of 10 per cent. to the ad valorem duty before imposed.

Mr. SUMNER. The question is whether you have given him enough.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Our opinion is that we have given quite enough.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Massachusetts would ask us to put a duty of 45 per cent. on woolen goods with a view to gain more revenue and more money to the Government, I should have some respect for his opinion, and some respect for the writer of the letter which he has read; but when he bases it upon the ground that a higher rate of duty is necessary to protect the manufacturer, I have no respect for the reasons of the writer. The present duty on woolen goods is 30 per cent. ad valorem, and on wool there is very little duty. We have now levied a duty on wool of the ordinary qualities used for manufacturing of 6 cents a pound, which is equivalent to 24 cents a pound on the wool scoured and ready for use. We have therefore put a specific duty on woolen cloth of 24 cents a pound, so that the duty on wool is offset by the specific duty of 24 cents a pound. Then we have increased the ad valorem duty 10 per cent., or one third, from 30 to 40 per cent. We have raised the tax on the domestic manufacture 2 per cent. The writer of this letter who has been paying 3 per cent. on manufactures will now have to pay 5 per cent. in paper money. We give him a protection of 10 per cent. in gold. If that is not enough to satisfy a reasonable demand for protection, I do not know what is.

The purpose of the committee—and it is the reason why I have voted for all these large duties—is simply to get money without regard to protection. All domestic industry in a time of war is protected by the state of war. I do not think any article needs protection now. In voting for these high rates of duty, I am actuated simply by the desire to get money into the Treasury. In the Committee on Finance I have not objected to any increase of the rates where that increase was made with a view to revenue. If I believed that 45 per cent. on woolen goods would yield us more revenue than the rate proposed by the committee, I should have no objection whatever to it; but when it is put upon the narrow ground of protection, when a manufacturer because of 10 per cent. additional tax put upon him, and because of a little increase he has to pay on his dye-stuffs, demands an additional tax of 15 per cent. in gold on the imported article, I think it is asking rather too much.

Mr. SUMNER. I take it that we are all anxious to have what General Jackson called a judicious tariff, and that no one proposes directly protection; and I agree entirely with the Senator from Ohio that at this period of war the exigencies of the times furnish naturally an adequate protection. All that I presumed to suggest was that we should keep both interests in mind—the interests of our own Treasury and the interests of our fellow-citizens, in this case the manufacturers. Now if it were clear that by a tax of 40 per cent. we could get a much larger revenue without sacrificing the interests of the manufacturers, I clearly should be for that. With the conviction that I have, it seems to me that we should try to harmonize both, and the practical question with me is whether with your tax at 40 per cent. you do harmonize both.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out "35" and insert "40."

Mr. SUMNER. I move to amend the amendment by substituting "45" for "40."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected. The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "worsted," in line thirty-nine, the words "the hair of the alpaca, the goat, or other like animal;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That goods of like description, composed of worsted, the hair of the alpaca, the goat, or other like animal, and weighing over eight ounces to the square yard, shall be subject to pay the same duties and rates of duty herein provided for woolen cloths.

Mr. SUMNER. I am not familiar enough with the terms employed by the Senator to know whether the words he uses are better than those which I had prepared to be put in this place. I had proposed to move to insert "mohair or goat's hair" after the word "worsted."

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that I have followed the words on page 15 in the fourth section.

Mr. SUMNER. One of our appraisers called my attention to this clause, and proposed the amendment I now mention.

Mr. CLARK. Mine includes it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section five, lines fifty-eight and fifty-nine, to strike out the words "for carpets" after "yarn;" so as to make the clause read: "On woolen and worsted yarn valued at less than 50 cents per pound, and not exceeding in fineness No. 14, 16 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 25 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section five, lines seventy-eight and seventy-nine, to strike out "all manufactures not otherwise provided for, and ladies'," and in lieu thereof to insert "women's and children's;" in line eighty to strike out "wool" before "worsted," and after "mohair" to insert "alpaca;" in line eighty-one to strike out "40" and insert "30;" and in line eighty-four to strike out "40" and insert "30;" so as to make the clause read:

On women's and children's dress goods, composed wholly or in part of worsted, mohair, alpaca, or goats' hair, gray or uncolored, not exceeding in value the sum of 30 cents per square yard, 4 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 25 per cent. ad valorem; exceeding in value 30 cents per square yard, 6 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. SUMNER. Before the vote is taken on that amendment I wish to call the attention of the committee to the eighty-second line, where it is provided that the tax shall be 4 cents per square yard. I have in my hands a communication from one of the appraisers at Boston, in which he says that it will be necessary to provide for manufactures of mohair, or goats' hair, which cannot be estimated at the square yard, which the committee have entirely forgotten to do.

Mr. JOHNSON. Why not? Does he give any reason?

Mr. SUMNER. He does not give any reason, but he is one of the appraisers, and he is therefore an expert. I wish merely to call attention to it, and leave the committee to determine it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section five, line eighty-seven, to strike out the word "similar," and insert "the last-mentioned;" in line eighty-nine to strike out "40" and insert "30," and to strike out "3" and insert "4;" and in line ninety-one to strike out "40" and insert "30;" so as to make the clause read:

On all goods of the last-mentioned description, if stained, colored, or printed, not exceeding in value the sum of 30 cents per square yard, 4 cents per square yard, and 30 per cent. ad valorem; exceeding in value 30 cents per square yard, 6 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The next four lines, lines ninety-four, ninety-five, ninety-six, and ninety-seven, should be stricken out. I move to strike them out.

Mr. GRIMES. Why?

Mr. CLARK. The matter is provided for in a previous clause of the section.

The words proposed to be stricken out were read, as follows:

On all manufactures of wool, or of which wool shall be a component material, not otherwise provided for, 20 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in line one hundred of section five, to strike out "40" and insert "55;" so as to make the clause read:

On bunting and on all other manufactures of worsted, or of which worsted shall be a component material, not otherwise provided for, 55 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The committee had a good deal of doubt about that matter, and I am satisfied myself that 55 per cent. is more than is necessary. I move to amend the amendment by making the duty 50 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to make a suggestion in regard to the clause just voted upon. Is there not some incongruity between it and the provision on the 18th page, and is it not necessary that there should be some provision here for the kindred article of mohair or goats' hair? My correspondent, the appraiser of Boston, suggests the introduction of those words here.

Mr. CLARK. The committee have no objection to that.

Mr. SUMNER. Then I propose after the word "worsted," in the ninety-eighth line, to insert "mohair, alpaca, or goats' hair," and to insert the same words after "worsted" in the ninety-ninth line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section five, after line one hundred, to insert the following clause:

On lastings, mohair cloth, silk, twist, or other manufacture of cloth, woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for shoes, slippers, boots, booties, gaiters, and buttons, exclusively, not combined with India rubber, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not understand the reason for that clause; and indeed I am told by those who are familiar with the subject that there is no reason for it. It will be perceived that it proposes a tax of 10 per cent. ad valorem on certain enumerated articles, "on lastings, mohair cloth, silk, twist, or other manufacture of cloth, woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for shoes, slippers, boots, booties, gaiters, and buttons, exclusively, not combined with India rubber." Now, the question is, why those articles when woven or made into patterns of size and form for those articles should pay a less tax than they otherwise would pay? They are to pay only 10 per cent. If they did not come in for this purpose they would pay 40 per cent. What is the reason for the reduction? May not this reduction be made a cover for the introduction of the materials out of which these things are made at a cheaper rate than they otherwise would be? I have my doubts as to whether this clause should be adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. These are small articles, which come in competition with nothing at all, and we want to get some duty on them. They are brought in here in order to let them stand as they did before. They are made for this special purpose.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator will understand me: the point is, that this clause may be used as a cover for the introduction of these materials.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not at all. It cannot cover anything of the sort. They are cut into patterns, made in a particular way.

Mr. SUMNER. I am told by those familiar with the subject they may be.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not at all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section five, line one hundred and ten, after the words "oil-cloth" to insert the words "except silk oil-cloths;" so that it will read:

On oil-cloths for floors, stamped, painted, or printed, valued at 50 cents or less per square yard, 30 per cent. ad valorem; valued at over 50 cents per square yard, and on all other oil-cloth, except silk oil-cloth, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the duty ought to be slightly increased on cordage. I therefore move, in section seven, line twenty-three, to strike out "2½" and to insert "3;" and in line twenty-five to strike out "¼" and insert "½;" so that it will read: "On tarred cables or cordage, 3 cents per pound; on untarred Manila cordage, 2½ cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We desire and think it necessary to finish this bill to-night, and I rise for the purpose of suggesting that fact to the Senate, and taking the sense of the Senate upon whether we will take a recess until some hour this evening, or go on with the bill now until we get through with it.

Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. SUMNER. Let us go on.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am perfectly content if it is understood that we are to go on and finish the bill to-night.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no; let us take a recess.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think that seems to be the voice of the town meeting, and therefore I will make a motion that at twenty-five minutes before five o'clock we take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSON. Why not take it now?

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is precisely the time now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY.) The Chair understands the motion to be that the Senate take a recess from five minutes before five o'clock till seven o'clock.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; that was not the motion. I said twenty-five minutes to five. However, I will change my motion, and move that the Senate now take a recess until seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly took a recess until seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock p. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 23d of May, a report of the Quartermaster General, exhibiting the amount estimated for the current year to be paid for transporting Government supplies from the Platte country railroad to Fort Leavenworth, and thence, via Fort Kearney and Fort Ridgely, westwardly; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a detailed statement of the payments from the contingent fund of the Senate for the year ending December 6, 1863; which was read and ordered to lie on the table, and a motion of Mr. Dixon that the report be printed was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS.

Mr. FOOT presented six petitions of citizens of Vermont, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 192) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1865; and had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered eight, twelve, nineteen, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, forty and eighty-eight, and agreed to the same; that it had receded from its amendment to the ninety-fifth amendment of the Senate, and agreed to the ninety-fifth amendment with another amendment; and it had modified its amendment to the ninety-sixth amendment of the Senate; that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the ninth and ninety-fourth amendments of the Senate, and upon its amendments to the twenty-fifth, thirty-fourth, and ninetieth amendments of the Senate to the bill; and asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. G. H. PENDLETON of Ohio, Mr. WILLIAM WINDOM of Minnesota, and Mr. ORLANDO KELLOGG of New York, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 227) granting lands to the State of Michigan for the construction of certain wagon roads for military and postal purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 405) to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes; and agreed to other amendments of the Senate with amendments; that it insisted upon its disagreements and amendments, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. S. MORRILL of Vermont, Mr. G. H. PENDLETON of Ohio, and Mr. S. HOOPER of Massachusetts, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A joint resolution (No. 80) for the adjustment of the claim of James and O. P. Cobb & Co., of Indiana; and

A joint resolution (No. 94) for the relief of Peter Wheeler.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 227) granting lands to the State of Michigan for the construction of certain wagon roads for military and postal purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 290) for the relief of Rhoda Wolcott, widow of Henry Wolcott;

A bill (H. R. No. 356) requiring proof of payment of duties on foreign salt before the payment of the allowances provided for by the acts of July 29, 1813, and March 3, 1819;

A bill (H. R. No. 521) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of claims of Peruvian citizens under the convention between the United States and Peru of January 12, 1863," approved June 1, 1864; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 47) for the relief of Rev. W. B. Matchett.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A joint resolution (No. 80) for the adjustment of the claim of James & O. P. Cobb & Co., of Indiana; and

A joint resolution (No. 94) for the relief of Peter Wheeler.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 405) to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate to the said bill; and,

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, disagree to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate thereto, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Messrs. FESSENDEN, HOWE, and VAN WINKLE.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the message of the House of Representatives announcing its action on the bill (H. R. No. 192) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1865.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate further insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate thereto, and that it agree to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Messrs. SHERMAN, COWAN, and DAVIS.

A. T. SPENCER and GURDON S. HUBBARD.

Mr. DIXON. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 136) for the relief of A. T. Spencer and Gurdon S. Hubbard. It is a bill merely giving the Postmaster General the right to settle with them on equitable principles. It will take only a moment to consider it.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It instructs the Postmaster General to audit and adjust the account of A. T. Spencer and Gurdon S. Hubbard for carrying the United States mail from Chicago, Illinois, to Mackinac, Sault Ste. Marie, Marquette, Copper Harbor, Eagle Harbor, Eagle River, and Ontonagon, Michigan; La Pointe and Superior, Wisconsin; during the years from 1854 to 1859, inclusive, and allow therefor such amount as to him shall appear just and equitable, not exceeding the amount allowed for the same service to the party who afterwards performed the same under contract.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of the report.

The Secretary read the following report made by Mr. Dixon from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads on the 29th of February last.

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the petition of A. T. Spencer and G. S. Hubbard, of Chicago, Illinois, praying compensation for services performed in carrying the mails on their line of steamers between Chicago and the ports on Lake Superior, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report:

The memorialists represent that they transported, at the request of the postmasters and agents of the Post Office Department, the United States mails, in steamboats, between the city of Chicago, Illinois, and the several ports on Lake Superior, from the year 1854 to 1859, inclusive, during the season of navigation, for which they have not been compensated, and they now pray that Congress will allow them an equitable remuneration for the said service.

They further represent that this service was performed in contemplation of an allowance to be made to them equal to that awarded by the Government for service of a similar character, and the distinct assurance of the agents of the Post Office Department was given them that they would be adequately compensated therefor.

The evidence before the committee of the efficient and faithful character of the service rendered by the memorialists is most clear and satisfactory, and that it was undertaken and performed at the request of the Government officials having charge of the mails.

The committee are satisfied that the steamers belonging to the line owned by the memorialists afforded the most expeditious and reliable means for transporting the mails between the city of Chicago and the several ports on Lake Superior.

The committee, in their report submitted to the Senate on the 27th of February, 1860, were unanimous in the opinion that the memorialists should receive full and adequate compensation for the aforesaid services.

The proof of the performance of the service is fully substantiated by the testimony of Captains J. E. Turner, John Wilson, and B. G. Sloat, confirmed by the affidavits of the postmasters at Chicago, Milwaukee, Mackinac, Eagle River, Marquette, Ontonagon, and La Pointe.

From all the voluminous evidence, and the statements and explicit affidavits of reliable persons, the committee are confident that the petitioners are entitled to relief, and they report a bill for that purpose, and recommend its passage.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to ask one question of the Senator from Connecticut. Was this service performed upon a mail route that had been established by the Government?

Mr. DIXON. I think it was; but I cannot be confident. It is now. Whether it was at that time I cannot say. I do not recollect how that was.

Mr. GRIMES. If it was not, then we are placed in this attitude—

Mr. DIXON. I think it was, from the fact that there were postmasters and officials on the route who requested this to be done.

Mr. GRIMES. That does not follow at all, because they are postmasters; for example, in the towns along the Mississippi river and on portions of that river there are no mail routes; and are we going to settle the principle that a postmaster at one of the principal towns on the Mississippi river, if the Government does not choose to establish a route up and down the river, shall have permission to charter steamboats and for four years in succession put us to the expense of maintaining a mail route along on that line?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I knew something about this case formerly. I passed the Senate during the last Congress and went to the House of Representatives, but I believe was not acted on there. The Government has paid for just such services as this. My impression is that there was no established mail route; I know there was no contract; because if there had been an established mail route the Postmaster General could have made a contract. It was during the summer season when the boats ran up to the Lake Superior country and they carried the mails. They carried them under the authority of the Post Office Department. This bill is not establishing any new principle. We have allowed the Postmaster General to pay precisely such claims, and this bill itself passed the Senate during the last Congress. My impression is that there was no established route there; there certainly was no contract; and that is the reason why it has not been paid by the Post Office Department; but there was no mode of supplying those settlements up there with the mails except by these boats which ran up, I do not know how often, once or twice a week. I do not remember the facts connected with it now; but I know we passed this identical bill at a former session.

Mr. DIXON. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads have acted on this subject several times for the last four years, ever since 1860, when it was first presented, and always unanimously, as long ago as when the Senator from Illinois was a member of the committee. There can be no doubt about the equity of the case. The man ought to have something; how much is for the Postmaster General to decide. We do not decide that question.

Mr. GRIMES. I am aware that there has been a precedent for this since I have been in Congress. There was a bill passed in behalf of a man by the name of Edwards, I think, in Michigan, the only precedent to be found for it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This bill has passed the Senate before.

Mr. GRIMES. Neither that bill nor this ever passed with my consent. I do not recognize the propriety of a postmaster establishing for himself a mail route wherever he chooses; and this was not to supply—for it could not have been to supply—any irregularities on the part of the mail, or any non-performance on the part of any mail contractors, for it seems to be intended to pay for carrying the mail from 1855 to 1859, four whole years. There is no evidence, I take it, from that report that Hubbard and Spencer ever applied to Congress or to the Post Office Department to be paid until 1860, five years after they commenced carrying the mail; but when it was discovered that Mr. Edwards had been so successful in prosecuting his claim—

Mr. CHANDLER. McKnight.

Mr. GRIMES. I thought it was Edwards. When it was found that he had been so successful, then comes in this claim in behalf of Mr. Spencer and Mr. Hubbard. Now, sir, I am told that the mails have been carried without expense to this Government by a line of steamboats between the cities of New York and Norwich. They carry them for the benefit of their people at the ends of their route from whom they receive their patronage; and Spencer & Hubbard, doubtless, when they commenced carrying the mails between Chicago and these different points, had not the most remote idea that they were ever to receive any pay.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The report says they were assured by the Department officers that they should be paid.

Mr. GRIMES. It does not say they were assured by the Postmaster General.

Mr. DIXON. Not by the Postmaster General, but the postmaster at the place assured them.

Mr. GRIMES. Some postmaster established it without having any more authority to establish a route than I have, not a particle. A postmaster under the United States has the authority, if there is a non-performance on the part of a contractor, to hire some man to carry the mail to fill up this performance, the deficiency, which is not done by the contractor; but here is a postmaster who goes and makes a new contract on a new line that had never been established by an act of Congress, so far as the committee tell us, and never had been acted upon by the Postmaster General.

Mr. WILSON. I understood that this bill was to take up but a moment, but as it is likely to give rise to debate, I think it had better go over. I desire to make a report from the committee of conference on the bill equalizing and increasing the pay of the armies of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope that will not be taken up until we dispose of this bill. Nobody wants to discuss it, and I think we can have a vote upon it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We met here this evening to go on and finish the tariff bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not suppose anybody wants to say a word more on this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. A good many words have already been said, and it is likely to lead to more.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not suppose anybody else wants to say anything about it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know. I suppose the Senator does.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not. I merely rose to say that this service was authorized by the agency of the Post Office Department. I do not wish to say anything further.

Mr. DIXON. I only wish to state that these claimants made their application in 1860, and the service closed in 1859; there was only one year's delay in the presentation of the claim.

Mr. GRIMES. But they did not present it until five years after the service had commenced.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think a bill of this kind ought to be passed to-night with such a difference of views in regard to it. I therefore move that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to that motion?

Mr. DIXON. I object. I desire to have this bill acted upon now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair will put the question on the motion to postpone the bill until to-morrow.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that we proceed to the consideration of the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Senator from Maine to allow me to present and have acted upon to-night a conference report. It will take but a moment, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no objection, if it does not displace the tariff bill.

Mr. WILSON. If it takes any time I will give way.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well.

PAY OF COLORED TROOPS.

Mr. WILSON, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 145) to equalize the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (S. No. 145) entitled "An act to equalize the pay of soldiers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference upon the proposed Senate amendments to the House amendments to said bill, report as follows:

1. In the fourth and fifth lines of the first Senate amendment strike out the words "regular Army and volunteer and drafted forces in the," and insert the word "military" in lieu thereof.

2. After the word "quartermasters," in the seventh line of said amendment, strike out all down to and including the word "dollars" in the ninth line of said Senate amendment, and insert the following in lieu thereof: "and commissary sergeants of cavalry, artillery, and infantry, twenty-two dollars."

3. After the word "privates," in the fourteenth line of said first Senate amendment, strike out all down to and including the word "corps" in the sixteenth line of said amendment, and insert the following in lieu thereof: "of engineers and ordnance of the first class, eighteen dollars; and of the second class."

4. After the word "dollars," in the twenty-second line of said first Senate amendment, strike out all of said amendment down to the word "sixteen" in the twenty-fourth line, and insert in lieu thereof, "leaders of brigade and regimental bands, seventy-five dollars; musicians." And that the House of Representatives agree to the said Senate amendments with the foregoing amendments.

5. That the Senate recede from its second amendment, to wit, the insertion of section three.

6. That the House of Representatives agree to the third amendment of the Senate, to wit, the insertion of section four.

7. That the Senate recede from its fourth amendment, to wit, the insertion of section five.

8. In the second line of the sixth section of the Senate amendment strike out all of said section after the words "sergeant major" and insert the following in lieu thereof: "who shall be paid thirty-six dollars per month, and one quartermaster sergeant who shall also be commissary sergeant, who shall be paid twenty-two dollars per month." And that the House of Representatives do agree to said amendment of the Senate as amended.

9. That the House of Representatives do agree to the sixth Senate amendment, to wit, the insertion of section seven.

10. Strike out the fourth, fifth, and all of the sixth line down to the word "and" in the seventh Senate amendment, and insert the following in lieu thereof: "the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier general and an Assistant Judge Advocate General with the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel of cavalry."

11. After the word "advocate," in the seventh line of said seventh Senate amendment, insert the word "General." And that the House of Representatives do agree to said Senate amendment as amended.

12. That the House of Representatives do agree to the eighth Senate amendment, to wit, the insertion of section nine.

13. That the House of Representatives do agree to the ninth Senate amendment, to wit, the insertion of section ten.

14. That the House of Representatives agree to the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth of said Senate amendments.

HENRY WILSON,

J. W. NESMITH,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,

F. W. KELLOGG,

JAMES S. ROLLINS,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

TARIFF BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 494) to increase duties on imports, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be on concurring in the Senate with the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. Does any Senator desire a separate vote on any of the amendments?

Mr. RAMSEY. I want a separate vote on the amendment imposing a duty of 70 cents on railroad iron.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be excepted.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is an amendment in regard to the duty on tea which I should like to have excepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be excepted.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Finance to a difference which exists in the sixth section of this bill as compared with the corresponding section of the bill of 1861. In the forty-eighth line of the sixth section of this bill I find this proviso:

Provided, That upon all plain woven cotton goods, included or not included in the foregoing schedules, &c.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1864.

NEW SERIES, No. 491.

In the bill of 1861 the words "included or" are left out; so that the provision reads:

"That upon all plain woven cotton goods not included in the foregoing schedules, and upon cotton goods of every description, the value of which shall exceed 16 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem."

I do not know whether I shall be able to make myself understood; but the high price of cotton to-day over what it was in 1861 has the effect of bringing all the goods named in this section before the proviso under the duty of 35 per cent., for the reason that all of these goods that are mentioned cost more than 16 cents per yard. That clause was intended to meet a higher class of goods. The items specified were intended to meet a class of goods manufactured in this country. The proviso was intended to meet a higher class of goods that are imported. None of the goods enumerated in this first portion of the fourteenth section of the old bill would amount to 16 cents. Then the Committee of Ways and Means in the other House have left out an additional proviso, to be found in the act of 1861, relative to goods containing more than two hundred picks to the square inch, counting the thread and warp, so that goods containing two hundred and twenty-five might be put in at a less duty than the two hundred picks. I do not know why they left it out. It must have been by some inadvertence. It is in these words:

"And provided further, That no cotton goods having more than two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, shall be admitted to a less rate of duty than is provided for goods which are of that number of threads."

It is very plain that if this provision is not put into this bill as it was in the old one, cloths of a higher kind and intended to be at a higher rate will be put in at a less rate than that enumerated in this new bill. I therefore desire, if I have been able to make myself understood, if there is no objection to it, simply to repeat the clause which is in the old bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the Senator will withhold his amendment for a short time until we get through with the amendments that were adopted in committee. After that the Senator will be at liberty to move his amendment.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does any Senator wish a separate vote on any other amendment?

Mr. TEN EYCK. I wish to except the amendment in section eighteen in relation to the duty of 10 per cent. on raw silk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be excepted.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to except the amendment of the committee in the third section, page 12, in regard to the duty on knives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be excepted.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to except the amendment of the committee on page 23 in relation to spool thread.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be excepted. The question will now be taken on concurring in all the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The remaining amendments were concurred in. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now will be on concurring in the first excepted amendment made in committee.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was in section one, line ten, after the word "twenty" to strike out the word "five," and after the word "pound" to insert "and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem;" so that the clause will read:

First. On teas of all kinds 20 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORGAN. Since this amendment was acted upon yesterday, there has been a communication made to the Senate on the subject, a memorial signed by all the importers of tea in the city of New York, recommending a specific duty. I have hardly had time to examine the memorial, but I believe the members of the Finance Committee have seen it.

Mr. President, it may be well enough for us to look at our legislation in respect to this article of tea. There was a duty of 20 cents a pound on all teas when Congress came together at this session, which duty has existed since 1862. In the latter part of April a joint resolution was passed adding 50 per cent. to the duties on imports. That made the duties on teas 30 cents. That joint resolution was passed pretty suddenly, as Senators all recollect. The Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives in framing this tariff bill reported a duty of 5 cents additional to the former duty on tea, making a duty of 25 cents; and that has been adopted by the House of Representatives. When the bill came to this body, the Committee on Finance reported a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem, making a duty perhaps of 3½ cents, or less than 4 cents. We have therefore in this short session four rates of duty on teas; 20 cents, 30 cents, then back to 25 cents, and now perhaps 23½ cents.

It is very desirable to have our legislation in regard to the duties on imports permanent, stable, that importers may know what to depend upon. They were not disposed to complain of the passage of the joint resolution increasing the duties, provided those were the duties that Congress intended to impose permanently. If the necessities of the Government required that the duty should be 30 cents a pound, there would be no complaint from the importers or others; but what they do complain of is this change of the duty from 20 to 30 cents and then back to 25 and now to 23 cents. I am not disposed to criticise the action of the committee, for I believe they have labored upon this bill to get it right. I know that the Finance Committee were opposed to this large increase of the duties under that joint resolution. They recommended an increased duty of 33½ per cent. Even that would have been more than the duties actually are in the bill upon which we are passing to-day. It seems to me, in view of all that has taken place, we had better look to a little more permanency and stability in our legislation. I think we had better support the specific duty. I am, therefore, in favor of the bill as it passed the House of Representatives, and not in favor of the amendment made to it by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JOHNSON. I concur in the view taken by the honorable member from New York. The committee propose to strike out a portion of the specific tax proposed by the House of Representatives, and to insert in addition to what they leave of the specific tax an ad valorem tax of 10 per cent. I think the Senators from the agricultural States, and particularly the western States, are especially interested in this question, for this reason: in point of fact nearly all the tea that is drunk in those States is green tea, which is not the cheaper kind. The cheaper kind is drunk principally in the Atlantic States. From some cause or other we prefer what are called the black teas, and in point of price they are not estimated as high as the green teas. A specific tax of 20 per cent. on all teas will embrace the green as well as the black.

The argument upon the other side is that perhaps the lower-priced tea would not bear a specific tax of 25 cents, and that the effect would be, even if it could bear it, to throw the additional 5 cents specific upon the consumer; but if the consumer for the most part, as is the fact, is among those who are able to bear it, and the consumers who are comparatively poor are among those who, from taste or habit or from any other cause, use the higher-priced teas, the effect will be that if you reduce the tax from 25 to 20 cents specific, and add an ad valorem tax of 10 per cent. you will be increasing just to the amount of 10 per cent. the price of the teas that are drunk in the western States. In the Atlantic States—I believe it is almost universally true; certainly it is, so far as I am advised—nearly every gentleman and his family prefer what are called the black teas, particularly the English breakfast tea, which is a tea comparatively cheap; and of course he can pay, and will pay without the slightest reluctance or dissatisfaction, an additional tax of 5 per cent.

But there is another reason, as I stated yesterday, and it is not necessary to press it. It is exceedingly difficult to enforce properly an ad valorem tax upon tea. Such is the nature of the article, such are the elements which enter into its actual cost in the hands of the importer, that it is very difficult for him to ascertain exactly what that cost should be, and of course it will be more difficult upon the part of the appraiser. If he disregards the invoice, and the appraiser is not obliged to be regulated by the invoice, and will not be, he may subject an importer who has been guilty of no fraud or no purpose to evade the revenue to the additional penalties which are imposed upon him whose invoice is greater than 10 per cent. upon its nominal amount.

I believe, and that is also an additional reason with me for voting against the amendment proposed by the committee, that a specific tax of 25 cents on teas will raise more revenue than a specific tax of 20 cents and an ad valorem tax of 10 per cent. For these reasons I hope that the amendment proposed by the committee will not prevail.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Dixon, Do-little, Fessenden, Foot, Howe, Ramsey, Sprague, Van Winkle, and Wiley—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Powell, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Conness, Cowan,
Davis, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, McDougall, Morrill,
Nesmith, Richardson, Riddle, Wilkinson, and Wright—15.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was in section three, line twenty-eight, to strike out "80" and insert "70;" so that the clause will read:

On all iron imported in bars for railroads and inclined planes, made to patterns and fitted to be laid down on such roads or planes without further manufacture, 70 cents per one hundred pounds.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "70" and inserting "60." I will remark, Mr. President, that in the State of Minnesota, speaking for a part of the Northwest, the country west of Lake Michigan and west of the Mississippi river, we have now about eight hundred miles of road under contract in lines of two and three hundred miles each. All of these roads will have to be abandoned unless there is some modification of the tax in this bill. I understand that iron in large quantities has been contracted for in England, which the parties have ordered to be resold, as it will be impossible for them at the present rates of iron in that distant State to continue the work. Iron cannot possibly be laid down in Minnesota under $140 a ton. In addition to that, ordinary labor in that country is $2 a day. Unless some relief of this kind is extended to us all these improvements will have to be abandoned. I trust, therefore, that the Senate will concur with me, and consent to this reduction of the tax on railroad iron.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. President, when this subject was under consideration in Committee of the Whole, something was said, and I believe I said something myself, in reference to this measure as a relief to the railroads; but more mature reflection upon it has convinced me that this amendment ought to be made as a question of revenue, to say nothing of the question as pertaining to the interests of the roads. That the present manufacturing establishments in this country can do anything toward supplying the demand for railroad iron, I believe no one will pretend. We have in the loyal States twenty-five thousand miles of railroad in operation, and in the disloyal States they have about twelve thousand. The average existence of a rail is ten years. In other words, 10 per cent. of the track of every road must be repaired every year. It takes one hundred tons to the mile. Senators can see at once what an immense amount of railroad iron it takes to supply the wear and tear of our roads that are already made, to say nothing of those that we contemplate constructing. There are at least thirty-five or thirty-eight thousand miles of railroad in this country, 10 per cent. of which must be replaced with new iron every year, at the rate of one hundred tons a mile. In addition to that there are enterprises on hand, parties are constructing roads that will take every ton of iron that can be made by our American manufacturers for a year.

Since this matter was before the Senate yesterday I have received some letters from gentlemen who know much more about it than I do, and who represent to me that they will have to entirely suspend importing iron if this tariff of 70 cents per hundred pounds prevails. I allude to it at this time simply as a question of revenue, and not at all as a question of railroad building. I hold in my hand a letter from one of the largest manufacturers in New York, J. M. Jessup & Co. They say to me:

"We beg leave to state that we represent and have purchased about twenty thousand tons of railroad iron in England for the use of certain railroads in Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Vermont, and California. None of this iron was bought for resale, but solely for building and repairing railroads in the States above mentioned. It is now coming forward, and will be so increased in cost at this proposed rate of duty that we shall have to suspend the completion of these roads and the repairing of them altogether."

I have also received a letter from E. B. Littlefield & Co., one of the largest firms in this country engaged in buying and laying down railroad iron. These men are not speculators. They are men who are buying railroad iron for a specific purpose. They state in this letter that they have bought in England enough railroad iron for railroads in Minnesota to lay down two hundred and twenty miles, which they will be obliged to stop and not bring to this country at all on account of this prospective tariff.

Let it be understood here that the tariff which we had last year and up to this time has been $13 50 per ton in gold; that is at the rate of 60 cents per one hundred pounds. That amounts to $25 in our currency. It depends of course upon the price of gold, but as gold has averaged for the last month it is about $25 a ton. As I have said, it takes about a hundred tons to the mile, to say nothing of the chairs and spikes, which make about another thousand dollars a mile; so that if this tariff prevails we have got to pay in currency at least $3,000 a mile to the Government as duty on every mile that we lay down. The effect of that will be to suspend the business; you cannot lay down a mile of new road, and the old roads will be repaired only from necessity.

Let me call the attention of the Senate for one moment to the fact that there are twelve thousand miles of railroad in the States in rebellion that are almost entirely used up. In almost that whole country the railroads will have to be rebuilt. When the rebellion shall be suppressed and peace restored, one of the first and earliest things to be done will be to repair the waste places, to repair the railroads, get up means of communication; and it will create such a demand for railroad iron that the manufacturers of this country will be utterly unable to supply that demand at any price, and it will compel the importation of railroad iron, or else an entire suspension of the work of rebuilding these roads.

Then again we have in some legislation of Congress required a forfeiture of immense enterprises if railroads are not constructed within a given time. We have in fact given them but a few years, and provided for the forfeiture of the whole franchise if the roads are not built within that time; and yet this proposed tax will be an embargo upon the building of those roads. Men who have money will not invest it in railroad iron at these prices. While the proposed tax is perfectly ruinous as a question of revenue it is equally destructive as a question of encouragement to railroad building. Sir, I desire, especially at this time, that every encouragement and every facility consistent with the revenue of the country should be given to enterprises of this character. There would be some excuse for putting on this large tariff if a proper incidental protection to our own manufacturing establishments needed it.

We have got our mountains full of iron ore, as a Senator has said. There is no doubt about that. We have other mountains that are full of gold; but we have not the men to dig it; we cannot manufacture it. We might make all our silk fabrics in this country if we only had the labor; we have got the climate. We might produce all the wool that we needed if we only had the men to engage in wool-growing; but we have not got them, and we import more than we raise. It is so with our iron; and while we do import it, while it is impossible for our manufacturers to supply it, I beg Senators to consider what kind of a tariff will be sufficiently remunerative to the Government and at the same time be a sufficient encouragement for men to build and repair roads. At the present time men who have undertaken to build roads cannot contract for a ton of iron at any American manufactory to be delivered in a year. There is not an American manufacturing establishment in this country that can deliver a ton of iron on a new contract in a year. You cannot get a locomotive in a year from any new contract. It is entirely out of the question for the manufacturing establishments in this country to supply the demand for railroad iron. It is a question, therefore, either of not doing it at all or else reducing the duty on railroad iron so that men will feel encouraged to import.

I know that the Committee on Finance, and especially the chairman of that committee, look at it only as a question of revenue. The great question with them is, what tariff will produce the most money? In my opinion, as a mere question of revenue, a tariff of 60 cents will so encourage the importation, will so stimulate the building, completing, and repairing of roads that you will get more money into the Treasury, and at the same time afford incidental benefit to the whole country, leading to the building up of these waste places and the repairing of old roads, and giving us general prosperity and success everywhere. I consider this one of the most important measures that has been before Congress. I hope the amendment moved by the Senator from Minnesota to make this duty 60 cents per hundred pounds will prevail. I believe the interests of the country demand it. I believe that, as a mere question of revenue, it ought to be adopted; and I know it will afford encouragement to those who have railroads to construct.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am satisfied, unless we mean to have a perfect irreconcilable difference of opinion with the House of Representatives, on which we will imperil the whole bill, we cannot leave railroad iron alone to stand as it did under the old tariff. It was only raised, as I stated before, about in conformity with the new duties that we imposed in the internal revenue bill; but notwithstanding that, we have, in consideration rather of the pressure of railroad interests, reduced it one half. I think it is too much to ask that merely for the benefit of railroad companies and their interest in it we should leave it entirely as it stood before.

Mr. RAMSEY. It is not for the benefit of the railroad companies; it is for the people.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The people are interested in having railroads built, but, as I stated the other day, they are much more interested in carrying on the war. That is a larger interest, a more general one, and a more important one in every sense of the word.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not see anything that is "irreconcilable" about the matter if this amendment to the amendment should be adopted. It will leave the whole question open in the hands of a committee of conference.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The committee of conference will have the question just as much before them by the amendment proposed by the committee as by the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. POMEROY. They would have it in hand just the same, but the lowest duty to be considered would be a duty of 70 cents; but if the Senate put it at 60 cents then our committee will have an opportunity to compromise with the House committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is opportunity enough, I suppose, either way. I think as much has been done in the way of reducing this duty as ought to be asked. This adding of 10 per cent, ad valorem, the difference between 60 and 70 cents, we are told, will prevent importation and stop railroad enterprises. In my judgment, that is all idle talk. Interests of that sort will not be given up simply on account of this addition to the duties under the circumstances. There is no danger of their stopping. It will cost them more money, but not by any means so much as the Senator from Kansas supposes. As to the revenue to be derived from it, my idea is that it will be precisely the difference between a tax of 60 and 70 cents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to inquire what the precise question is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on striking out "70" and inserting "60."

Mr. COWAN. I hope the reduction proposed by this amendment will not be made. I do not see any reason why there should be a discrimination against this particular product more than any other. It was universally agreed that this tariff bill was to be compensatory; that it was to compensate against the additional internal revenue levied upon the several articles embraced in it.

Mr. SUMNER. Made necessary by that.

Mr. COWAN. Certainly; that is the theory. I trust the Senate will not go so far as to leave it without that protection which it deserves, certainly, as one of the great interests of the country.

I wish to correct one thing that the Senator from Kansas has stated. There are 60 pounds of railroad iron to the yard, and there are 1,752 yards in the mile; 120 pounds cover a yard; and it is not very difficult to make the calculation. It will not take 100 tons of that heavy rail to lay down a mile of road.

Again he says it is utterly impossible to procure iron in this country; that you cannot contract for it at the American manufactories. I think there are manufacturers who would very gladly take heavy contracts.

I trust, sir, that this interest will be treated as other interests are.

Mr. HARLAN. What is the internal tax levied on all railroad iron by the bill as it passed the Senate?

Mr. COWAN. Three dollars per ton.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Dixon, Doolittle, Hale, Harlan, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Trumbull—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harris, Morgan, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wilson—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Conness, Davis, Grimes, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howe, Morrill, Nesmith, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—13.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to appeal to the Senate to allow me to offer two or three amendments. I was not present when the bill was reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole, and I hope the Senate will allow me to offer them now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive them.

Mr. SHERMAN: The first amendment that I shall propose is on page 42, section twenty, line four, after the word "shall" to insert the words "not be deemed to have taken effect until after the 30th day of April, 1864, and shall." I will explain to the Senate that the only effect of this amendment is to delay the taking effect of the joint resolution increasing the duties 50 per cent. one day. It was approved by the President on the evening of the 29th of April. They did not receive notice of it until one o'clock the next day at New York, and at other ports along during the day. Upon consultation it was deemed best to except that day from the operation of the act. That will be the effect of this amendment if adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then it applies the additional duty to all goods that were imported on the 30th.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir, not on the 30th; after the 30th; so that the law really takes effect on the 2d of May.

Mr. JOHNSON. How does that differ from the bill as it stands?

Mr. SHERMAN. By the bill as it stands it takes effect on the evening of the 29th. It was approved April 29, 1864. This section, as it now stands, only terminates the operation of that resolution on the 30th of June. The amendment now offered proposes to fix the time when it shall commence operation.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask to have the amendment, and the section as it will read if amended, reported from the desk.

The Secretary read the amendment, in section twenty, line four, after the word "shall," to insert the words "not be deemed to have taken effect until after the 30th day of April, 1864, and shall;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That the joint resolution "to increase temporarily the duties on imports," approved April 29, 1864, shall not be deemed to have taken effect until after the 30th day of April, 1864, and shall be and remain in force until and including the 30th day of June, 1864.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Why say "until after the 30th?" I thought the dispute was about its taking effect on the 29th.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir. I will again repeat the facts. The resolution was approved by the President on the evening of the 29th, the legal effect of which was that it would take effect on that day. Notice was not given. It was not known in the custom-house in New York until half past one o'clock on the 30th. In the mean time many merchants were taking out their goods and paying their duties, and the question occurred whether it should be enforced on the 30th of April.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let me inquire of the Senator if it was not as to whether it should be enforced on the 29th?

Mr. SHERMAN. That question was raised also; and as they could not divide a day they demanded the additional duties of the persons who had paid in duties on the 29th, but I believe that that demand was not really enforced, because the duties had been paid, and these persons disputed the time when the law took effect, and to have recovered those duties would have required suits. Suits were not commenced. On the 30th the merchants took out their goods and continued to pay the old duties until one o'clock, when the collector stopped them and demanded the increased duties, and then demanded the increased duties on all who had paid that day and the day before. As it was likely to create litigation and trouble, and cause great injustice, as the Senate can readily see, the matter has been suspended from that time to this. A joint resolution was passed by the House of Representatives fixing the time when the law shall take effect, but we have not acted upon it here on account of the dispute as to bonded goods. It was deemed best, therefore, to insert this provision here.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator will permit me to ask, what is the difference in this particular between that joint resolution and his amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. None whatever. The resolution I reported the other day excluded the 30th and this excludes the 30th.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose most of the duties are paid in the city of New York; but if the principle is to be adopted which this amendment establishes I do not know why it should not be extended to San Francisco and to all the cities of the Union where any duties are to be collected, that until they were notified that this law had passed they were only to pay according to the law as it stood before the passage of this joint resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator that they had the same notice in San Francisco that they had in New York. On the 30th a telegraphic dispatch could be and was sent, I think, to every port in the United States, with the exception of New Orleans.

Mr. BROWN. I will state to the Senator that there is a case in point in regard to New Orleans.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but we leave that to be provided for by future legislation. At any rate, we could not provide for it now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But is that principle to be established? Is that to be the operation of laws? Are they to take effect when the parties to be operated upon by them receive notice of their passage? If so, a law of Congress will take effect one day in San Francisco and another day in Washington, one day in New York and another day in St. Louis. Many of the laws of Congress are not telegraphed immediately. I question very much whether the passage of this law was known in San Francisco at the same hour it was in New York; probably not until the next day. I am not informed about that. The Senator from Ohio speaks as if he knew that they were informed when they were paying duties in San Francisco on the 30th day of April. They may have paid duties on the 1st or 2d day of May in San Francisco under the old law.

Mr. JOHNSON. They did.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They are to pay according to this new resolution whether they knew it or not. It seems to me a proposition based upon the time of receiving notice of the law in the city of New York is establishing a very bad precedent.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think you are mistaken as to the effect of this amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understand the effect of this amendment to be that the law is not to take effect until after the 30th of April.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then there is no increase of duty until after the 30th.

Mr. TRUMBULL. True; but what is the reason for the passage of this law that it shall not take effect until after the 30th of April? The avowed reason and the only reason is that parties in the city of New York who paid duties on the 30th day of April did not know of the passage of that joint resolution. If that be a good reason in the city of New York it is a good reason in San Francisco, in the city of New Orleans, or in any other city in the Union if when they paid their duties they did not know of the passage of that joint resolution. We thereby establish a principle that parties are not to be bound by a law until they know of its existence. It would render the time when laws were to go into effect entirely uncertain. I suppose most of the duties are paid in the city of New York.

Mr. JOHNSON. I misunderstood the Senator. The Senator, I suppose, desires that the resolution temporarily increasing the duties on imports should go into effect on the 29th, and then the additional duties would be imposed everywhere upon parties whether they had a knowledge of its passage or not.

There were two questions about which there was a difference between the Secretary of the Treasury and the importers under that resolution. The first was whether it embraced goods in bond, which is not before us now, and the other was at what time it became a law. The Secretary of the Treasury supposed, or those who acted there under his supposed order thought, it went into effect on the 29th, that being the day upon which in fact it was approved by the President, and as there is no fraction of a day counted it included the whole of the day. The importers thought, and perhaps they had legal ground for so thinking, that in a case of this description fractions of a day can be counted, and that it would not go into effect therefore until it was actually approved by the President, and as the President did not approve it on the 29th until after the business hours at the custom-house had passed by, the importer had a right to pay under the old tariff. Then the House of Representatives have passed a resolution, and in that respect the amendment of my friend from Ohio conforms to the view taken by the House, that under all the circumstances it ought not to be considered as taking effect until after the 30th.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The 1st day of May.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is the 1st day of May; but the 30th falling on Saturday, it would be the 2d of May. Now, so far as notice is concerned, if notice is deemed to be necessary, as the House think it is, and as under all the circumstances it seems to me to be, as you must fix some time within which you are to presume that notice was given, if you make the bill operative only on the 2d of May there will be plenty of time in San Francisco to have heard of it. They would have heard of it by the telegram of the 29th. It takes only a few hours generally to send a dispatch from here to San Francisco. In San Francisco, if the lines are in order, and they generally are in order, they have the news of the morning here in their evening papers and always have them in the papers of the ensuing morning.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator perhaps may not be aware that they get the dispatch in California before it starts from New York. If the lines are all up, and you send a dispatch from New York, they get it, by their time in California, four hours before it starts from New York.

Mr. JOHNSON. They get it during the day.

Mr. POMEROY. They get it, by their time, before it is sent. In my own State, when I am at home, I get a telegraphic dispatch an hour and a half before it leaves New York; that is to say, an hour and a half earlier by our time than it is in New York.

Mr. JOHNSON. You are always ahead of us in everything.

Mr. POMEROY. These dispatches to San Francisco get there, by their time, before they start from New York.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know that; but this particular dispatch could not be sent from here until the bill was passed and approved, and the bill was not passed and approved until the evening of the 29th; so that if it was sent on at once they got it on the 30th; there is no doubt about that.

Now there are some reasons, it seems to me, to show that it is but just that the view taken by the House of Representatives and the view taken by my friend from Ohio is a proper one. The general practice of the Government has been—it has been uniform with the exception of the tariff act to which the chairman of the committee referred the other day, and which was not altogether an exception, because the operation of that act was postponed some two weeks, I think, from the date of its passage; but the general rule has been—with the United States and with other commercial countries not to change the tariff so as to affect any pending order. We are about to change that policy. Perhaps the importers had no right to suppose that that policy would be changed at once, and they therefore were under the impression that they were to pay only the duties which were enforced on the 29th and 30th, and they have acted in good faith.

Mr. SHERMAN. This matter has already consumed a good deal of time; but I will repeat the facts, so that Senators may decide for themselves.

This joint resolution was approved at seven o'clock on the evening of the 29th of April. It was not known in New York until the next morning, and not officially proclaimed in the custom-house or acted upon until one o'clock on the 30th. The Secretary of the Treasury held the law to have taken effect on the 29th, and at one o'clock on the 30th he telegraphed the collector to insist on the payment of the increased rate of duties on all the goods that had been taken out of the warehouses the day before and also on the 30th. Upon that a dispute arose. These merchants contended that as they had paid their duties they were entitled to hold their goods free of any further charge.

Then the question arose as to what time on the 30th the law should take effect, the Secretary insisting that it should apply to the whole of that day, although the collector had not official notice of it until one o'clock, and some goods had been taken out before that time, and other merchants came in and insisted that they should have their goods also at the old rates. As a matter of course the Committee on Finance were desirous of securing the money in the Treasury; but we thought it was very hard indeed to enforce these increased duties on the 29th before the actual approval of the law.

Then the question arose, ought they not to be enforced for the whole of Saturday the 30th? As some merchants had got their goods out on that day before it was known, we thought on the whole it was better to except the 30th also from the operation of the law, and have so reported. If the Senate should think that the merchants ought to pay the increased duties on Saturday the 30th, I have no objection; I shall be very glad to retain the money; but it does seem to me it would be more just, equitable, and proper to allow them the whole of the 30th to pay the old rate of duties.

These are the facts. Every Senator can judge for himself and decide according to his sense of equity. I will say to the Senate there is no legal question involved. There is no doubt that by law the resolution was in force on the 30th of April. The only question is, will you enforce it on that day?

Mr. HOWARD. I wish the Senator from Ohio would inform us, if he can do so, what amount of duties we shall probably remit by giving effect to the law only on the 30th.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no information whatever as to the amount on the 30th.

Mr. HOWARD. I have understood that it would be a very considerable amount.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose as there was great hurry at that time to avoid the passage of the joint resolution, it would be probably pretty large, but I have no information on that subject.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose there is very little use to try and contend against the report of the Finance Committee on this subject. I believe they have everything pretty much their own way. It is very clear, I think, from the statement made by the Senator from Ohio, that it would be unjust to charge this increased duty on goods that were taken out or entered at the custom-house on the 29th; but because the resolution was not approved on that day, and it would be unjust to charge the increased duties for that day before the resolution was approved by the President, is that any reason why we should not charge the duty on the 30th? That is the question. I apprehend no one would object to exempting from this increased duty the goods upon which duties were paid on the 29th, because in fact the resolution was not approved during the business hours of the 29th, but how that should furnish a reason for not collecting the duties on the 30th I cannot conceive, any more than on the 1st of May, or any more than on the 30th of May. It is competent, I suppose, for Congress to release all the goods from this additional duty which have been entered since the 29th day of April last, but I can see no reason for this exemption on the 30th more than on any other day.

What is the fact about it? The fact about it is they knew and understood perfectly well in the city of New York that these duties were to be increased. They knew all about it on the morning of the 30th; the merchants understood it in New York, and were rushing their goods through the custom-house as rapidly as possible; but the custom-house itself did not officially promulgate it until one o'clock on that day. The Senator from Ohio knows perfectly well that they knew all over New York that this joint resolution was a law before one o'clock. The merchants understood it; but it was not officially promulgated. Well, sir, I do not suppose it would have been officially promulgated in half the nation up to this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I beg leave to inform the Senator that we did not know it ourselves; I did not know it until it was formally proclaimed after twelve o'clock on Saturday. It is true the President signed it the previous evening, but the fact that it had received his signature was not promulgated here in the Senate until after twelve o'clock on Saturday.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Perhaps Senators did not know it, but the merchants in New York understood it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I doubt very much whether they watched the President's signature; perhaps they did.

Mr. TRUMBULL. My understanding was, from the statement which the Senator made, that they knew it.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I said the actual fact of the approval occurred at seven o'clock. The House committee sent to the President to ascertain the time when he approved the joint resolution, and he said "seven o'clock in the evening;" but it was not, as the Senator must know, officially promulgated to the Senate here until the next day at twelve o'clock. We do not know anything about the time of the approval of acts by the President until they are sent here, and yet they take effect from the moment of their approval. In my opinion, this is a simple act of equity appealing to the sense of the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. I have a memorandum of the dates which I should like to read to the Senate. The resolution was approved and became a law on the evening of the 29th of April, at about seven o'clock. It was not made known in New York and Boston until April 30, at thirty minutes past one o'clock p. m. At the port of Salem in Massachusetts—which, as the Senator from Illinois knows, is a considerable importing place—it was not known until the evening of Monday, May 2. On these several days, at these several ports, and probably at others, goods were entered and duties paid under the tariff act of July, 1862; and the first knowledge the importers had (many of whom had sold goods to arrive) of the increased duties, was by notice from the collectors to come in and pay the additional 50 per cent.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The statement read by the Senator from Massachusetts shows the impropriety of adopting this amendment, because in Salem they did not find it out until the evening of the 2d day of May.

Mr. SUMNER. No; I said until the evening of the 30th.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir; you did not read it so; read that portion of it again, if you please.

Mr. SUMNER. "It was not made known in New York and Boston until April 30, at thirty minutes past one o'clock." That was on Saturday.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Go on.

Mr. SUMNER. "At the port of Salem, in Massachusetts, it was not known until the evening of Monday, May 2."

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then if this amendment is adopted, what is the effect of it? The Senator's constituents in Salem, Massachusetts, knew nothing of this joint resolution, and paid their duties on Monday under the old law, and now he is going to compel them to pay over again; but he is going to release the merchants in New York, who paid under the same circumstances, from paying anything except what was required by law prior to the passage of this joint resolution. That is the effect of the legislation. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts for reading the dates; it shows the absurdity of the legislation. I have no doubt it will be found that there are numerous cases all over the United States, not only in Salem, but at St. Louis and Chicago and San Francisco and other places, where duties were paid on Monday without any knowledge of the passage of this joint resolution. I do not know how you can refuse with the information we have now got, and I should think the Senator would move to amend his resolution so as to allow the duties which were paid in Salem on the 2d day of May to be paid under the old law. It seems to me he is bound to do it, to act equitably and consistently.

But, sir, I do not suppose that I shall be able by anything I can say to change the views of the Senate. I will move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "after," so that the joint resolution will not take effect until the 30th of April. I think the increased duties ought not to be required on the 29th, because the resolution was not approved during the business hours of that day.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then the resolution will include the whole of the 30th?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, Mr. President, in point of fact most of those goods, in New York particularly, and the large importing places, were actually sold after the duties were paid, and the prices charged to the purchaser by the vendor were regulated by the fact that the goods were supposed to be liable to the duty imposed by the existing act.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Maryland will observe that the same thing existed on the 2d day of May.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know, but you must fix some time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the law is to go into effect when the notice reaches the port, then make it so; but do not pass a law for the protection of importers in the city of New York, and under precisely the same circumstances deny it in Salem, Massachusetts.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The facts about this matter are very simple. I do not know how it was in Salem. They are fifteen miles from Boston, with a railroad running half a dozen times a day, and a telegraphic communication besides; and if it was known at Boston at one o'clock on Saturday that this joint resolution had become a law, and they did not know it at Salem, fifteen miles off, until Monday night, they ought to pay the duties. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. They ought to pay for their stupidity. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. President, the facts are simply these: the joint resolution was signed by the President at seven o'clock on Friday evening. Nothing was known about it, and no notice came into the Senate until after twelve o'clock on Saturday, so far as we were concerned. It was not telegraphed to New York or known in New York until about one o'clock on Saturday. In the mean time the merchants had been paying the old duties, and taking out their goods and selling them, when, lo and behold, under the instructions he received by telegraph—I do not dispute their propriety—the collector of New York said to them, "You who have entered your goods not only to-day but all day yesterday must pay me the amount of duties which you should have paid if it had been known even during the day before the resolution was signed at all, and before you knew anything about it." They had taken them out, paid the duties, sold the goods, and then were called upon to pay the advance duty on a thing they did not know anything about, and in the mean time here was the fact about it.

The Secretary of the Treasury, sharp as he is to get every dollar that it is possible to get, recognizes at once the propriety and justice of declaring that this act shall not go into effect until after the 30th of April under the circumstances, and after the 30th of April carries it over until the business hours of Monday, the 2d of May. That is time enough, unquestionably, to reach every part of this country where there are telegraphic communications; and that is all that I think in justice ought to be done. If we find hereafter that, owing to any accident, there has been any particular injustice anywhere, we can remedy it by legislation; but this is as much as can safely be done now, and this we recommend. It is recommended by the committees of both Houses and by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall support the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, and for this reason: this joint resolution having been previously passed by the House of Representatives, was passed by the Senate on the 28th of April, just before the adjournment. Of course it was known all over the country that the bill had passed both Houses, but it was not known that it had been approved by the President. In New York—I can answer for New York, and I presume it was so elsewhere—the merchants applied to the collector on the 29th and on the 30th to know whether they were to pay the new duties or the old ones, and the collector told them he could take none but the old duties; he knew of none other. That was on the morning of the 30th. He did not know that the resolution had been approved by the President. The merchants thereupon went on and paid their duties up to one o'clock or half past one o'clock on that day. Certainly as far as they paid their duties they ought to be exempted, and it is very clear we ought not to divide a day. I shall therefore vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HOWE. This matter has been so much discussed that it is utterly impossible that anything new can be said about it. I am not going to attempt to say a new thing; but I want to repeat one thing that I said before to the Senate.

I recognize as much as any one the propriety of the principle just asserted by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that these men who, in ignorance of this law, in the city of New York, entered their goods and paid their duties on the morning of the 29th, without notice of the passage of this resolution, ought to have them remitted. They had settled with the Government; they had taken possession of their goods; many of them had sold them. But I cannot see why the same rule does not apply to merchants in every other port who had in fact acted in ignorance of this law, whether they did it on the 29th or 30th of April or the 1st or 2d day of the succeeding month, or any other. The Government enacted this law; the Government appoints these collectors; the Government ought to advise the collectors of the state of the law and of what duties they should collect on these goods; and therefore, if we concede the propriety of remitting these duties in New York, we should remit them everywhere.

But this proposition as it now stands does not propose to remit the duties to all importers who had settled up in ignorance of the passage of this resolution, but, on the contrary, it proposes to remit duties to some importers who had settled up with the Government after a knowledge of the passage of the resolution, had paid the duty, had sold their goods, and had got the duty back from their customers. The proposition, as it stands, proposes to remit these duties to them, and they are to put them in their pockets, having once received them from their customers. It seems to me, if it were possible to get a rule that would not be justifiable on any principle, the proposition before the Senate is that very rule.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know how we could very well make a law go into operation all over the country on different days; because that is the only position we can take as opposed to this one. We cannot pass a law to go into operation in one place to-day and another place to-morrow and another place the next day, and so on; that is to say, we cannot properly do it. As I stated before, we must fix some day, and this day is ample for notice to be given to all the ports in the United States, with perhaps one exception. If it shall turn out that there are hard cases where injustice is done, which are included within this time, we must remedy that by legislation hereafter.

Mr. GRIMES. If I understand it, the argument is that these parties in New York, who had property in bond, paid the duties upon it and had conveyed and sold it to other parties in many instances in the early part of the 30th. Now it is admitted on all hands, and admitted especially by the Senator from New York, [Mr. MORGAN,] that the resolution was known at that time in New York to have passed both Houses of Congress. It had passed through all the stages here and was known to be in the hands of the President. Does anybody suppose that the shrewd merchants of New York, if they were going to make a sale of those goods, did not add to the price the additional tax which they knew the two Houses of Congress had imposed upon those goods? It is a fair supposition that they did add it. It is not a fair supposition that they supposed the President would veto a resolution of that kind. They knew that it was to become a law either on the 29th or the 30th. They knew that in the ordinary course of legislation it would not lie in his hands longer than that.

Mr. SUMNER. He has several days.

Mr. GRIMES. I know he has several days; but in the ordinary course of legislation where a bill or resolution does not raise any constitutional question, it ordinarily comes back to us in one or two days after it goes to the hands of the President. They knew it had passed through all its stages; they knew it met the approval of both Houses of Congress; they knew that it was in his hands. It seems to me the proposition made by the Senator from Illinois is the right one, to say that this law shall take effect from and after the 29th of April, and let all these men stand upon an equal footing.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I congratulate myself upon one thing: that hereafter the Committee on Finance and the Secretary of the Treasury cannot be accused of being too sharp about laying burdens on the people. We find a great many persons that are so sharp they will not agree to give way even when the Secretary of the Treasury thinks in common justice they ought to do so.

Mr. GRIMES. I suppose the chairman of the Committee on Finance will admit that we have all a right to entertain our own opinions as to what "common justice" is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Unquestionably.

Mr. GRIMES. I insist upon it that it is not common justice to allow the men in New York who got their goods out on the 30th to be exonerated from the payment of this duty, and to say that the men in Salem or Portland or any other port in the country who were not cognizant of this fact, and therefore did not pay their duties until the 2d of the month, shall be compelled to pay them.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is even worse than that. It is admitted that at half past one o'clock on the 30th they had notice in the city of New York that the law was approved; and now you propose to exonerate them from the payment of the additional duty of 50 per cent. while you exact it out of men in other parts of the country who had no knowledge whatever of the imposition of this additional duty, giving a preference to one port over the other parts of the country.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is no such thing.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have the evidence here that it is some such thing. The Senator replies to that that if they did not know it they ought to have known it; and then his other answer is, that the Secretary of the Treasury thinks this is but common justice. Are we here simply to register the opinions of the Secretary of the Treasury? Is nobody here to have any opinion about it because the Secretary of the Treasury says it is common justice? We are to make a man who in utter ignorance of the passage of this law paid his duties pay the additional 50 per cent. and exonerate the man who knew all about the law from the payment of that additional duty; and that is a sense of common justice! Well, sir, it is a kind of justice that I do not understand.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Illinois is very apt to fly into a flame for fear that somebody is infringing upon his rights, and the Senator from Iowa the same. There is no danger of anybody's trying it with either of them. I merely cited it to show that it was a very good thing that the public interests were so sharply looked after that even in a case where the Committee on Finance, the Committee of Ways and Means, and the Secretary of the Treasury, sharp as they try to look after these money matters, concluded that common justice looked one way, there were those whose eyes were still sharper than theirs. It is a matter that I congratulate the country upon; and I do not know but what we may need this additional amount of money to offset what we lose in certain other respects.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say but one word more. I think the Senator from Illinois has shown a little more feeling than there is any occasion for. This is the first tariff law, I believe, in the history of this Government or perhaps of any Government that took effect on the day of its passage. If there is any other, I should like to have the Senator name it. It has always been the policy of this and every other Government in the world that I have ever read about to make these laws prospective, to take effect in the future.

Mr. GRIMES. I believe the Senate passed that joint resolution under the lead of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that I urged it strongly, because I wished to get the revenue, and was very anxious to get increased revenue.

What are the facts? This joint resolution passed this body on the 28th of April, but was not signed by the Presiding Officer of the body until the 29th. It did not go from this Chamber until the afternoon of the 29th. It was then taken to the President, and at seven o'clock that evening he signed it. The next morning its approval was not known in New York, it was not known here.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is not the Senator from Ohio aware that on the morning of the 29th the New York papers all announced the passage of this resolution through both Houses of Congress?

Mr. SHERMAN. They announced that the Senate had concurred in it, but still it was not then a law. It went to the President, and he might have kept it for ten days. In the meantime these merchants, in the ordinary course of their business, proceeded to withdraw their goods from entry. The Senator says it ought not to take effect on the 29th. Why not? If you enforce the rigid rules of the law, why not enforce it on the 29th?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have tried to tell the Senator that in point of fact it was not a law until the business hours of the 29th were over, and there would seem to be some equity in not enforcing it retrospectively, although by the strict rule of law, that parts of days are not to be taken into the computation, it is possible a construction might be given to it so as to give the law effect for the whole day. I do not think so, though. I do not think any court would construe this law as being in force through that day. For many purposes courts will divide days.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am informed it has been decided that this law was the law on the 29th, and that probably in law, in the courts, the duties might have been enforced on the 29th; but it was not known. The law was not proclaimed here in this Senate Chamber until after twelve o'clock on the 30th. It was immediately telegraphed, and the Secretary of the Treasury enforced the most rigid rules. He demanded the duties as due on the 29th, and found himself involved in lawsuits and controversies. Under these circumstances the question came to the two committees of the two Houses as to when this law ought to be enforced. Considering that no other tariff law had ever been enforced on the day of its passage, considering that these men did not know of its passage until one o'clock on Saturday, the 30th, we thought it was not a very harsh thing to say they might have Saturday to take their goods out under the old duties, and that at the commencement of the next week, on Monday, the law should be in force. That is the whole case; and it seems to me it is but justice to give them that day.

Mr. SUMNER. I alluded to a circumstance that the final approval of this law by the President was not known at Salem until the 2d of May; and my friend from Illinois has placed great stress on that. He will now allow me to make a still further explanation with regard to the peculiar circumstance. The approval of the act was not mentioned in the Boston papers on Monday morning, the 2d of May. It was not telegraphed to Salem on Monday morning. The notice from the Secretary of the Treasury of the approval of the act, by a mistake was addressed to the collector of Salem at Newburyport, so that he did not receive it till the next day. On the 2d of May an eminent merchant of Salem, whom I may name—Mr. Bartram—one of the largest importers in this country, received a cargo from Zanzibar, and he went to the custom-house to enter it. The collector told him that under his instructions, the instructions under which he was acting, he could exact from him only the duties of the act of 1862. Mr. Bartram paid those duties on the 2d of May. The next day he received a notice from the collector of the passage of this act, and the exaction of the 50 per cent. So much for the port of Salem.

But allow me to remind the Senator from Illinois that he has confined his criticism especially to New York. He should understand that Philadelphia and Boston are in precisely the same condition. There are those three considerable cities, Boston, New York, and Philadelphia—

Mr. JOHNSON. Why not include Baltimore?

Mr. SUMNER. Perhaps it should be included. I am speaking according to my knowledge.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is somewhat of a city.

Mr. SUMNER. It may be that Baltimore is in precisely the same predicament; but I am speaking of the three cities with regard to which I have information. They were in this predicament: that the approval of the act was not known till half past one o'clock on Saturday. During the morning the merchants at those different places had been to the custom-house and asked the collector what they should pay. His reply was that under the instructions under which he was then proceeding he could exact only what was required by the act of 1862. Mark that, if you please, and consider the consequences. The merchants until after one o'clock at those places paid according to the act of 1862, and they naturally made their contracts with reference to that act; and there you have the precise hardship in the case that, according to the positive requisition of the collector, they paid under the act of 1862, and conducted their business with reference to that act. Now, I take it the object of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is to meet that hardship.

Mr. TEN EYCK. There is one aspect of this case that I have not heard alluded to, and it is simply to that that I shall confine my remarks. I think there is great propriety, however, in remitting these duties on the 29th, for the reason stated by the Senator from Illinois that the business of the day had all been concluded before the joint resolution was signed by the President; but how should it be with respect to Saturday? You may look at that in two aspects: a portion of the day prior to half past one o'clock, and the remaining portion of the day subsequent to half past one o'clock. It is claimed by the Senator from Massachusetts and others who seek to have these duties remitted on that day that merchants went to the custom-houses and inquired of the collectors with respect to this law that they read about in the newspapers as having passed both Houses of Congress a day or two before. The collector told them that he had no official notice of the fact, and therefore was not authorized to receive the new duties, and did not require them to pay them. He did rightly; he ought not to have received them. But, sir, after half past one o'clock the merchants in New York, Boston, and Philadelphia did pay their duties, and if you adopt the amendment of the Senator from Ohio in its length and breadth you not only relieve the merchants whom it is sought to relieve from their duty payments prior to half past one o'clock on Saturday, but you will require the Government to refund every dollar of the duty that they received in the afternoon of that day. Where is the propriety of that? Upon what principle can that be excused or remitted? You will excuse the payment of these duties before half past one o'clock on Saturday, because the merchants had not knowledge of the fact. They had sufficient notice to put them on inquiry.

Mr. SUMNER. And they were put on inquiry. They went to the collector, and the collector said he would receive only under the old law.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Exactly. He would only receive under that law then; and if their eyes and ears were open had they not then an opportunity of saving themselves from the effect of this law? A notice of that kind would be sufficient in any court of justice, in any case at law, under any circumstances sufficient to put the party upon inquiry. But after half past one o'clock on Saturday, when the question had been settled between the parties and the Government, you are asked now to relieve them from the effect of that payment and that settlement, and to return to them, for aught I know, hundreds of thousands of dollars which they paid under the law, which they were satisfied with, and which they expected to pay. If you are going to relieve the merchants from the consequences of this act and their want of knowledge this exemption should not extend beyond the period of half past one o'clock on the 30th of April, so far as regards these three cities; and then by the same principle of equality you should settle with the merchants of every other city in this Union up to the time and period when they had notice of the existence of this law. Why, sir, the wisdom and experience of ages have established the soundness of the principle that when an act is passed and becomes a law it is the duty of the citizen to take notice of it, and he must abide by and be bound by it.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio. I do not think it comports with the dignity and the honor of any Government to exercise these sharp practices upon its business people. I was opposed originally to the passage of the joint resolution under which these duties were collected. I shall oppose any and every proposition operating upon the business people of this country, unless they shall have notice of the law and of the time at which it is to take effect. Every Government legislating upon the business of the country should act in such a manner as to allow all the persons engaged in the business affected to have notice of the law. Common honesty toward the citizen demands that. The passing of a law and having it to operate upon the business men of the country before it is known that it is the law is wrong morally; it is wrong in every aspect of the case. Why, sir, it is a kind of sharp practice that would barely be tolerated by gamblers and business sharpers.

Sir, I would exempt the merchants of New York, Baltimore, and Philadelphia who have gone forward in good faith from the operation of this law. When the agents of the Government did not know that it was the law how could they expect the people throughout the country to know it? When they went forward and paid their duties, first demanding of the proper officer if the duties had been changed and he received their money, he himself not knowing that the law had been changed, is it right that we should collect double duties from them? In my judgment it would be dishonest, and I would give my countenance to no act of my Government that I thought was dishonest; and I think it would disgrace any business man of respectability in the country to so act with his correspondents and business friends.

The honorable Senator from New Jersey says that everybody should know the law. How could they know the law unless it was promulgated? How could the business men of New York or of any other city know that this law took effect on the 29th day of April when it was approved at seven o'clock in the evening of that day after all business was over? It is utterly impossible that they should. Would you exact this money from them on Saturday the 30th? It was only promulgated to them at one o'clock on that day, when nearly all the business of the day was over.

I will not only vote for this amendment, but I would vote to remit to any merchant this 50 per cent. if he paid it without notice of the passage of that joint resolution after he paid the duty under the law of 1862. I do not care who he was, because the presumption is if this law had been promulgated in such a manner as to cause it to be operative upon the citizen, the law officers of the Government would know it. If the merchant in Salem, to whom the Senator from Massachusetts referred, paid the old duties on the 2d day of May, I would not allow him to pay over again. If the merchants of San Francisco, on the 5th day of May, should pay to the officers of the Government there the duties under the law of 1862, I would ask nothing more from them. The Senator from New Jersey must know that the people cannot know that laws are passed until they are promulgated. He must know that this Government have a great interest in the matter, and the Secretary of the Treasury seems to act with the greatest vigilance and promptitude, and if his collectors did not know it how could he expect the people to know it?

Mr. TEN EYCK. At half past one on Saturday they did know it.

Mr. POWELL. Suppose they did. You collected from them under the operation of this law the day previous. I would refund all that they paid without notice of the law. Why, sir, this kind of practice would place us before the commercial world with that infamy with which Caligula has been handed down, for causing his laws to be written in small letters and placed on high pillars, so that his people could not read his decrees.

Mr. CONNESS. I suppose it would be very difficult in this matter to establish a rule which would provide for refunding the duties paid prior to the notice being given in every case. That would really be the just rule; but I suppose it is impracticable if not impossible to be established; and therefore I think the proposition made by the Senator from Ohio is the nearest approximation to justice both to the Government and to the merchant that we can adopt. I am very much surprised at the views expressed by the honorable Senator from New Jersey, who always holds the scales with so even a hand. Indeed, in his discussion of this little matter it did not appear to my mind from hearing the honorable gentleman that he supposed there was such a place as the city of San Francisco in the United States of America.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I could not have failed to know it, at least since the Senator has taken his seat on this floor.

Mr. CONNESS. If the honorable Senator had such notification as that, and then ignored it, he is in the position of those that are very deaf simply because they will not hear. Does my friend find any justice in a law which has provided notice to the merchant in the city of New York and not provided notice to the merchant at the city of San Francisco, and is he unwilling to admit such a slight extension of time as will enable us to avail ourselves of the erection of the trans-continental telegraph? Surely the rapidity with which, with whatever disabilities or accidents may occur from time to time, news is transmitted across the continent should be allowed us.

I hope, sir, that the amendment proposed by my honorable friend from Illinois will not obtain; but that time will be given until Monday after the passage of the act, as it is, as I before observed, impracticable to fix a period at which each person should have notice, or the collector in each city of the Union should have notice. I hope that the amendment now pending will not obtain.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY.) The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will offer another amendment to the amendment. I move to strike out all of the first-proposed amendment after the word "until" in the words "after the 30th day of April, 1864, and shall," and to insert "the person paying such increased duty had notice of the passage of the resolution imposing the same."

Mr. JOHNSON. It seems to me that the honorable member from Illinois has disregarded a provision of the Constitution which directs that all duties shall be uniform. You can make no discrimination in favor of one port or one man over another port or another man. The effect of his amendment now proposed is that if an importer in Baltimore had a cargo of goods which arrived on the 30th of April, and he had notice of the increased duty, he would pay one rate, and if an importer of precisely the same kind of goods had a cargo arriving on the 30th at New York and he had no notice, he would pay another rate. Now, I appeal to the honorable member to reflect for a moment if a provision such as he proposes will not conflict with the restraint upon Congress in the Constitution. It seems to me to be very evident; and it is more strikingly to be illustrated by supposing the two cases of Baltimore and San Francisco; the whole is under one Government. The Constitution provides that upon all importations there shall be uniformity of taxation as far as the imposts are concerned. San Francisco is to pay just as much as Baltimore, and Baltimore of course is not to pay more than San Francisco; but according to the amendment of the honorable member if a merchant in Baltimore imported upon the 30th of April a cargo of $100,000 of any one commodity, to simplify the illustration, he would pay the increased duty of 50 per cent., and the merchant in San Francisco who imported into San Francisco on the 30th precisely the same commodity to the amount of $100,000 would pay only the duty imposed by the act before the increase of 50 per cent. That would literally be a tax upon knowledge. My merchant would be made to pay 50 per cent. more because he knew, when the merchant in San Francisco would not be made to pay because he did not know. Knowledge in the one case, therefore, leads to the additional taxation; ignorance in the other case exempts from it. Ignorance, therefore, is bliss.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to know if that is not the precise ground on which the Senator from Maryland has been advocating the proposition that has been before the Senate to-night. Has he not been contending here that by reason of the ignorance of the passage of this law when it was a law, these parties should be exempted? Has it not been the basis of the argument of the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Maryland, and did he not contend in a long speech here that because they did not know in the city of New York of the passage of the joint resolution, and were ignorant of it, therefore they were to be exempted?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then ignorance was bliss, was it?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly it was.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then act consistently, and let ignorance be bliss still, if that is to be the argument.

Mr. JOHNSON. Ignorance on many occasions is bliss. I have felt that often.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It seems ignorance is bliss when it suits the purpose of the honorable Senator from Maryland. When it does not, then it is anything but bliss.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable Senator entirely misunderstands me, and he misunderstands, I think, those with whom it is my pleasure to concur. We have said that the additional tax should not be imposed until there was knowledge, or until a time had elapsed when there might be knowledge; but nobody has said that you must make the tax which each importer is to pay depend upon the fact of each importer having knowledge that the increased duty had been imposed. You must select a time; that is all; and selecting a time, then there is no conflict with the prohibition to make any thing but a uniform regulation in reference to revenue.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I apprehend the Senator from Maryland did not hear the Senator from Kentucky. It was the very argument he made, that he would not exact the duty from any man until he had time to hear of the passage of the law.

Mr. JOHNSON. I spoke of my own ignorance. That was all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next excepted amendment was to insert at the end of section twenty the following:

And any duties which shall have been exacted and received contrary to the provisions of this section shall be refunded by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was in line one hundred and sixty-six of section three to strike out "or" and insert "and;" in line one hundred and sixty-seven after the words "kinds" to strike out "valued at $3 or less per dozen, 50 cents per dozen, and in addition thereto 25 per cent. ad valorem; valued at over $3 per dozen, 50 cents per dozen, and in addition thereto 40;" and after "40" to insert "50;" so that as amended the clause would read:

On pen-knives, jack-knives, and pocket-knives of all kinds, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. DIXON. I propose to amend the amendment of the committee by adding "and 50 cents per dozen."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That would just cut out the whole concern.

Mr. SHERMAN. This whole matter was thoroughly considered by the Committee on Finance after hearing persons, and I will state that the duty proposed to be levied of 50 cents a dozen on some of these jack-knives would amount to 448 per cent. It is a ridiculous tax.

Mr. DIXON. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate at this late hour, but I will state that from careful examination myself and from information received from parties well informed, I believe this article will bear this additional duty, and a large increase of revenue may be furnished in that way.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator has received his information one-sided; the committee have received theirs from both sides.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator has received his from importers interested.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We heard both sides.

Mr. DIXON. I have received some also from those interested in the manufacture, I acknowledge. Still they all agree the revenue can be enhanced in this way.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected—ayes eight, noes not counted.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was in section six, line sixty-four, after the word "cents" to insert "per dozen;" and in line sixty-five to strike out "on the excess;" so as to make the clause read:

On spool thread of cotton, 6 cents per dozen spools, containing on each spool not exceeding one hundred yards of thread, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem; exceeding one hundred yards, for every additional hundred yards of thread on each spool or fractional part thereof in excess of one hundred yards, 6 cents per dozen and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORGAN. I called attention to this clause for the purpose of making an inquiry of the committee. I do not know myself much about this duty on cotton thread, but I am informed that it is about 70 per cent. It was formerly 40. I desire to know of the committee whether this is not higher in proportion than the other duties upon cotton articles. Heretofore it has been classed with the other articles of cotton. It is now taken out of that class and made an exception, and charged a little larger duty. It never has been so treated before. I have also looked at the tax in the internal revenue bill, and I find it is but 5 per cent. on cotton thread. I do not suppose it was the intention of the Finance Committee to fix the duty so high upon this article as entirely to exclude it. My information is that this duty will be prohibitory upon cotton thread; and I have called attention to the subject for the purpose of any explanation that the committee can give.

Mr. CLARK. The committee did give their attention to this matter; and they are not aware that this will be a higher duty than is generally imposed on cotton productions. It probably is known to the Senator from New York, it certainly is to many other Senators, that there are springing up in the country various manufactures of spool-thread cotton. We do not manufacture many kinds, and perhaps not some of the best kinds at present, though we make an excellent article; but it is desirable to encourage it, and we have proposed a sufficient duty both to protect the American manufacturer and to yield revenue. The committee think they have arrived at that point, and desire to keep the duty there.

The amendment was concurred in.

The Secretary read the next excepted amendment, which was in section eighteen, line five, after the word "except" to strike out "silk, raw or unmanufactured, or not more advanced in manufacture than singles, tram, thrown, or organzine," and to insert "raw cotton."

Mr. TEN EYCK. The inserting the words "raw cotton" in line seven was not excepted to. The exception was only with respect to silk, raw or unmanufactured. That is the only question now involved. I did not call for a division on this proposed amendment when we were acting as in Committee of the Whole, because I did not want to delay time by having a division then.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to say that the committee in adjusting the duty on pages 25 and 26 on silk, adjusted that duty with reference to the amendment now proposed to be made here, and if this is stricken out, in the opinion of the committee it would leave that duty too high. I hope this will not be changed, as it is in conformity also with the policy adopted in the section placed on page 45 encouraging the commerce.

Mr. HARRIS. I really hope this proposition will be retained as it came to us from the House of Representatives. From the information I have, I am satisfied that it will operate oppressively on the infant manufacture of silk here, if the manufacturers are obliged to pay a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem on the raw stock that they are obliged to import. I hope, therefore, that the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance will not be agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, and Wiley—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Dixon, Doolittle, Harris, Hendricks, McDougall, Morgan, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wilson—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Davis, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Morrill, Nesmith, Wilkinson, and Wright—10.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This completes the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The bill is before the Senate, still open to amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the nineteenth section of the bill, on the 42d page, in the sixth line, by inserting after the word "day:"

And in all cases where the duties exacted by virtue of the joint resolution of April 29, 1864, exceed the duties provided for in this act, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause such excess to be refunded in the manner provided in other like cases.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the Senator from New York would find it better located if he made his proposition a separate section to be inserted between the nineteenth and twentieth sections.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well. Let the section be read as it will stand if amended, and then, if there is any objection to it, it can come in some other place.

The Secretary read, as follows:

That all goods, wares, and merchandise which may be in the public stores or bonded warehouses on the day and year this act shall take effect shall be subjected to no other duty upon the entry thereof for consumption than if the same were imported respectively after that day; and in all cases where the duties exacted by virtue of the joint resolution of April 29, 1864, exceed the duties provided for in this act, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause such excess to be refunded in the manner provided in other like cases; and so much of the act of August 6, 1848, or any other act, as requires the sale of fire-crackers or prohibits their deposit in bonded warehouses, is hereby repealed.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe there is no objection—I inquire of the Senator from Maryland if he thinks there is any objection—to its appearing in this place.

Mr. JOHNSON. Not at all.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not offer this amendment because the Government has any surplus of money to return to importers, but I offer it because I think it equitable. Let us see what we have done. We passed a joint resolution increasing the duties 50 per cent. The merchants paid those duties. They supposed that to be the law; they supposed that to be the decision of Congress; and so long as it is the decision of Congress there is no objection to it; but it pretty soon appears on the passage of this bill that we are not governed by the joint resolution. Some parties instead of letting their goods go into bond paid their duties, supposing that when the more matured bill which is now under consideration should be passed the duties would be equivalent to the 50 per cent. increase contained in the joint resolution. So far as they in good faith have paid those duties and have their goods on hand, I do not know why they should not be entitled to stand on the footing of this bill precisely as they would if they had let their goods go into bond. I can see no objection to it, no reason why they should not have the increased duties refunded to them if Congress means to act equitably toward the merchants.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think a little reflection will convince the Senator that this amendment is substantially impracticable and unjust. Suppose the Secretary should be required to refund the excess of duties paid under the joint resolution to every person, what would be the result? Many of those persons who have thus paid the increased duties have sold their goods and have realized the increased cost of those goods. Will you carry the same principle to the vendee, and so on? Those goods may have been sold a dozen times; the increased duty and increased price may have been realized by different parties. Would you give to the purchasers of the various forms in which those goods have gone into the market the same right? That would be inequitable.

Then there are other cases. This bill in some cases raises the duties more than 50 per cent. The same principle that the Senator seeks to apply would require those persons who have got the benefit of a lower rate of duty to pay now the addition. On woolens, for instance, we have raised the rate of duty 10 percent., one third, and we have put a specific duty of 24 cents a pound on woolen goods, so that the aggregate of the increase on woolen goods is more than 50 per cent.—more than the amount imposed by the joint resolution. It is true that there is a corresponding duty on wool which will be paid by the manufacturer. But it seems to me that to carry out such a principle as this would operate unjustly. These parties have paid the duties required by law. There is no reason why the money should be refunded to them. They chose, instead of leaving the goods remain in the bonded warehouses, to take them and put them in market. They took the risk of the increased duty. Not only that; they paid the duties with a full knowledge that the rate of increase would not be so large as the 50 per cent. provided for by the joint resolution. This bill was introduced into the House of Representatives from the Committee of Ways and Means very soon after the joint resolution was passed. All persons engaged in the business of importing knew that the proposed permanent increase was not so great as 50 per cent., and they have acted upon that idea. Some have withdrawn their goods from bonded warehouses and realized, others have allowed them to remain in bonded warehouses.

It seems to me now that to require the increased duty to be refunded would operate unjustly, inequitably. It would be a very severe burden on the Treasury. I do not know how much it would amount to; it would be very difficult to estimate. In the case of woolen goods it would be impossible to estimate whether the 50 per cent. increase under the joint resolution was greater than the amount imposed by this bill. It would make a difficult and troublesome question to be settled in every particular case. Every importer who has taken out his goods under the joint resolution would assert a demand, and it would be very difficult to ascertain whether the amount of duty imposed by this bill is higher or lower than the amount imposed under the joint resolution. In some cases it is higher, in some cases it is lower. I think it would involve the custom-houses in irretrievable confusion and innumerable losses. I do not think that any injustice has been done to these merchants. They have paid the duties imposed by law, and they have had the benefit of the increased price. They need not have paid the duties when they did unless they chose. They might have let the goods remain in bonded warehouses subject to the future duty. They chose to take them out; they have sold them in many cases and realized profit. To refund the money would be to give these importers an advantage which other dealers have not.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, we must now admit, I think, that the passage of the joint resolution of the 29th of April was an ill-advised measure. It will be recollected when that resolution was before the Senate it was stated that it was not expected that the permanent increase of duties would be 50 per cent. I myself stated that if I thought the increase would be 50 per cent. I would be willing to vote for the resolution, but inasmuch as I did not think the average increase would amount to that, I agreed with the Finance Committee in their amendment to reduce it to 33½ per cent., and probably 25 per cent. would have been better. I do not think, however, that the amount is very large—I do not know how much, but it cannot be very large—of goods entered for consumption on which the increased duty has been paid. I submit to the Senate whether it is just to have a policy that is so unstable as this has shown itself to be. It seems to me that so far as persons have paid these duties, it is only equity to have the money returned to them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I recollect when the joint resolution was before this body it was proposed by some member of the Finance Committee, I think the chairman, to reduce the increased tax from 50 to 33½ per cent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The committee recommended that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. And the reason given at the time was that when the new bill would be matured by the committee it probably would not impose a greater tax than 33½ per cent. increase, and that the tax in the mean time ought not to be greater, as a matter of course, than that which would finally become the law. But it was answered, and I think the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] made that reply; that we could not impose less than 50 per cent. of an increase running over the whole list; and on that assurance, on that opinion, as I believe, the Senate voted for the 50 per cent. I am very sure from what was said at that time that the Senate would not have voted for the 50 per cent. except for the impression that the permanent law would increase the rate of duties at least that much.

Now, it appears that we do not do so, and the proposition of the Senator from New York seems to me to be just. Suppose that last week an importer has brought in a very large supply of goods, and he has paid the 50 per cent. That 50 per cent. is a part of the cost of the goods to him, or to the wholesale merchant who has purchased from him. To-morrow, after we pass this bill, the same goods are brought into the market of the country at 20 or 30 per cent. less, because of the reduction of the tariff, and one can undersell the other by that much. It is an act of injustice to the commercial community just to that extent. As the Senator from Ohio has said, I think there are practical difficulties about this, but they ought to be met by a Department that asks such unwise legislation as a sixty days' tariff; I do not care if I do impose on that Department some hardships.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask my friend what Department asked for it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Treasury Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee of Ways and Means reported it, and we passed it. The Department did not ask for it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understood at the time that it was a departmental measure. If Congress, on its own motion, adopted what was a very impolitic measure, as now clearly appears, Congress ought as far as possible to correct it. I think it was impolitic to adopt a tariff for sixty days. The commercial world will be afraid directly to see the Congress of the United States in session. They do not know what laws are going to affect their interests from day to day. We strike a lick at gold one day, and it amounts to nothing; then we strike a lick at the trade of the country, and that amounts to a good deal. I think the proposition of the Senator from New York ought to be adopted, so as to do as near justice as we can.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Gentlemen have remembered a part of what took place, but there is something they have not remembered. The 50 per cent. tariff came from the House of Representatives, adopted as a measure, my friend from Ohio said, in part to stop importations altogether for a particular length of time. The Committee on Finance did not understand that it would have that effect entirely, and they recommended several amendments. Among others they recommended to strike it down to 33½ per cent., and they did so for the reason expressed by them very decidedly that they did not believe that the average of the duties would be raised above that amount. The committee were not quite unanimous upon the subject, it appeared, after it came into the Senate; but the matter was argued, and I stated the belief of the committee upon that subject, and the Senate, acting as in Committee of the Whole, voted accordingly to strike it down to 33½ per cent. But when the matter came into the Senate, my friend from Ohio, a member of the committee, rallied very strongly upon the idea that it was very important not to send the bill back to the other House, that we must pass it at once, and if we made any amendment to it it must go back there, and that idea seemed to take with the Senate; and so, although they were in favor of and believed it to be right, as their vote had shown, to fix the increase at 33½ per cent., such was the fever of laying your hand upon just what you could lay it upon that the Senate on the whole, after discussion, concluded that it was best to put on 50 per cent. as a sweeping measure, and leave matters to be adjusted afterwards.

Now, sir, it turns out precisely as the Committee on Finance supposed it would. I may congratulate myself that in one instance the committee has been found to be right so far as its prediction was concerned. It did not seem to me at that time, from the very little knowledge I had of the subject-matter, that there could be a large proportion of articles upon which any such increase could be made with reference to the question of revenue, and so it seems to be. But, sir, although that was the view I entertained at that time, and although it has turned out to be correct, I by no means agree to the proposition of the Senator from New York, for the simple reason that although the legislation in my judgment was somewhat unwise, yet no sort of complaint can be made by persons who have chosen under the joint resolution as it stood, when it was understood to be a mere temporary measure, to take their goods out of warehouse and pay the additional duty. They could have left them there until this time if they had seen fit to do so.

Mr. POWELL. Allow me to ask the Senator from Maine a question. Suppose a merchant imported his goods and had them in bond, and had made a contract to deliver the goods, could he not be compelled to take out those goods and pay the 50 per cent.?

Mr. FESSENDEN. On that supposition. But when a contract is made, goods are generally taken out at once and the contracts are generally that the purchaser pay the duty. We cannot legislate for all possible cases. We must take the great majority. The goods that were in bond might have remained there; the goods subsequently imported might have been put into bond; and there is no probability that many goods have been taken out unless where it was to the interest of parties to do so, because it was known that before the sixty days when the joint resolution would expire the whole subject of duties would be renewed, and the opinion had been expressed (as any one could see) that on many articles an increase of 50 per cent. could not possibly be put. Any importer who under such circumstances took his goods out of bond and paid the 50 per cent., did it simply because he had made a sale and the purchaser paid him the duty.

As was suggested by my honorable friend from Ohio, if you take this money out of the Treasury to whom are you to pay it? I ask my honorable friend from New York who has moved this amendment, to whom should the money be paid? If the person who sold the goods, who took them out of bond for the purpose of transferring them to another, (and he is the only person known to the custom-house,) is to receive the money, it is just so much clear profit to him. It is not likely that his purchaser in Maine, or Iowa, or anywhere else would think about it; and it is just putting into his pocket so much over and above the profits of the sale. Some injustice has been done in particular cases, no doubt; but in the great majority of cases the result has been what I have stated, because these men are shrewd business men. Having the opportunity and the right to let their goods lie in bond until they ascertained what the duties under the new tariff were to be, if they chose to take them out it must have been for some very good reason known to themselves, and we shall do nothing like justice to anybody by refunding duties paid under those circumstances; in fact we should do more injustice than justice. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SUMNER. I have already referred to one case this evening which occurred at Salem, and illustrates this very point—the case of the eminent merchant, Mr. Bartram, who, on the 2d of May, entered at the custom-house a cargo from Zanzibar, and paid the duties on that day, according to the requirement of the collector, under the old act of 1862; the next day he received a summons to appear at the custom-house and pay the additional 50 per cent. If he had been aware of the passage of the joint resolution, he would, perhaps, as the Senator from Maine says, have allowed his cargo to remain in bond, and then he could take advantage of the remedy provided by this statute; but he was not in a condition to do that, and therefore he has paid on that full cargo the additional 50 per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. What was the cargo?

Mr. SUMNER. It was from Zanzibar, in the East Indies. What it was I do not know. I know nothing beyond the fact that he made that payment of 50 per cent.

Now, as to the practical difficulties of carrying this out, on which Senators have placed so much stress, do they really exist? Is it not a matter of every day's experience at the custom-house to pay duties under protest, and then afterwards if it appears that the duties were not rightfully exacted the Government refunds them? Why may they not be refunded now?

Then the Senator from Ohio says it is not equitable to require this refunding; but I appeal to the Senator, what was the original purpose of the joint resolution? Was it not to arrest foreign importations, to prevent the market being glutted under the old statute of 1862 in anticipation of an approaching change of the tariff? I believe that was the single, specific purpose. Very well; that has been accomplished. Now that being accomplished, it only remains that we should remedy any hardships, or abuses if you choose to call them so, which may have occurred under the resolution, and it seems to me that the case indicated by the amendment of my friend from New York is one of those. Indeed, my attention had been called to this hardship before the Senator moved his amendment, and if he had not brought it forward I should have endeavored to do so myself.

I would add one other remark. It seems, by the admission of all, that the original resolution now is considered to have been hasty. I do not think that it commends itself to the judgment of Senators generally. I think all will admit also that it has done us no good abroad; it has not done the national credit any good.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator voted for it and argued for it.

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly I was for it; I do not mean to throw any shadow over those who were, because if so it would fall on myself.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to enter my caveat.

Mr. SUMNER. Just allow me to finish the idea I was upon. It is simply to present, what doubtless has passed through the mind of every Senator already, that the passage of the resolution did not and could not have a beneficial effect on our credit abroad. The effect of it doubtless was to give the idea that our Treasury was perhaps at the last gasp, and that we were almost playing a game of grab, seizing what we could get. Now that we are remodeling the tariff, it does seem to me that the time has come for us to review that transaction, and to repair any hardship that may have arisen under it. The very fact that we do repair that hardship I think will have a tendency to restore our credit so far as it may have been wounded or affected injuriously by the original resolution.

Mr. HALE. I have paid but little attention to this matter; but it strikes me, with all deference to the gentlemen who have urged this proposition, that it is the strangest proposition I have ever heard made in a legislative body. It is utterly impossible to pass any law of a general character affecting a whole nation that will not work individual injustice in some individual cases. No alteration of the tariff, high or low, no law of any kind, general in its character, can be passed without working out individual injustice; and if you establish this precedent it will be one entirely novel; and if you follow it up you will be called upon next session to remedy the injustice that will have been wrought by the passage of this tariff bill.

It is said that the passage of the joint resolution was improvident and unwise, and that it is so admitted. Well, sir, if Congress establishes the principle that the effect of its own improvident and unwise legislation is to be relieved by grants of money from the Treasury, it will tax the Treasury vastly more than it will to carry on the war. It seems to me that the only thing Congress can do is to pass laws general in their character; they may err, they may be unwise, impolitic; but to undertake by grants of money from the national Treasury to remedy the consequences of such legislation seems to me to be improper, unheard of, and not to be tolerated for a moment in the Congress of the United States legislating for the whole country.

Mr. President, we were, as everybody knows, in a crisis that never occurred before; a new state of things presented itself; we were looking around to devise ways and means for raising revenue in every possible manner that we could, consistently with justice and right; we contemplated what has since come, a general change of the tariff; and to prevent individuals speculating on their foresight and making importations in view of this, the joint resolution was passed, and it had to be passed promptly to be of any service. The only thing we can do, whether it was wise or unwise, is to let its burdens fall where in the course of nature, the business of the country, and the providence of God they do fall, and there let them rest.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe that in the case suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts the ship came in on Sunday after the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. I know nothing about that.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe it is the same case. That is my information. And to get the goods immediately out under the new duties, the party entered them at once on Monday and paid the duty. It appears to me that in place of there being a grab game there on the part of the Government, the grabbing was on the other side; and a special provision to cover such a case, or a special provision illustrated by such a case, is not, to say the least of it, happy in the illustration. I agree with honorable gentlemen who have presented the utter impossibility of applying a provision of this kind. It would simply be erecting the head of the Treasury Department into a court of equity with business enough to occupy him for the next year, without attending to loans or the prosecution of his other ordinary business.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the Senator from New Hampshire need not have told us that he had not paid much attention to this subject. If he had paid attention to it I think he would not have made exactly the statement he has made. It is pretty evident, however, that the amendment which has been offered by me will not be adopted, for the Senate, I judge, is about in the condition that it was when it passed the joint resolution; it is not in a condition to consider anything. Nevertheless the fact remains that you have advanced your duties 50 per cent. and lowered them within sixty days, and persons who paid the increase have got to pocket the loss. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. When the proposition was first suggested to me by the honorable member from New York who offers it I was in favor of it, but on reflection I think it will be improper to pass it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 8, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Harris, Hendricks, Morgan, Powell, Sausbury, Sumner, and Wilson—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Carlile, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Pomeroy, Richardson, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Morrill, Nesmith, Ramsey, Riddle, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—16.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope not. I think we had better get through with this bill to-night.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I move to amend the bill by inserting at the end of the third section:

On diamonds, cameos, mosaics, gems, pearls, rubies, and other precious stones, when not set, a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem.

By the internal revenue bill which we have passed we impose a duty of 10 per cent. upon all these jewels; but by a provision connected with that section as it was passed in the House of Representatives we excepted from that tax of 10 per cent. these jewels not set, upon which import duties had been paid. The Senate amended that provision, but the House of Representatives have non-concurred in the Senate amendment, and it is more than probable that the section in the internal revenue bill will stand as it was passed by the House of Representatives. Now, my simple object is to equalize the duties under these two bills. If you except jewels not set which have paid an import duty, that import duty ought to be of the same amount with the duty imposed by the internal revenue bill, to wit, 10 per cent. But by looking at the act of 1862, from which I have framed word for word the amendment I propose, it will be seen that the import duty on these jewels is only 5 per cent.; so that unless this amendment be adopted the effect will be that under the internal revenue bill we impose a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem on all these jewels, except jewels upon which an import duty has been paid, and that is only 5 per cent., making a discrimination in which I see no reason.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move to amend the bill in section six, line forty-nine, by striking out the words "included or;" so as to make it conform to the law of 1861.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator will observe that on the goods included in the schedule before the proviso there is only a specific duty of so much per square yard without any ad valorem duty except in one or two instances. This is merely putting on an additional duty if they are of a particular description, so that the words "included or" were put in in order to cover the list of goods in the schedule.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The Senator will see by reference to the old law that this proviso will carry with it all the items that precede it in the section.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is intended to apply to them because there is no ad valorem duty on them.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Then these duties which are specified as being so much per square yard and a percentage in addition need not be mentioned in this section, because they will all come under the 35 per cent. provision; they cannot come in any other way.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If you strike out the words "included or" the duty of 35 per cent. would not apply to the list, and the articles in the list would not be subject to an ad valorem duty.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It will apply to the rest of the section.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator is mistaken. If his object is protection, he is striking out the protection he has on the other kinds of goods.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The articles enumerated in this section were enumerated in the act of 1861, but none of them perhaps had then the value of 16 cents a square yard; but now in consequence of the rise in cotton every one of them has that value, and therefore the proviso affects all the descriptions of goods mentioned in the preceding part of the section. I propose only to use the words which were used in the law of 1861, which was gotten up by those who were very capable, and who understood this matter thoroughly. It was done, to protect qualities of goods manufactured in this country that come in competition with English and other foreign goods. They were specified by so many picks to the square inch, and all other goods above a certain number of picks to the square inch were to be taxed at a certain percentage ad valorem. The advance in cotton has been so great that the 35 per cent. ad valorem will apply to all those goods enumerated here in the first part of the section.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not understand it as the Senator does, but I concede that he understands the operation of it better than I do, because he has a practical knowledge on the subject. I have not looked into the section and the operation of it sufficiently to be able to say that it will not have the effect he speaks of; but I can see very readily from the phraseology of the bill what the object of the House of Representatives was. It was to apply this 35 per cent. to all the goods in the schedule and all other goods not enumerated when they were over a certain amount. That may cover the whole.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It will cover every one.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was intended for that, I suppose.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It was not intended to cover those enumerated in the first part of the section.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly it was, or they would not have put in the words "included or not included in the foregoing schedules."

Mr. SPRAGUE. Then why mention those? Why give them a specific duty? Why name the items?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Because the specific duty is different on different classes of goods.

Mr. SPRAGUE. If the chairman of the Committee on Finance will read the whole bill he will find that in every other respect its descriptive language is identical with the act of 1861, but in this respect it is changed. I do not propose to do more than make the meaning clear by conforming the language of this proviso to that of the corresponding provision in the act of 1861.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The intention was to change it; but inasmuch as the Senator seems to be very positive about it, speaking from practical knowledge of the subject, I shall not object to the amendment, because if the amendment be made it will be considered in the other House, whereas if we should make no amendment to the clause it could not be touched though we might find an error in it. I make no opposition to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Now I move to insert after line fifty-eight of section six, on page 23, the following proviso:

And provided further, That no cotton goods having more than two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, shall be admitted at a less rate of duty than is provided for goods which are of that number of threads.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I now move to amend by striking out the following clause in line five of section six, on page 21:

First. On cotton, raw or unmanufactured, 2 cents per pound.

It seems to me that the condition of the cotton market of the country should have some influence upon Senators in staying further taxation to the people of this country upon that article. They now pay for it 1,000 per cent. in addition to what they were paying before this war. A duty of 2 cents per pound may not appear to increase the price to the consumer, but it does. The Government will receive very little from it. There may be a time—it will not be often, but once in a while it may occur—when the American manufacturer may be able to introduce cotton from abroad and work it up into fabric which he can put to the consumer at a less price than if he had to purchase the American cotton.

At a time like this, when the policy of the Government is to gobble up every pound of cotton there is in the South and then to put an embargo upon it here, what are the people of this country going to do? Are you to continue that policy? If so, the poor people of this country will have to pay constantly for the most necessary articles a price which it is impossible for them to endure.

While I am up I wish to say a word as to the cotton manufacturers of this country. It has been said on this floor that they have made a great deal of money during the past year. I know of several of that class of manufacturers in this country; and it is within my knowledge that from the 1st of January, 1863, to the 1st of January, 1864, many of them did not make enough to pay to the Government the tax which it charged. It was so generally with the manufacturers of cotton in Rhode Island, and I believe that in Rhode Island that business is prosecuted, if not more economically, at any rate as economically as in any other part of the country. If they have made money they do not know where it is. I do not know that that amounts to anything on this question; but such is the fact. I can see no reason now why the people of this country should be burdened by an additional tax on cotton. After the war, when the embargo upon the cotton of the South shall be taken away, it will be time enough, in my opinion, to tax this cotton. There is no reason for it now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We lay an internal duty of 2 cents a pound on our own cotton; and it would be a very singular thing if we did not exact at least as much from imported cotton. There is some cotton imported. We have made an exception in favor of Surat cotton in allowing it to come from England without paying the 10 per cent. additional put upon other products of places beyond the Cape of Good Hope when imported from places this side the Cape. After we have made that exception, to take off the duty when we have imposed 2 cents tax on our own cotton would be very singular action in my opinion.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Nobody wants this cotton protected; it cannot come in competition with American cotton.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is used largely by manufacturers.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Not this imported cotton.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator's colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] has been talking about it several times, and has been very anxious to get the 10 per cent. taken off.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It can be used sometimes, but it cannot be used generally. There may be some cases in the business of cotton manufacturing where it can be used, but it cannot be used generally with the machinery now in use in this country.

Mr. CONNESS. If it is not used much the duty cannot be a very severe burden.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It is a burden; there is no benefit in it.

The amendment was rejected—ayes four, noes not counted.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to ask the attention of the committee to an article that seems to have escaped their notice, the article of hair-cloth. That article is manufactured here. I understand the theory of this bill to be that an import duty shall be imposed upon all imported articles equal to the excise duty on similar domestic articles, and taking into consideration also the increased cost of manufacture caused by the tax upon the raw materials that enter into our productions. Imported hair-cloth was taxed 30 per cent. by the tariff of 1861. When we put a tax of 3 per cent. on the domestic manufacture in 1862 there was no increase of the import duty as there was in the case of other manufactures. Now, there is an additional duty of 2 per cent. on the domestic manufacture, and still in this bill there is no increase of the import duty. I think in conformity with the spirit of the bill there should be an increase of the import duty corresponding with the excise tax, and that would be about 10 per cent. The excise tax is 5 per cent., and as all the raw materials that enter into the manufacture are also taxed, I suppose, in accordance with the spirit of the bill, about double the tax should be imposed on the foreign article as on the domestic. I move therefore to insert, after line seventy-one of section six, "on hair-cloth, 40 per cent. ad valorem." The duty is now 30 per cent. I think it ought to be 40 per cent.; but I will take anything the Finance Committee will agree to give.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think an amendment was made to-day to cover that—an amendment offered by the President of the body.

Mr. ANTHONY. I was not aware of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment referred to was after "bunting," in line ninety-eight of section five, to insert "mohair, alpaca, or goats' hair."

Mr. ANTHONY. This is a different article. This is hair-cloth, such as sofa covers are made of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that his amendment would come in a better classification by being inserted after line one hundred of section five.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well. I move to insert at that place: "on hair-cloth 40 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a very large duty.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is only 10 per cent. additional. There has been no increase of duty on the foreign article since the excise tax has been laid on the domestic.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Do these manufacturers suffer? No one came before us to complain or ask that any additional duty should be imposed on this article.

Mr. ANTHONY. They are very modest people.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We had no chance to investigate it.

Mr. DIXON. I think the duty is high enough already.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator from Rhode Island will put his amendment at 35 per cent., I shall not object to it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will take 35 per cent., because I know I cannot get anything if the Senator from Maine objects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. ANTHONY. I beg to be allowed to say again to the Senate that the import duty on this article is precisely the same now as it was before there was any excise duty on the domestic manufacture. There is now an excise duty of 5 per cent., and I think according to the spirit of this bill there should be a corresponding increase in the import duty. If there is any reason why there should not be, I am open to conviction and I shall be glad to hear it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Senators are continually asking when we can get through the session, and then when we get to work are moving to adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. We never shall get through until members stop talking. I insist on my motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. The duty on ivory in the tusk is 10 per cent., and the duty on manufactured ivory 50 per cent. There is a kind of ivory imported that is partly manufactured, cut into blocks for billiard balls. I suggest to the committee that that description of ivory should pay an additional duty over ivory in the tusk. I move to insert after line twelve of section twelve: "On ivory blocks for billiard balls, 20 per cent. ad valorem." I will say 15 per cent. if the chairman of the Committee on Finance prefers. The duty on it ought to be more than on unmanufactured ivory and not so much as on manufactured ivory.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is somebody's notion who thinks he can make a little something out of it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know what reason the Senator has to put that imputation on any amendment I move.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Has the Senator any information on the subject?

Mr. ANTHONY. We do not all know as much as the Senator from Maine, but we know something.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not profess to know anything about it. I do not see why we should put an additional duty on the article because it is partially cut into blocks.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is partly manufactured, and weight is taken off.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senator from Maine is good-natured now, because I want to offer a few amendments as to a class of articles. These amendments are in regard to water colors used for the manufacture of paper-hangings. We have put an excise duty on the manufacture; we have put a very large duty on many of the raw materials used in the manufacture; whisky is one of the most important, on which the duty is very large indeed; but we have put no increased duty on the imported article. I desire that the duty on the imported article shall be raised so as to correspond with the excise upon the domestic manufacture. With that view, I move to insert at the end of section thirteen:

On blank ficks, enameled-white, satin-white, lime-white, and all combinations of barytes with acids or water, 3½ cents per pound.

The duty on that is now 2½ cents a pound.

On carmine lake, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The duty is now 25 per cent.

On moist water and mineral colors and paints used in the manufacture of paper-hangings and all colored papers and cards, not otherwise provided for, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The duty is now 25 per cent.

On French green, Paris green, mineral green, mineral blue, and Prussian blue, dry or moist, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The duty is now 25 per cent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is 35 per cent. on all water colors.

Mr. ANTHONY. But water colors used for paper-hangings are different. There is an exception of colors used in paper-hangings. I looked at it this morning. All I ask is that there may be an increased duty on the imported article corresponding with the excise tax, and that is the spirit of the bill. A Senator suggests that the duty being paid in gold brings it up. I understand that throughout the difference between gold and currency has not been taken into consideration, because it is a fluctuating element.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Multiply all these duties by two and then make the comparison.

Mr. ANTHONY. But how long is that to last?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island will be read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

On blank ficks, enameled-white, satin-white, lime-white, and all combinations of barytes with acids or water, 3½ cents per pound.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The duty is now 35 per cent. What percentage is 3½ cents a pound?

Mr. ANTHONY. The duty is now 2½ cents a pound, and I propose to raise it to 3½.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a very large increase, from 2½ to 3½ cents.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will take 3 cents, and I so modify the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On carmine lake, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On moist water and mineral colors and paints used in the manufacture of paper-hangings and all colored papers and cards, not otherwise provided for, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. HALE. What is "moist water?" [Laughter.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Here is an article that is produced in this country and is imported from abroad. We lay an excise of 5 per cent. on the domestic production, and we refuse to lay any additional duty on the foreign production. Gentlemen who do not know anything about it content themselves with laughing at "moist water."

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator from Rhode Island would give us the benefit of his learning on it and explain what "moist water" is. What use is it put to? Is it useful in mechanics or for medicinal purposes? How does it differ from any other water? [Laughter.]

Mr. ANTHONY. It is moist water colors. Water colors may be dry or moist. It does not follow that a water color must be moist all the time. It may be dry or moist. The article is moist water colors.

The question being put on the amendment, there were, on a division—ayes 13, nays 9; no quorum voting:

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope not.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think there is a quorum here if Senators will vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the amendment again.

The question being put, there were twelve ayes.

Several SENATORS. We give it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is a further count insisted on?

Mr. HALE. Does that make a quorum?

Mr. HENDRICKS. The last division showed the Senate to be without a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the last vote showing the absence of a quorum, business cannot be proceeded with till the presence of a quorum is ascertained.

Mr. WILSON. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken; resulted—yeas 12, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Dixon, Foot, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Richardson, Sprague, Sumner, and Wilson—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morgan, Powell, Ramsey, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—21.

So the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of Mr. ANTHONY was read, as follows:

On French green, Paris green, mineral green, mineral blue, and Prussian blue, dry or moist, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the following amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That when any cask, barrel, or other vessel of American manufacture, exported or sent out of the country filled with the products of the United States shall be returned to the United States empty, the same shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have an explanation of that.

Mr. HARRIS. I will explain it. There is a pretty large amount of beer and ale exported from the United States to the West Indies and other places, and the barrels and casks in which the article is exported are returned. By a construction of the act as it exists the Secretary of the Treasury feels bound to charge those empty barrels coming back with duty. A different rule has obtained in reference to other articles; for instance, grain bags sent out of the country with grain are returned free of duty; but on application made to the Secretary of the Treasury—I made the application myself—he said he felt bound to apply a different rule to these articles, and he recommended that the matter should be submitted to Congress. I have his letter before me.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "barrel" the word "carboy." Precisely the same thing is true of oil of vitriol manufactured in this country and sent to Canada; the empty carboy in which it was sent is charged a duty when returning empty; and the effect has been to break up the traffic.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it the meaning that the barrels shall be returned in the same ship that takes them out?

Mr. HARRIS. Not necessarily.

Mr. JOHNSON. But they are bought in England, and sold in England, and exported by an English purchaser. The barrels go with the ale.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. The barrel is sold with the ale, and when the ale is disposed of, the buyer there sends the barrel back here as a shipment.

Mr. HARRIS. That is never done; but suppose that to be done, I do not see any difficulty about it. I am, say, a brewer of ale; I send a cargo of ale to the West Indies and I bring back my barrels.

Mr. JOHNSON. That I understand.

Mr. HARRIS. Or I can get my pay for the barrels and the ale, and afterwards buy back the barrels. Should I pay a duty on those barrels when I bring them home empty? I manufacture the barrels here; I send them out for the purpose of selling my ale; I bring them back for the purpose of filling them and sending out another cargo. Should I pay a duty on them?

Mr. GRIMES. Is it right that the man in the West Indies, who has bought the barrels as well as the beer, should send them back and sell them here in the market in competition with our own coopers?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not see any great difficulty about that. What we want is to get our barrels back without paying any duty on them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Are not the barrels sold when the beer is sold?

Mr. HARRIS. That never is the usage.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted; and the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to call the attention of the Finance Committee and of the Senate to the duty on foreign salt. On the 34th page of the bill, lines eighty-five, eighty-six, and eighty-seven of section eleven read thus:

On salt in sacks, barrels, and other packages, 26 cents per 100 pounds; on salt in bulk, 20 cents per 100 pounds.

It is true that this raises the duty but a trifle, which is, I believe, 24 cents per 100 pounds on salt in casks, barrels, and packages; and 18 cents on salt in bulk. That, however, has been found to be so heavy a duty that since it was laid the importation of foreign salt has very greatly fallen off; and now when the excise tax is but 6 cents per 100 pounds on domestic salt manufactured within the United States, the effect of this duty on foreign salt, I apprehend, will be that the amount of salt imported will be very little, perhaps scarcely any. This duty will amount really to a prohibition. Now, I think we should do no injustice to the home product if we diminished the duty on imported salt, while at the same time we should undoubtedly increase the revenue.

I have not the figures here now, but the fact is that since the duty was raised to its present point the amount imported has diminished very considerably. It cannot enter into competition with domestic salt when that pays only 6 cents on the one hundred pounds. A duty of 20 cents now on salt in the bulk is equivalent to a duty of between three and four hundred per cent. on the invoice cost, an enormous tax on an article of prime necessity every where. I hope, therefore, that the committee and the Senate will agree to a diminution of that duty. I move to amend the bill by making the duty on salt in sacks and barrels 20 cents instead of 26 cents per one hundred pounds, and 18 cents instead of 20 cents on salt in bulk.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can only say that the change made in the House of Representatives to which we agreed is adding to the duty on foreign salt exactly what has been added to the domestic duty, 2 cents per pound. The tariff before was adjusted not only with reference to revenue, but with reference also to the production of salt in this country. Although I might agree with the Senator that the duty on salt is pretty high considering the nature of the article—

Mr. FOSTER. Higher than on anything else.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yet I doubt whether anything can be effected by the amendment. It strikes down the duty even below what it is in the present tariff. The duty on the two grades is now 24 and 18 cents, and it is proposed to strike it down to 20 and 18. I should be very glad to have it done individually, but I do not think it can be accomplished. The production of salt in this country is calling for protection, as well as other interests.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes fifteen, noes not counted.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to call attention again, in the hope of doing something to perfect the bill, to the three sections that were added at the end. I wish to except to them. I believe that they have been strictly passed upon by the Senate; but I was called to the door when that was done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remark that those sections have been agreed to by Mr. SUMNER. Then I must appeal to the Senate to allow me to except to them. I ask my colleague to move their reconsideration.

Mr. WILSON. I move to reconsider; for the purpose of bringing the question before the Senate.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I would like to know what the subject is.

Mr. SUMNER. They are the three sections at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Wilson] that the Senate reconsider the vote concerning in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, so far as the last three sections are concerned, on the 43d, 44th, 45th, and 46th pages.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts may as well make his remarks on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to have a vote on each of those sections. ["Oh, no."]

Mr. McDougall. I would like to understand what the gentleman wishes to reconsider more particularly before the vote is taken.

Mr. SUMNER. I will proceed to explain.

The Senate may remember that I called attention in the first place to the section on the 43d and 44th pages. I stated that it was imperfectly drawn, that it set forth an obsolete statute, that if it was adopted it would tend to promote litigation rather than anything else. At the same time I stated, however, that I was not so well informed in regard to its character as I should like to be; but since the Senate adjourned this morning I have had an opportunity of informing myself; I have seen a person whose business it is to be thoroughly acquainted with that, and from whom I have derived the necessary information. It seems that in line seven, where it undertakes to set forth what is to be done under a certain statute it fails to set forth another statute under which that is done, which is necessary to the completeness of the statement. The object of the clause will appear from my reading a few words:

That on and after the day and year this act shall take effect it shall be lawful for the owner, consignee, or agent of any goods, wares, or merchandise which shall have been actually purchased, or procured otherwise than by purchase, at the time when he shall produce his original invoice, or invoices, to the collector, and make and verify his written entry of his goods, wares, and merchandise, as provided by section thirty-six of the act of March 2, 1799, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," and not afterwards, to make such addition in the entry to the cost or value given in the invoice as, in his opinion, may raise the same to the true market value of such goods, wares, and merchandise in the principal markets of the country whence they shall have been imported.

He is authorized by this section at the time when he produces his original invoice, and not afterwards, to make such addition in the entry to the cost or value as in his opinion may raise the same to the true market value. Now, in point of fact, in this section the only thing that is not borrowed from a previous statute, and in borrowing it that is not stated worse than it is stated in the previous statute, are the simple words "and not afterwards," which in point of fact are simply embodying in the statute an order of the Treasury Department. The Treasury Department has by a circular addressed to the custom-houses limited the time when the declaration can be made to the period of the entry and verification, and not afterwards. All that this section does is to take from the order of the Treasury Department the words "and not afterwards," and embody them in the statute. They are at this moment entirely within the control of the Treasury Department. The Treasury Department may continue them or not as it pleases.

Then, if you go through with this section to the close, it undertakes to cite a statute of a particular year when there is another statute on the same subject which on the whole is clearer; so that the effect of the whole section is to produce one inarticulate jumble, out of which nothing but litigation can ensue. It is much better to leave it all under the old statutes than to attempt this imperfect codification. That is my objection to the first of the three sections.

Then comes the second. The only change provided in the second section is that which regulates the dutiable value according to the value of the goods at the last place of shipment. I called attention to that when the subject was under consideration before. The Senator from Maine seemed to vindicate that change. The inquiry that I have been able to make on the subject satisfies me that the change is not advisable. How does the Senator propose to ascertain the value at the last place of shipment?

I beg to say that it is with great reluctance that I have undertaken to make this explanation, but having had my attention called to it, and also knowing that the attention of the Treasury Department has been to-day occupied by it, I have felt it my duty to lay it before the Senate. It will be for the Senator and for the chairman of the Committee on Finance to treat it as they see fit.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suggest to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, this being an amendment of the Senate, it will necessarily come up in committee of conference, and if it is not drawn just right it can be there considered. Let us come to a vote to-night on this bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I have not interfered much on this bill, and I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I have responsibilities resting on me in connection with it as a Senator, and a Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not complain of the Senator interfering at all.

Mr. SUMNER. There are three elements which, according to this section, must enter into the value of the goods at the last place of shipment: first, the value of the goods at the place of growth; second, the cost of transportation; and thirdly, the transshipment. Now, in point of fact, I am told that it is impossible to ascertain these elements with any certainty. Take the case to which I called the attention of the Senate this morning, of a shipment from Australia, if you please, to London, and then from London to the United States. Suppose the goods arrive at New York, how are you going to ascertain these different elements that are specified in this section, when the cargo has come by the way of London—the freight, the actual cost of that specific portion of the cargo from Australia to London, the cost of transshipment? I am told by those who are familiar with the subject that practically it is impossible. It cannot be done. Experience and the convenience of trade, therefore, all testify in favor of the rule that has been adopted; and, as the Senator from Maine this morning reminded us, it has been frequently recognized by the courts of justice. That is my objection to the second section.

Then comes the third section, which proposes a tax of 20 cents on philosophical apparatus and instruments imported for the use of colleges and literary societies. I do not wish to debate that, but the Senate will remember that that was adopted only by a majority of one; and I wish to have another vote upon it. The only way in which I can arrive at the result is by taking these propositions separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SUMNER. On the motion to reconsider the first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire a separate vote on reconsidering each section by itself?

Mr. SUMNER. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then will be on reconsidering the vote by which the Senate adopted the first new section, commencing on page 43.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will now be on reconsidering the vote by which the second section was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now will be on reconsidering the vote by which the last section was adopted.

Mr. BUCKALEW. That relates to philosophical instruments, I believe.

Mr. SUMNER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. I merely wish to make one remark. I do not certainly wish to protract the discussion at this late hour; but I must say that I think the proposition is not creditable to our country, and I think if adopted it will be mischievous. That is the way it impresses me. I cannot see it otherwise. It is to me a tax on education, and as such odious to an extent which I am hardly willing to characterize. Because we are engaged in a war at this moment, I find no reason in our imposing a tax on education. Let us tax everything else, tax luxuries, tax necessities, but do not tax education. As I said this morning, if need be rather give to it bounty.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 9, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Harlan, Hendricks, McDougall, Morgan, Powell, Sprague, Sumner, and Wilson—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harris, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Ramsey, Richardson, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cardie, Chandler, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Riddle, Sausbury, Sherman, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—21.

So the motion to reconsider did not prevail.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That before any invoice shall be certified by a consul, vice consul, or commercial agent of the United States as is required by the first section of an act entitled "An act to prevent and punish frauds upon the revenue, to provide for the more certain and speedy collection of claims in favor of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, samples of the goods embraced in such invoice shall be deposited with such consul, vice consul, or commercial agent, except where from the nature of the goods such deposit is impracticable.

The Senate is aware that by the act referred to in the amendment triple invoices are now required to be made before our consuls in Europe. It is a very important function of the consuls indeed, and it has proved to be a very important check upon frauds; but in order to complete its efficacy as a check, something more is needed. Our indefatigable and very able consul in Paris has anticipated the proposition by requiring, so far as he could, the deposit of samples at his consulate, and by that deposit he has in several cases been able to verify the invoices and to detect frauds. But certain of the large merchants, very anxious to avoid that check, have repaired to some of the consuls out of Paris in order to get their invoices authenticated; those consuls not requiring the deposit of samples. My object is simply to put into the law that requisition, so that it shall be applicable to all our consuls, and so that no great merchant in Paris, or in Lyons, or wherever he may be, by repairing to a consul in a smaller place can evade it. The Senate will see at once that if the consul has the samples at hand when he is going over the invoice, he has almost a certain check.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have heard something about this, and it was suggested to me this morning, but so late that with the attention I was compelled to give the bill before the Senate it was impossible for me to look into it. I think it may be as well to adopt the amendment, and it will then be open so that it can be considered by a committee of conference and looked into further. I will not make any objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. There is another point to which I wish to call attention. On page 38, section thirteen, with reference to rice, I propose to insert between lines sixty-eight and sixty-nine an intermediate class of rice. The proposition as it is now stands thus: "On rice cleaned and uncleaned, 2 cents per pound. On paddy 1 cent per pound." In point of fact there is an intermediate rice which is known as "cargo or uncleaned rice," intermediate between the two specified in the bill. I propose, therefore, to insert between the two the words, on "cargo or uncleaned rice, 1½ cent per pound."

Mr. FESSENDEN. "Uncleaned" in the first line covers that. "Rice cleaned and uncleaned, 2 cents per pound."

Mr. SUMNER. It is not so considered by those in the trade. I have had a telegraphic dispatch in regard to it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know they desire to make a distinction, but the committee on examination thought it best to put them both under the same classification.

Mr. SUMNER. If the committee have had their attention called to it, of course I defer to them entirely, but I have in my hand a telegraphic dispatch.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Telegraphic dispatches are a very unsafe reliance.

Mr. SUMNER. "I see that in the Senate amendment rice is 2 cents, and paddy is 1 cent, without any intermediate grade. I insist upon an intermediate grade called cargo." That is from a person engaged in the business.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Undoubtedly they would like to have the distinction made. The committee were satisfied it was best to leave it as it is.

Mr. SUMNER. If the attention of the committee has been drawn to it, that is enough. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SUMNER. On page 30, line twelve of section ten, "nickel" has been struck out from the group of articles taxed 20 per cent. ad valorem. I do not understand what has governed the committee precisely in regard to "nickel," for I do not find it anywhere else in the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is in the former bill, and the committee thought it was not necessary to raise the duty on nickel.

Mr. FOSTER. The duty was so high that we could not coin cents from it as it stood.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It will operate very hard to raise the duty. It is used largely in manufactures.

Mr. SUMNER. If the attention of the committee has been called to it I shall not make any motion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly if our attention had not been called to it we should not have moved to strike it out.

Mr. SUMNER. What is the duty in the old bill?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Ten per cent.

Mr. SUMNER. My informant, who is a gentleman who is interested in it very much, and also has given a good deal of attention to it scientifically, tells me that it ought to pay a specific duty of 50 cents a pound.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That would be destroying a very large class of manufactures for the benefit of one establishment.

Mr. SUMNER. I had proposed to move on the subject of nickel, but the explanation of the Senator discourages me. If the committee have considered it carefully, of course I shall not proceed any further in regard to it.

Mr. HARRIS. I propose an amendment which, if I understand its effect, will add more than a million dollars to the revenue. It is in the article of brimstone on page 31, line twenty-nine of section eleven. There is a duty of $6 a ton according to the bill as it comes from the House of Representatives. I propose to strike out "$6 per ton" and to insert "2 cents per pound."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will say that the duty on brimstone is just double what it was before. It was $3 a ton before and we now make it $6.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand that this is an article that is not produced in our own country, that it is used chiefly, eight tenths of the quantity imported is used for the manufacture of sulphuric acid, and that if we put a duty of 2 cents a pound on brimstone it will add less than a cent a pound to the article of sulphuric acid, and it will not be oppressive at all to manufacturers. Another portion of it, perhaps one tenth of the article, is used in manufacturing blasting powder. A pound of brimstone will make eight pounds of blasting powder. It will add very triflingly to the price of powder. In this way we may make the importation of brimstone from Sicily, which is now more than 30,000 tons a year, if we put, as I think we may without injuring anybody, without making it burdensome, a duty of 2 cents a pound on it, pay a revenue of $1,500,000 without anybody feeling it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was only $1,000,000 a moment ago.

Mr. HARRIS. I said "more than a million." I now say "a million and a half." I do not know that there is any very great discrepancy in these two statements. If the chairman of the Committee on Finance can see it, I submit to the criticism. I think we can get more than $1,000,000. I am not sure about it; I do not intend to press it; but I think it well enough for the Senate to adopt it, and the committee of conference can consider it.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator proposes $40 instead of $6 a ton.

Mr. HARRIS. What harm is that? The thing has been overlooked.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was discussed in the other House, and a motion was there made in regard to it.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not know what the other House did about it, but it was not discussed in the Finance Committee, I believe.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. If we can get $1,000,000 out of it I think we ought to try it. I make the motion.

Mr. SPRAGUE. This article of brimstone is used almost exclusively in large quantities in the bleacheries of the country, and I can say to the Senator from New York that the bleachers in his State will find a great deal of fault with his proposition. They are able to get but a very small pittance for bleaching; the price is reduced to almost nothing; and if you increase the duty on the article which enters almost exclusively into that business you will, in my opinion, destroy their efficiency.

The amendment was rejected—ayes nine, noes not counted.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I wish to offer an amendment on page 21 in reference to cotton, and before I move the amendment I will say to the Senate that cotton is sent from New York to France and to England, and in many cases it is brought back. Now, I suppose it is not the intention of the Committee on Finance to tax cotton already taxed, of American production. Therefore I would suggest whether after "cotton" in line five of section six the words "not of the growth of the United States" ought not to be introduced. If there is no objection I move that amendment. I hope it is not the intention of the Senate to tax this cotton when it is once taxed by the Treasury Department, and then when it goes to England and comes back, owned perhaps by the same party.

Mr. GRIMES. What do they take it to England for?

Mr. SPRAGUE. They send it constantly to England as they send it to Boston from New York, or from Boston to New York as there may be a scarcity in New York or Boston. It is not the intention of the Government, it seems to me, to tax cotton that has once paid a tax to the Government of the United States of 2 cents a pound, using the argument of the Senator from Maine, and then when it comes back to the country to tax it 2 cents more. I offer the amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 7, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Dixon, Hale, Harris, Sprague, Sumner, and Wilson—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morgan, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—21.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. I propose to try the brimstone again. I move to strike out "$6 per ton" and insert "1 cent per pound."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is $20 a ton.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is an enormous increase of duty on a raw material.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is an article I understand that we can just as well as not get revenue from, and I hope we shall get it.

The amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 14, noes 13.

Mr. HARRIS. This amendment requires that the next line should be amended: "brimstone in rolls." I move to strike out "$10 per ton" and insert "1½ cent per pound."

Mr. WILSON. Call it "1 cent."

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to that. I so modify the amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It makes it the same as the other.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. The article of chicory is provided for on the 32d page. There is a good deal of that article brought into this country. It pays now a revenue of about $250,000. Here is 120 per cent. on the present rate of duty, which is 2 cents on the root and 3 cents a pound when ground. The bill proposes to charge 4 cents a pound on the root and 5 cents a pound on the ground. It is too much. Those engaged in the business—there are but few—say they cannot sustain themselves with that duty. I propose, therefore, to strike out "4," so as to charge a duty of 3 cents a pound on the root instead of 2, as it is now, and 4 cents a pound on it ground instead of 3, as it is now.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to amend the amendment by increasing it 2 cents a pound above what the committee report, instead of reducing it, as the Senator proposes. This is one of the articles imported into this country and used solely for the purpose of misrepresentation and deception. After having been imported and prepared it is passed upon the people who finally consume it in the shape of coffee, or called coffee, and as a question of morals as well as of political economy, I think it is the interest of the Government and of Congress to tax it as high as possible.

Mr. DIXON. I ask the Senator from Iowa if he knows what the plant is.

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir, I know what it is. I know, too, the word "chicory" cannot be mentioned without bringing to their feet several Senators who live in the neighborhood of some of these ground-coffee men. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIXON. I will inform the Senator that I doubt whether he knows what it is. It is our ordinary dandelion root, neither more nor less. It is a more healthy article than coffee, would be healthier for the Senator to drink, and make him better-natured and more civil. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) I want to call the attention of the Senate to this article for a moment, and if they will look into the chemistry of common life, they will find this article mentioned as an article of all articles subject to adulteration, as showing the tricks of the trade. The coffee grinder adulterates his coffee with chicory; the chicory vender adulterates his chicory with venetian red; and the venetian red man puts in brick-dust to make it weigh, and then it is all sold as chicory or coffee. If that article cannot pay 4 cents a pound and we drink it, perhaps the duty had better be struck down.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I withdraw mine.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. POWELL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McDougall. There are several gentlemen who propose to discuss this bill, I am advised, and that they may be able to do so conveniently, I move that the Senate do now adjourn. The motion was not agreed to.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, resulted—yeas 22, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Wilson—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Hendricks, McDougall, Powell, and Richardson—5.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—22.

So the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 286) to repeal the commutation clause of the enrollment act.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. I want to take up the bill so as to have it the order of the day for to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I do not.

The motion of Mr. HALE was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 17, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. CHANNING.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN moved to dispense with the reading of the Journal.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER proceeded, as the regular order of business, to call the committees for reports of a private nature.

HANNAH LANDER.

Mr. PRICE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported adversely on the claim of Hannah Lander, and the papers in the case were laid upon the table.

REPRESENTATIVES OF ABRAHAM LIVINGSTON.

Mr. PRICE, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of the legal representatives of Abraham Livingston, and the same was laid upon the table.

RICHARD CHENEY.

On motion of Mr. HALE, the Committee of Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Richard Cheney, and the same was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

J. AND O. P. COBB AND CO.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, joint resolution of the House (No. 89) for the adjustment of the claim of J. & O. P. Cobb & Co., of Indiana.

The joint resolution authorizes the Quartermaster General to examine and adjust the claim of J. & O. P. Cobb & Co., of Indiana, for losses sustained by them on the 11th and 12th of July, 1863, by the destruction by military orders of their barges and other vessels employed in the shipment of hay to Memphis, Tennessee, under contract with the Government of the United States, and the hay on board of said vessels, which was being shipped by the said firm in fulfillment of said contract, and other property connected with and being used in the fulfillment of said contract, said property having been burnt or destroyed by United States gunboat No. 33, and the Quartermaster General is directed to allow the claimants the value of said property, not exceeding $11,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to call the previous question; but before doing so I ask that the report be read.

The report was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that demand.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will for a moment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. From the reading of the report it would appear that this is one of that class of cases to which I think the House ought not to give its sanction at this time. It seems to be a claim for the destruction of property by a gunboat on the Ohio river. It is for hay which had not been delivered to the Government. It was to have been delivered at Memphis, Tennessee, and then the Government would have been obliged to pay for it; but before it got there it was destroyed by a gunboat, and hence the case comes within the ordinary damages of war.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the House will not misapprehend the character of this claim. If it is understood, I have not a shadow of doubt that the House will approve of it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman is committed to the principle of this resolution by his vote in the Armes case.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not consider the Armes case as being at all involved in this matter. These gentlemen contracted to deliver hay at a certain point on a certain day. They had got the hay already loaded in the barges ready for shipment.

General Boyle, at Louisville, Kentucky, ordered the destruction of the barges and hay by gunboat No. 33 in order to prevent them from falling into the hands of Morgan in his raid through Indiana and Ohio. Here are barges worth, say $5,000, which these men had obtained for the purpose of carrying out their contract with the Government to deliver hay at Memphis. They had on board about six thousand dollars' worth of hay which they had purchased, when, on the 11th or 12th of July of last year General Boyle, for the purpose of preventing these barges from being used by the rebels, ordered them to be destroyed.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask the gentleman from Indiana this question: suppose this property had fallen into the hands of General Morgan, would the Government have been liable to pay for it?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think not; but it would not have fallen into the hands of the rebel General Morgan. It was destroyed by our own gunboats.

Mr. HIGBY. I understand that, but I understand also that it was destroyed for the purpose of preventing it from falling into the hands of the rebel General Morgan.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true, certainly. There can be no misapprehension about the facts. These gentlemen had a contract with the Government to deliver hay at Memphis at a certain time and for a given price; and they did finally fulfill their contract, though in the mean time the price of hay had risen largely.

General Boyle, falsely as the facts finally proved, believed it was necessary to destroy all the boats on the Ohio river between Louisville and Madison, Indiana, and ordered the destruction of all of them. The gunboats did destroy many boats, and especially these barges containing hay which these parties had contracted to deliver to the Government at a certain price. I think if any case could possibly be presented carrying strength with it this is that case. I cannot imagine how any gentleman can controvert it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana how the case before us differs in the obligation resting upon the Government from a case which might be supposed where these parties had contracted to deliver at Memphis hay to private parties? There was no obligation resting upon the Government there until the hay had been delivered. The parties entered into this contract knowing the liability there was to interference on the river from the public enemy, and they took that risk.

Now, if we pass this bill we establish a principle which lays open the Treasury of the Government to every party whose property has been destroyed by the operations of the Army. These persons, to be sure, did contract with the Government, but they had no claim upon the Government until the contract had been fulfilled, which would not occur until the delivery of the hay at Memphis. It was destroyed, I admit, while on its passage, by order of the Government, to prevent its falling into the hands of the public enemy. But if it had fallen into the hands of the public enemy the gentleman himself admits these parties would have no claim upon the Government.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit me to ask him how these parties could deliver this property to the Government when it was destroyed on its way by the order of the Government?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky how it would have been possible for persons to deliver property on its way to private parties in Memphis if it was destroyed by the Government for the purpose of preventing it from falling into the hands of the public enemy? What I say is that these parties have no better claim against the Government than other parties whose property was destroyed on the Ohio to prevent its falling into the hands of the public enemy.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is the most remarkable case I ever heard of; and the suggestions of the gentleman from Massachusetts are as remarkable. Why, sir, if this contract had been between private parties, the Government would have been bound to reimburse them for property destroyed by the order of its officers. The gentleman will not pretend to deny that.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not assume that a private party who should destroy the property of another is not liable. If this contract had been between two private parties, and the Government, having no relation with either, had been put to the necessity of destroying the property, I ask whether they could make a claim on it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will admit that if I contract to deliver a lot of hay or anything else at a given point, and the party with whom I contract prevents the completion of it, he is liable. He is liable if he destroys the property himself. I cannot see any possible good ground of objection to the claim; and I trust, Mr. Speaker, it will not be presumed by any gentleman that I would favor the passage of a bill for the appropriation of money except upon some reasonable ground. When these parties contracted in the month of May they had no reason to apprehend difficulty about the shipment of hay to Memphis. They purchased barges, loaded them, and were ready to make the shipment of hay in accordance with their contract. General Boyle, on the part of the Government, destroyed all the craft between certain points, and among them these barges.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. What was the amount of property destroyed upon the Ohio river during that raid? If this bill passes, for how many millions will it be a precedent?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is not much in that.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. There is much in it. Gentlemen are not disposed to vote taxes or appropriations of money, and all these things ought to be looked to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I agree with the gentleman on all these points. When we come to examine the amount of property destroyed on the Ohio river during this raid and the Kirby Smith raid, we find it will not reach more than thirty or forty thousand dollars. Boats were destroyed for a distance of some sixty or seventy miles from Louisville to a point above Madison on the Ohio river. The claims before the Committee of Claims will not exceed $5,000 beyond what we believe has been suffered by these parties. I think that I may say the whole liability growing out of the destruction of property on the Ohio river during the Morgan raid will not exceed $20,000. I am sorry that it amounts to so much. I speak from my knowledge of the claims before the Committee of Claims. This amounts to $13,500, taking the hay at the price the Government was to pay and deducting the charge for transportation. We have reduced it to $11,000, very unjustly I think, but that is the determination of the committee. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 72, nays 59, not voting 51; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Angona, Bailly, Baxter, Beaman, Blair, Bliss, James S. Brown, Chandler, Coffroth, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Ganson, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Law, Le Blond, Long, Mallory, Marey, McDowell, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller, Moorhead, James R. Morris, Amos Myers, Nelson, Noble, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Smith, John B. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweet, Thomas, Wadsworth, Ward, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Windom, Fernando Wood, and Woodbridge—72.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Dawes, Deading, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Fenton, Garfield, Higby, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Julian, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, McIndoe, Samuel F. Miller, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Morrison, Orth, Perham, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Thayer, Tracy, Upton, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Williams, Wilder, and Wilson—59.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Anderson, Arnold, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blaine, Blow, Brooks, William G. Brown, Clay, Cox, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Henry Winter Davis, Dumont, English, Farnsworth, Frank, Gooch, Grider, Grinnell, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Hulburd, Jenckes, Kasson, King, Knapp, Lazear, Littlejohn, McAllister, Leonard Myers, Norton, John O'Neill, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Edward H. Rollins, Scheick, Scott, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Stevens, Voorhees, Webster, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—51.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARCHIBALD CRARY.

Mr. STILES, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims a bill for the relief of the heirs at law of Colonel Archibald Crary; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

B. D. WILLIAMS.

On motion of Mr. HALE, the Committee of Claims were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of B. D. Williams for pay as Delegate from the Territory of Colorado; and the same was referred to the Committee on Territories.

AMASA L. BURNES.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Amasa L. Burnes; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE CALVERT.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee of Claims; reported a bill for the relief of George Calvert; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PETER WHEELER.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee of Claims, reported a joint resolution for the relief of Peter Wheeler; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HALE. I ask to have the bill put upon its passage now. It is a small claim, involving only about fifteen dollars, and about which there is no dispute.

The bill, which was read, directs the Commissary General of Subsistence to audit and allow the accounts of Peter Wheeler for beef furnished to the third regiment of the Excelsior brigade as per certificate of Lieutenant Fry, and approved by General Sickles, the same having been disallowed in consequence of the destruction of Lieutenant Fry's papers by the enemy, from which it became impossible to present the claim.

Mr. HALE demanded the previous question. The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EGBERT A. THOMPSON.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Egbert A. Thompson; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

POST ROUTE BILL.

Mr. ALLEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill to establish certain post roads; which was read a first and second time by its title, and postponed until to-morrow morning.

ARMY NEWS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
June 17, 1864, 9 o'clock a. m.

Sir: The following dispatches have been received by this Department:

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA, June 15,
via JAMESTOWN ISLAND, 5.30 a. m. June 16, 1864.
Smith with fifteen thousand men attacked Petersburg this morning. General Butler reports from his observatory near Bermuda Hundred that there has been sharp fighting, and that the troops and trains of the enemy were, as he writes, moving across the Appomattox as if retreating. Hancock is not near enough to render General Smith any aid. The Richmond papers have nothing to indicate a suspicion of our crossing the James river. They expect to be attacked from the direction of Malvern Hill.

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA,
June 15, 1864, 7.30 p. m.

Our latest report from Smith was at 4.04 p. m. He had carried a line of intrenchments at Beatty's House, the colored troops assaulting and carrying the rifle-pits with great gallantry, but he had not yet carried the main line. He describes the rebel artillery fire as very heavy. He expected to assault this line just before dark. Hancock is within three miles of Smith.

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA, 7 a. m., June 16, 1864,
via JAMESTOWN ISLAND, 11.45 a. m.

At 7.30 p. m. yesterday, Smith assaulted and carried the principal line of the enemy before Petersburg, taking thirteen cannon, several stands of colors, and between three and four hundred prisoners. This line is two miles from Petersburg. Hancock got up and took position on Smith's left at 3 a. m. to-day. There was heavy firing in that direction from 5 to 6. No report yet.

DONTHARD LANDING, VIRGINIA,
1 p. m., June 16, 1864.

After sending my dispatch of this morning from the heights southeast of Petersburg, I went over the conquered lines with General Grant and the engineer officers. The works are of the very strongest kind, more difficult even to take than was Missionary Ridge, at Chattanooga. The hardest fighting was done by the black troops. The forts they stormed were, I think, the worst of all. After the affair was over, General Smith went to thank them and tell them he was proud of their courage and dash. He says they cannot be exceeded as soldiers, and that hereafter he will send them in a difficult place as readily as the best white troops. They captured six out of the sixteen cannon which he took. The prisoners he took were from Beauregard's command. Some of them said they had just crossed the James above Drury's Bluff. I do not think any of Lee's army had reached Petersburg when Smith stormed it. They seem to be there this morning, however, and to be making arrangements to hold the west side of the Appomattox. The town they cannot think of holding, for it lies directly under our guns. The weather continues splendid.

CITY POINT, VIRGINIA, June 16, 1864, 4.15 p. m.,
via JAMESTOWN, 11.45 p. m.

General Butler reports from Bermuda Hundred that the enemy have abandoned the works in front of that place. His troops are now engaged in tearing up the railroad between Petersburg and Richmond.

The following dispatch does not designate the hour, but it is supposed to be later than the preceding ones:

JAMESTOWN, VIRGINIA, June 16, 1864.

I came down from the pontoon above Fort Powhatan with dispatches for Secretary Stanton. Just as I left Captain Pilkin reported to me that Petersburg was in our possession.

Nothing of a recent date has been heard from General Sheridan, but the Richmond Whig of the 15th contains a dispatch from General Lee stating that Sheridan had been routed in an engagement with Fitz Lee and Hampton, losing five hundred prisoners, and leaving his dead and wounded on the field.

From General Sherman, a dispatch dated last night at 9 p. m., has been received. It only states the relative position of the forces. No serious engagement had yet occurred.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX, Speaker House of Representatives.

The reading of the communication was followed by loud applause on the floor and in the galleries.

REBELLION LOSSES.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, a bill (H. R. No. 212) to provide for ascertaining and adjusting claims against the Government for injury or destruction of property by the Army of the United States, or by military authority, during the present rebellion.

Mr. HALE. It will be recollected that this bill was before the House some two months ago. It was printed, and I suppose it has been examined by the members of the House. A bill substantially like this was first referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee reported favorably upon it to the House.

This bill is well understood by the members of the House. It is an important bill. It contains no appropriation of money. It provides merely for an investigation of claims arising against the Government for property destroyed by the Government during this war, and the facts are to be reported to Congress. It does not include any claims for slaves, nor are the claims of any disloyal men to be included. A man must prove his loyalty before his claim can be considered. Commissioners are to be appointed to take testimony on both sides, and report it to Congress, so that Congress can act intelligently. The bill does not commit Congress to the appropriation of any money. It merely provides for perpetuating the testimony in relation to these claims, and I think the justice and fairness of the bill will commend it to every member of the House. It is a well-known fact that a considerable amount of property has been taken by the Government from loyal citizens for its own use, and has been either destroyed or consumed. We have by express enactment taken away from the Court of Claims jurisdiction in these cases. It therefore becomes necessary that we should create some tribunal where these claimants can be heard, and it seems to me that it is not only wisdom and sound policy but strict justice that we shall at least give to loyal citizens who have lost property by the action of the Government permission to prove their claims before commissioners appointed by the Government.

This bill authorizes the commissioners to take testimony on both sides, and provides that there shall be a solicitor to cross-examine the witnesses for the claimants, and to subpoena and examine witnesses in behalf of the Government. Now, it is a well-known fact that the Committee of Claims are obliged to act very much in the dark in such cases, and in many instances it is impossible for us to get at the truth of a case. We have to rely on ex parte testimony. The Government is not represented, and there is no opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses. The object of this bill is to obviate that difficulty and provide for a fair hearing on both sides, so that Congress may know the true state of the case, and be able to act intelligently. It seems to me that now, when the witnesses are still in existence, and the facts are fresh in their recollection, it is certainly the proper time to ascertain the facts, in order that at some future time we may do justice not only to the claimants but to the Government.

These are the principal features of the bill now before the House. Unless some gentleman desires to oppose the bill, I shall move the previous question. I would not do it but for the fact that the bill has been printed and has been discussed heretofore, and its provisions are known to the members of the House.

Mr. FENTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to whom these commissioners are to report.

Mr. HALE. They are to be appointed by the President.

Mr. FENTON. To whom are they to make their reports?

Mr. HALE. To the Secretary of War.

Mr. FENTON. Does the bill provide that the Secretary of War shall from time to time submit their reports to Congress?

Mr. HALE. It does.

Mr. FENTON. Is this bill substantially the same as the bill reported by the Committee of Claims of the last Congress?

Mr. HALE. It is the same bill with some modifications.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The bill which the last House of Representatives defeated.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. FENTON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania give way to me for a moment?

Mr. HALE. What does the gentleman desire?

Mr. FENTON. I desire to make a proposition. I will take no advantage of any courtesy the gentleman may accord to me.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not propose to call the previous question on a bill of this magnitude.

INTERNAL REVENUE BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I want the unanimous consent of the House that a small amendment may be made in the internal revenue bill before it goes to the committee of conference, to define what "pea coal" means. We have not defined it at all in the bill, and I understand that great frauds have been practiced by parties returning as "pea coal," which is exempt from tax, what they afterwards sell as "chestnut coal," which is an article that is taxed.

I simply want to insert a provision that coal which will pass through a five eighths and over a three eighths inch mesh shall be considered as pea coal. That is what it ought to be; that is the way they define it in the trade; but there being no legal definition, they are taking advantage of the fact to defraud the Government. I ask the unanimous consent, therefore, to insert after the word "ton," in the fourteenth line, page 184, the words "that can pass through a five eighths and over a three eighths inch mesh shall be considered pea coal."

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he cannot at the same time put in a sentence fixing the weight of a ton at two thousand pounds instead of the long ton of two thousand two hundred and forty pounds. I have conversed with the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the subject, and I think there is a concurrence between us as to the propriety of that provision.

Mr. STEVENS. I am afraid there will be objection to that. I ask the unanimous consent to introduce the amendment I have suggested.

There being no objection, the amendment was received and adopted.

Mr. PRUYN. I desire to ask a question in relation to one feature of this tax bill, whether there is any provision or reservation in favor of State licenses?

Mr. STEVENS. That is provided for.

Mr. PENDLETON. If the gentleman will turn to page 91 of the bill, he will find this provision:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be held or construed so as to prevent the several States, within the limits thereof, from placing a duty, tax, or license, for State purposes, or any business matter or thing on which a duty, tax, or license is required to be paid by law, nor shall any law of any State or Territory prohibiting any trade, business, or profession, be held to exempt or excuse any person following or being engaged in any such trade, business, or profession, from the payment of the license tax herein required.

Mr. PRUYN. That covers the ground.

Mr. MORRILL. Since the attention of the House has been directed to this matter, I desire the unanimous consent of the House to make another slight amendment in the tax bill. The six hundred and twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate, which the House has concurred in, contains this provision:

And provided further, That no direct tax whatever shall be assessed or collected under this or any other act of Congress heretofore passed, until Congress shall enact another law requiring such assessment and collection to be made.

This provision applies not only to the loyal States but to the rebel States, and would prevent the Government at any future time from collecting this first direct tax which has not been assessed or collected in the rebel States. I think that was not the object of the House, and for the purpose of reserving the power of modifying the amendment so as to leave the Government at liberty to collect this first tax in the rebel States, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to non-concur in this amendment.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

Mr. WILSON. I ask my colleague to withdraw his amendment for a moment, until I can make a suggestion. I request the gentleman from Vermont to ask the unanimous consent of the House to concur in the amendment of the Senate, reserving the right to collect the direct tax authorized by the act of 1861 in the States in which it has not been collected.

Mr. MORRILL. I will so modify my proposition, and I hope there will be no objection to it. Mr. HOLMAN. I must object. It is impossible to understand its effect.

Mr. MORRILL. I will explain the effect of it. The language of the repealing clause goes too far, and repeals the direct tax not only in the loyal States but in the disloyal also, where it has never been assessed or collected. Now, what I propose is merely to concur in the amendment of the Senate, reserving the right to collect the tax in the rebel States.

Mr. HOLMAN. For fear of misunderstanding, I shall have to insist on my objection.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Indiana for a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I say to the gentleman from Iowa that I shall not for the present give my consent to that amendment.

REBELLION LOSSES—AGAIN.

Mr. FENTON. I desire only to say that I am in favor of the object of this bill, but I am not in favor of all the methods provided for carrying it out. I therefore ask that sections one and two of House bill No. 401 of the last Congress as reported by the Committee of Claims may be substituted for sections one and two of this bill. The bill will then receive my cordial assent. My reasons for these changes are these: the bill of last Congress proposed three commissioners and one solicitor, at a salary in gross of $12,000, with authority to hold their courts in the different States or localities where it might be found necessary. The present bill provides for five commissioners, with different districts, ten officers in all, with a salary in gross of $25,000. I desire to avoid this large number of officers and of commissioners. I believe that the business should be intrusted to one general commissioner, with authority and under direction to report to the Secretary of War, as provided in this bill, and for him to submit such reports to Congress from time to time. I therefore have to suggest to the Committee of Claims that this bill will receive a larger support and be more generally satisfactory in my judgment if the amendments which I propose are accepted. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he will accept the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania cannot accept the amendments, as the bill is a report from the committee.

Mr. FENTON. I did not wish to take the floor from the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move these amendments without his consent. If he desires to renew the demand for the previous question, of course I will not offer the amendments; but if he does not I will.

Mr. HALE. I am not authorized by the Committee of Claims to accept the amendments suggested by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FENTON. Will the gentleman yield the floor to me that I may move the amendments?

Mr. HALE. I do not believe that they would be an improvement on the bill. We have made these districts as small as we thought they should be made, so as to have the law efficient. They comprise a large extent of territory, quite too large already; and if we should make the districts larger there would be nothing done under the bill. The committee has considered the bill very carefully; and I hope the gentleman from New York will not press his amendments.

Mr. FENTON. I have no doubt that this whole subject should be under one general commission. I am opposed to this division of labors, and in favor of that uniformity which should characterize the decisions of the commissioners.

Mr. WILSON. I desire the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me that I may suggest two or three amendments to the first section of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I will hear them.

Mr. WILSON. I propose to amend the first section by inserting the word "loyal," so as to make it read, "and one commissioner and one solicitor for those loyal States not included in the foregoing districts." As the section now stands the commissioners will have jurisdiction of all the rebel States, of claims of citizens of all the States in rebellion.

Mr. HALE. The gentleman will see by the last section of the bill that the provision is entirely confined to loyal citizens. Now, a loyal man may be in a rebel State, and may lose his property in a rebel State.

Mr. WILSON. I only want to ascertain the intention of the committee, whether they intend to have the jurisdiction of the commissioners extend to all the rebel States as well as the loyal.

Mr. HALE. Certainly. I ask, why should not a loyal man residing in a rebel State be paid for his losses as well as a loyal man elsewhere?

Mr. WILSON. I do not desire to argue the question now.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HALE] cannot yield the floor unless he yields it unconditionally. He has brought in a bill of eight printed pages, and proposes to put it through under the previous question, holding the floor at his own option. Now, unless he yields the floor entirely, I object to his yielding it at all.

Mr. FENTON. If the gentleman yields the floor unconditionally, I will claim it.

Mr. WILSON. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania objects to my amendment, I desire to suggest another.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. It is to insert after the word "President" in the first section the words "not being residents of the district for which they are appointed," so that it will read:

Who shall severally hold their respective offices during the pleasure of the President, not being residents of the district for which they are appointed.

The object is to have persons entirely disinterested to act as commissioners.

Mr. HALE. I have not the least objection to that amendment.

Mr. WILSON. With the gentleman's permission I will suggest another amendment to which I think no one will object, and that is after the word "salary," in the sixteenth line, first section, insert "at the rate of;" and in the seventeenth line after the words "per annum" the words "for the time actually employed;" so that it will read:

That there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one commissioner and one solicitor of claims for the district composed of the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, the District of Columbia, and Virginia; one commissioner and one solicitor for the district composed of the States of West Virginia, Ohio, and Indiana; one commissioner and one solicitor for the district composed of the States of Tennessee and Kentucky; one commissioner and one solicitor for the district composed of the States of Illinois, Missouri, and Kansas; and one commissioner and one solicitor for those States not included in the foregoing districts, who shall severally hold their respective offices during the pleasure of the President, and be entitled for their services to a salary at the rate of $2,500 each per annum for the time actually employed, to be paid quarterly out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and such other sums as shall be necessarily and unavoidably expended by them for stationery and office rent in the discharge of their duties under this act, and certified as reasonable by the Secretary of War or First Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the gentleman from Iowa offering his amendment, but it will amount to nothing. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WASHBURN, of Illinois; and HALE, law, were appointed.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 50.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved that the bill be laid upon the table.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 73, not voting 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Chandler, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Daves, Deeming, Dixon, Eckley, Farnsworth, Fenton, Higby, Ashel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Loan, McClurg, McIndoe, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Anos Myers, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, John H. Rice, Schenck, Seaford, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Stevens, Thayer, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Williams, Wilison, and Woodbridge—57.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Anderson, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Bliss, Blow, Boyd, Cravens, Cresswell, Dawson, Denison, Driggs, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finch, Frank, Ganson, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Law, Lazear, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McAllister, McDowell, Middleton, William H. Miller, Moorhead, James R. Morris, Morrison, Leonard Myers, Noble, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scott, Smith, John B. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Thomas, Wadsworth, Ward, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Windom, and Fernando Wood—73.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Clay, Coffroth, Cox, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, Eliot, Garfield, Gooch, Grinnell, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Hooper, Jenckes, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knapp, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, Nelson, Norton, John O'Neill, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Robinson, Edward H. Rollins, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Sweet, Tracy, Voorhees, Webster, Wilder, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—53.

So the House refused to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Wilson and BLAIR were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 48.

So the vote by which the previous question was seconded was reconsidered.

The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CRAVENS and FENTON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 65.

So the House refused to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. FENTON moved to strike out the following:

That there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one commissioner and one solicitor of claims for the district composed of the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, the District of Columbia, and Virginia; one commissioner and one solicitor for the district composed of the States of West Virginia, Ohio, and Indiana; one commissioner and one solicitor for the district composed of the States of Tennessee and Kentucky; one commissioner and one solicitor for the district composed of the States of Illinois, Missouri, and Kansas; and one commissioner and one solicitor for those States not included in the foregoing districts, who shall severally hold their respective offices during the pleasure of the President, and be entitled for their services to a salary of $2,500 each per annum, to be paid quarterly out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and such other sums as shall be necessarily and unavoidably expended by them for stationery and office rent in the discharge of their duties under this act, and certified as reasonable by the Secretary of War or First Comptroller of the Treasury.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That each of said commissioners shall appoint a clerk for his district, who shall hold his office during the pleasure of said commissioner, and perform such duties as may be required of him under this act, who shall receive a salary of $1,600; and the commissioner may from time to time employ a marshal, at a compensation of four dollars per day for the time actually employed by said marshal in subpoenaing witnesses for the United States, and for such other duties as may be required of him by the commissioner, which salary to the clerk, and compensation to the marshal, shall be paid quarterly, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the certificate of the commissioner. And said commissioners, solicitors, clerks, and marshals shall each take and subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully discharge the duties of their respective offices, and shall, in addition, take and subscribe the oath of allegiance required by the act of Congress passed August 6, 1861, which oaths shall be filed in the War Department.

And in lieu thereof insert the following:

That there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, three commissioners and one solicitor of claims, who shall hold their offices during the pleasure of the President, and be entitled for their services to a salary of $3,000 each per annum, to be paid quarterly out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and such other sum as shall actually be expended or incurred by them for traveling expenses in the discharge of their duties under this act, and certified as reasonable by the Secretary of War, or First Comptroller of the Treasury. Each of said commissioners and solicitor, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, shall take and subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully discharge the duties of said office; and shall also take and subscribe the oath of allegiance required by the act of August 6, 1861; which oath shall be filed in the War Department.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That said commissioners shall appoint a clerk and marshal, who shall hold their offices during the pleasure of said commissioners, and perform such duties as may be required of them under this act. The clerk shall receive a salary of $1,600 and the marshal a salary of $1,000 per annum, to be paid quarterly from the Treasury; and in addition the amount which they shall actually expend for traveling expenses in the discharge of their duties under this act, and which shall be certified as reasonable by the Secretary of War, or First Comptroller of the Treasury. Before entering upon the discharge of their duties, said clerk and marshal shall each take and subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully discharge the duties of said office, and shall in addition take and subscribe the oath of allegiance required by the act of Congress passed August 6, 1861; which oaths shall be filed in the War Department.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move, by unanimous consent, to insert in the repealing section in reference to the direct tax the following:

But this shall not be construed to repeal or postpone the assessment or collection of the first direct tax levied or which should be levied under the act entitled "An act to provide increased revenue from imports, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1861, nor in any way to affect the legality of said tax or any process or remedy provided in said act or any other act for the enforcement or collection of the same in any

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate have passed a bill (H. R. No. 217) to confirm certain entries of land in the State of Missouri, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

REBELLION LOSSES—AGAIN.

Mr. FENTON. The gentleman from Iowa appeals to me to allow him to offer an amendment. I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. WILSON. My first amendment is to insert in line thirteen of the first section of the bill the word "loyal" before the word "States."

The section, as proposed to be amended, will read as follows:

That there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one commissioner and one solicitor of claims for the district composed of the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, the District of Columbia, and Virginia; one commissioner and one solicitor for the district composed of the States of West Virginia, Ohio, and Indiana; one commissioner and one solicitor for the district composed of the States of Tennessee and Kentucky; one commissioner and one solicitor for the district composed of the States of Illinois, Missouri, and Kansas; and one commissioner and one solicitor for those loyal States not included in the foregoing districts, who shall severally hold their respective offices during the pleasure of the President, and be entitled for their services to a salary of $2,500 each per annum, to be paid quarterly, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and such other sums as shall be necessarily and unavoidably expended by them for stationery and office rent in the discharge of their duties under this act, and certified as reasonable by the Secretary of War or First Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. FENTON resumed the floor.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to say a word in reference to that amendment.

Mr. SMITH. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will be permitted to give his reasons for offering that amendment.

Mr. FENTON. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. WILSON. It will be remembered that when this bill was pending some time ago it was first referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, having been attached as an amendment to a bill reported from the Judiciary Committee, and which was recommitted to the committee. That committee considered the bill and agreed upon a report, which was made some time since by the gentleman from Maryland. The bill which was reported was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The amendment which I have now offered was one of those which were agreed upon by the Judiciary Committee. The other amendments I shall indicate as I have an opportunity; and in submitting them I but represent the wishes of the Judiciary Committee, to whom the House referred the whole subject, and which made the report to which I have referred.

The object of this amendment is to confine the taking of testimony in relation to these claims against the Government to States which have not been in rebellion against the United States, and which have not passed an ordinance of secession. I think it is fair to allow testimony to be taken only in relation to claims belonging to citizens of States which have not been in rebellion against the United States, reserving other claims to some other time. I hope the amendment will be concurred in by the House. I desire also to offer another amendment to this section.

The SPEAKER. The only way in which that can be done is by calling the previous question upon the pending amendment.

Mr. FENTON. I call for the previous question.

Mr. THOMAS. I would like to say a word or two.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the demand for the previous question will be insisted on, as the bill has already occupied much time, and there is other pressing business before the House.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is called, not upon the bill, but upon the pending amendment.

Mr. FENTON. I take great pleasure in yielding to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall occupy less time than the gentleman from Indiana does upon any occasion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the gentleman from New York entitled to control the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can yield for an explanation of the matter.

Mr. FENTON. I yield for an explanation.

Mr. THOMAS. That is what I desire to make.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order. It is that the gentleman from New York is not entitled to the floor. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HALE] controls it.

The SPEAKER. There have been several votes since the gentleman from Pennsylvania was upon the floor. When he demanded the previous question he lost the right to the floor. The Chair knows no rule by which a gentleman, after he has demanded the previous question, can be entitled to the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. I simply want to remind the gentleman from New York, who in good faith, I believe, is disposed to apply the law to the parties intended to be affected by this bill, precisely in the same temper and in the same spirit in which Congress has acted in reference to another class of claims—I will remind that gentleman that in the last Congress and in the present Congress we had under consideration a bill intended to remunerate the people of Minnesota and Iowa for depredations committed by Indians in their inroad into that section of country, and we appointed a commission for that one section of territory. Not only so, but that measure passed both branches of Congress without the slightest manifestation of opposition or unfriendliness.

Mr. WILSON. Will my colleague on the committee allow me to make one suggestion?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly, although I dislike the system of interrupting speakers.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest that the act in relation to the Minnesota claims provided that the money should be paid out of funds belonging to the Indians and forfeited by them.

Mr. THOMAS. I am aware of that, but that is a matter which is easily susceptible of explanation.

Mr. WILSON. I merely state the fact.

Mr. THOMAS. There is no man who was in the last Congress or who is in this who is not cognizant of that fact. I admit that in the case of Minnesota provision was made for a forfeiture of the amount of money due by the Government of the United States to the tribes of Indians by whom the depredations were committed, but who will contend that that amount of money will cover the amount of claims which we have if in contemplation to pay? That is the question. Have we provided that the fund of which we deprive the Indians shall be distributed pro rata among the claimants? No, sir; we have authorized the commissioners to examine into the extent of the depredations committed, not only by the Army of the United States, but by the enemy. This bill contemplates no provision for the immense amount of plunder to which the people have been subjected by the enemy in their invasions.

But, sir, if it was really the intention of Congress that no money should be taken from the national Treasury for the purpose of liquidating those claims in Minnesota, why does it not appear on the face of the bill? Why not in the practice of the Government? Have we not paid the claimants in Minnesota as far as we have gone dollar for dollar? Is there any proposition in that case to pay pro rata; to wait until a certain aggregate amount of claims is ascertained and then apportion the whole amount of the money of which you have deprived the Indians among the claimants? No, sir, no such policy has been adopted. No gentleman who is at all cognizant of the facts will pretend for a moment that it was the design of Congress to limit the payment to the amount of money forfeited by the Indians. You have appointed three commissioners for that small territory, a part of Minnesota and of Wisconsin, and you intend no limitation upon the amount you intend to pay, as an honest Government ought to pay every dollar of these claims, no matter what they may amount to. No gentleman can state with accuracy what the amount of those claims will be, but I have seen it stated in the newspapers of the country that the amount will exceed $5,000,000, while the money forfeited by the Indians will not be more than $2,500,000.

A large amount was appropriated last year and again this year, already far beyond the amount of the fund reserved for the Indians.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. THOMAS. I hope the gentleman will permit me to proceed without interruption. I never interrupted any gentleman in the Halls of Congress in my life. I have always regarded it as one of the first rules of politeness never to interrupt a gentleman.

Mr. WINDOM. I did not suppose the gentleman would desire to misstate a fact; I merely wished to correct him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland declines to yield the floor, and is entitled to proceed without interruption.

Mr. THOMAS. I mean no discourtesy to the gentleman from Minnesota, nor any personal application of the remark I made. One word more and I have done; and I should not have detained the House as long as I have but for the interrogatory proposed to me by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.] I simply wish to remind the gentleman from New York, who, I believe, has recognized the duty as obligatory upon the Government, resting in vested obligations which no nation on the face of the earth has ever repudiated, that to establish a single tribunal for the investigation of the claims arising out of these depredations would make it physically impossible during the lifetime of the present generation to discharge that duty. The area over which it is proposed these commissioners shall have jurisdiction covers more than one half the territory of the loyal States as we now stand. He proposes that these three commissioners shall perform this duty in Missouri, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Maryland, Tennessee, and West Virginia. I repeat that it is physically impossible for any three gentlemen to perform that labor within the lifetime of a generation. I say, therefore, to the gentlemen representing the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee of Claims that if they intend in good faith to recognize as binding and obligatory on Congress to pay these claims whenever the Government is able to pay them, it is nothing more than reasonable that the number of commissioners to be appointed for the purpose of making these investigations should be as large as provided for in the bill before the House. I have now said all I intended to say, which was merely to respond to the gentleman from Iowa. I simply desired to assert the principle in respect to the obligation of this Government, which I have done.

Mr. FENTON. I think sufficient has been said upon this matter. The House is getting tired of this discussion, and I must insist upon the demand for the previous question upon the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, after which I will submit my own amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from New York that if he demands the previous question he cannot hold the floor.

Mr. FENTON. Then I must demand the previous question on both of the amendments.

Mr. HALE. I desire to say a word upon this amendment to insert the word "loyal" before the vote is taken upon it, and I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for the previous question for that purpose.

Mr. FENTON. I can hardly refuse to allow the chairman of the committee which reported the bill to speak if he desires, and I will therefore withdraw the demand and yield to him if he will state the time he wishes to occupy.

Mr. HALE. I think I ought to have one word on the subject of this amendment. I do not want two minutes.

Mr. FENTON. Very well, I will yield the floor to the gentleman for two minutes.

Mr. HALE. The provision contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is already substantially in the bill. His amendment provides for loyal States. The bill provides for loyal men. I do not know what the term "loyal States" means exactly, and, as I understand it, I think the gentleman will find it very difficult to explain what it means. We know what is meant by loyal men; the term is understood everywhere. Now, I submit to the gentleman from Iowa that when we make the advantages of the bill apply only to loyal men we ought not to go further. I see no reason why a true loyal man who lives in a disloyal State is not entitled to at least as much consideration as a man living in a loyal State.

Mr. WILSON. I will suggest to the gentleman that I see no particular difficulty in describing the meaning of "loyal State." I should say that where a State, by its legal authorities, has engaged its people in rebellion against the authority of the United States, that State is not a loyal State.

Mr. HALE. The gentleman from Iowa says any State that has adopted an ordinance of secession. How would he regard the State of Tennessee? What would he do with the property of Andrew Johnson?

Mr. WILSON. There is a provision by which he puts Tennessee in a special district.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. He then provides in a special provision that all the other States shall be in another district to be presided over by another commissioner.

Mr. HALE. What does the gentleman mean by loyal States—those which did not adopt the ordinance of secession?

Mr. WILSON. It will not include Tennessee.

Mr. HALE. We did not believe there were many men in the disloyal States who were loyal, but undoubtedly there are some. I suggest to the gentleman that the provision he proposes to put in is already in the bill. They must be loyal men before their claim can be considered.

Mr. FENTON demanded the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. MALLORY demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 70, nays 61, not voting 51; as follows:

Davis, Dixon, Briggs, Dumont, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Herick, John H. Hubbard, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knapp, Littlejohn, McKinney, Middleton, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Norton, Odell, John O'Neill, Patterson, Perry, William H. Randall, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Strouse, Sweet, Voorhees, Webster, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—51.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON moved to insert after the words "and one commissioner and one solicitor for those States not included in the foregoing districts, who shall severally hold their respective offices during the pleasure of the President," the words "not being residents of the district for which they were appointed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON moved to insert in the first section the words "at the rate of" and "for the time actually employed," so that these officers shall only be paid for what they do.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question then recurred on Mr. FENTON's amendment.

Mr. FENTON demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. MALLORY demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 70, not voting 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Beaman, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Elliot, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Gooch, Higby, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburt, Ingersoll, Julian, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Longyear, Marvin, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomerooy, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Schofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Thayer, Tracy, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Williams, Wilson, and Woodbridge—53.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Alley, Ancona, Anderson, Bailey, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Blow, Boyd, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chandler, Freeman Clarke, Cravens, Creswell, Dawson, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Grider, Hale, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Hotchkiss, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Lazear, Loan, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McAllister, McClurg, McDowell, McDougl, Middleton, William H. Miller, Morrison, Noble, Charles O'Neill, Perry, Price, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scott, Smith, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Thomas, Wadsworth, Ward, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilder, Windom, and Fernando Wood—70.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Arnold, Baxter, Blaine, Bliss, William G. Brown, Clay, Coffroth, Cox, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Denison, Briggs, Dumont, Eckley, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Herick, Holman, Hooper, Hutchins, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knapp, Law, Le Blond, Littlejohn, McBride, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, James R. Morris, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Norton, Odell, John O'Neill, Pendleton, William H. Randall, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stevens, Sweet, Upson, Voorhees, Webster, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—59.

So the amendment was rejected.

During the roll-call,

Mr. WILSON stated that Mr. ECKLEY was paired off with Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio.

Mr. MALLORY moved to reconsider the vote last taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to offer an amendment to the fourth section.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to offer one to the third section.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to offer an amendment to the first section, and I do not want to lose my right by passing by that section.

The SPEAKER. The House has not yet passed by any section.

Mr. FARNSWORTH offered the following amendment to be added to the fourth section:

And shall also prove by the testimony of disinterested and competent witnesses the extent of his, her, or their loss, and the value of the property taken or destroyed; and the commission shall have power in addition to cross-examine the claimant or claimants upon any matter or thing stated in his, her, or their account.

And shall also prove by the testimony of disinterested and competent witnesses the extent of his, her, or their loss, and the value of the property taken or destroyed; and the commission shall have power in addition to cross-examine the claimant or claimants upon any matter or thing stated in his, her, or their account.

And shall also prove by the testimony of disinterested and competent witnesses the extent of his, her, or their loss, and the value of the property taken or destroyed; and the commission shall have power in addition to cross-examine the claimant or claimants upon any matter or thing stated in his, her, or their account.

And shall also prove by the testimony of disinterested and competent witnesses the extent of his, her, or their loss, and the value of the property taken or destroyed; and the commission shall have power in addition to cross-examine the claimant or claimants upon any matter or thing stated in his, her, or their account.

And shall also prove by the testimony of disinterested and competent witnesses the extent of his, her, or their loss, and the value of the property taken or destroyed; and the commission shall have power in addition to cross-examine the claimant or claimants upon any matter or thing stated in his, her, or their account.

And shall also prove by the testimony of disinterested and competent witnesses the extent of his, her, or their loss, and the value of the property taken or destroyed; and the commission shall have power in addition to cross-examine the claimant or claimants upon any matter or thing stated in his, her, or their account.

And shall also prove by the testimony of disinterested and competent witnesses the extent of his, her, or their loss, and the value of the property taken or destroyed; and the commission shall have power in addition to cross-examine the claimant or claimants upon any matter or thing stated in his, her, or their account.

Mr. THAYER. I suggest that that provision is already contained in the ninth section.

Mr. MALLORY. I rise to a point of order. It is that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois adds nothing new to the bill. Everything contained in the amendment is in the bill now.

Mr. SPEAKER. That may be a good reason for voting against the amendment but not for ruling it out of order by the Chair.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The bill provides that the claimant only shall make oath. The bill does not require him to prove by any other person anything except his title and the extent of it. It is important that a provision should be adopted requiring the claimant to prove the extent of his loss and the value of the property taken.

Mr. HALE. I would call the attention of the gentleman to the eighth line of the ninth section of the bill.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I inadvertently overlooked the fact that the provision in the last clause of my amendment is already in the bill, and I therefore modify the amendment by striking out the last clause.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read as it now is.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

And shall also prove by the testimony of disinterested and competent witnesses the extent of his, her, or their loss, and the value of the property taken or destroyed.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. There is no provision of that kind in the bill. It is suggested that I should also modify the amendment by inserting after the word "disinterested" the word "loyal."

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. The gentleman's amendment requires that the witnesses shall be disinterested. Now, I apprehend that in most of the States interest does not disqualify a witness, and I do not think it should.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I prefer to have it just as it is, "disinterested, loyal, and competent."

Mr. HOTCHKISS. This bill provides for the examination and cross-examination of the claimants, and of all parties who know anything upon the subject. I do not object to requiring that the witness shall be loyal, for I do not think a disloyal man is a competent witness; but to say that a man who is interested in a matter shall not be allowed to testify is an exploded theory in this country. It is not the rule in many of the States.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. FARNSWORTH,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. FARNSWORTH called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BRANDEGEE and Mr. SCOTT were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-six—a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 66, nays 59, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Elliot, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Gooch, Higby, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburt, Ingersoll, Julian, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, McDougl, Samuel F. Miller, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Pike, Pomerooy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Schofield, Sloan, Smithers, Stevens, Thayer, Tracy, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—66.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Ancona, Anderson, Bailey, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Brooks, Chandler, Dawson, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Grider, Hale, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hotchkiss, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McDowell, Middleton, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, Perry, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scott, Smith, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Thomas, Wadsworth, Ward, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, and Fernando Wood—59.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Arnold, Blaine, Bliss, Blow, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Denison, Dumont, Eckley, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Herick, Hutchins, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Kernan, King, Knapp, Littlejohn, McAllister, McBride, McKinney, James R. Morris, Norton, Odell, John O'Neill, Patterson, Pendleton, Radford, William H. Randall, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Shannon, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Sweat, Upson, Voorhees, Webster, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—57.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE resumed the floor.

Mr. WILSON. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me to offer another amendment which has been agreed to by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE. I will hear it.

Mr. WILSON. It is to add to the fourth section the following proviso:

Provided further, That no testimony shall be taken under the provisions of this act until the claimant shall have taken, subscribed, and filed with his claim the oath prescribed by the "act to prescribe an oath of office," approved July 2, 1862, except so much of said oath as relates to the discharge of the duties of office, and every person who shall falsely take said oath under the provisions of this act shall be liable to the penalties prescribed by said act of July 2, 1862.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WILSON. I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. As I understand it, the House has adopted an amendment to the first section, inserting the word "loyal" in the thirteenth line.

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. GARFIELD. If gentlemen will read the thirteenth and fourteenth lines they will see that the result of that amendment will be to appoint one commissioner and one solicitor for each of those loyal States not included in the "foregoing districts." That is, it appoints a solicitor and a commissioner, with all their clerks, for the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Iowa, Michigan, and other States in which no damages of this character have accrued; in other words, we shall have all these officers appointed for districts where there is no business whatever. I think that ought to be amended.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that the Delegate from New Mexico states there are a large amount of claims existing in that Territory, and that the bill should be made to apply to Territories as well as to States. I intend offering that amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to have stricken out of the first section the words "and one commissioner and one solicitor for those States not included in the foregoing districts."

Mr. HALE. Those words include the States of Iowa and Minnesota, where there are claims of this character.

Mr. WILSON. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio that there are claims coming from his own district every day.

Mr. GARFIELD. My own State comes within the third district.

Mr. WILSON. Then the gentleman wants to cut out other States, so that they shall not derive any benefit at all from the act.

Mr. GARFIELD. The bill, as drawn, is considered as including every State where there are claims.

Mr. HALE. I desire the gentleman from Ohio to designate his amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD repeated the terms of his amendment.

Mr. HALE. I cannot agree to that.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move the previous question on my amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I did not understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania as yielding for the purpose of having that amendment offered.

Mr. HALE. I did not yield.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair cannot entertain the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HALE. I only yielded to have the amendment read.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have an amendment to offer to the third section.

Mr. HALE. I will yield to hear it read.

Mr. GARFIELD. My amendment is to strike out the words "or by any" and insert "acting under legal;" so that it will read:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That said commissioners shall severally have cognizance of all claims against the United States arising in their respective districts, and which shall be presented to them by any person who, during the present rebellion, has sustained, or may sustain, damages by injury to or destruction of any property which has been or may be injured or destroyed by the use or occupation of the Army of the United States, or of any division or portion thereof, acting under legal military authority.

Mr. HALE. I will suggest an amendment which I think will cover the ground—to insert the word "competent," so that it will read "by any competent military authority."

Mr. GARFIELD. I think that will answer the purpose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Ohio to offer his amendment?

Mr. HALE. No, sir; but he will accept the modification which I offer.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the object can be accomplished by striking out the words "or any;" so that it will read, "by competent military authority." My reason for introducing the amendment is this: as the section now stands, the Government might have to pay for damages done by the rebel army; for it reads, "or by any military authority." I want that so changed as that the Government can only be called upon to pay for damages done by our own Army.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he thinks that the action of the rebels would be construed as being "by military authority" as against the United States?

Mr. GARFIELD. Most certainly it would not be.

The question was taken on Mr. GARFIELD's amendment as modified by Mr. HALE; and it was rejected.

Mr. BEAMAN. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HALE] has the floor. When he surrenders the floor that motion will be in order.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent to correct the sentence by inserting the word "thereof;" so that it will read, "by any competent military authority thereof."

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield for an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. HALE. I will yield to hear it read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object.

Mr. HALE. I have another amendment to offer. It is to insert after the words "United States," in the thirty-fourth line of the fourth section, the words "and that he has presented all his just claims arising under this act against the United States."

Mr. GARFIELD. The object of that is to prevent claimants bringing up other claims afterwards.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire a vote on his amendment?

Mr. HALE. I do.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman will lose his right to the floor.

Mr. HALE. Then I do not insist on a vote. [Laughter.] I wish to move another amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I make the point of order that there is one amendment pending now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw that amendment. I move to amend the first section by inserting after the word "States" the words "and Territories."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call for a division on that amendment.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw the amendment. [Laughter.] And now I will hear the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me the floor.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor. When he surrenders it that motion will be in order.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania agrees to offer the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOUTWELL's amendment was read, as follows:

And provided further, That no inference shall be drawn from this act that the Government of the United States is liable to pay any of the claims that may be presented as herein provided; but said claims shall stand, in all respects, as to the liability of the Government, as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to that.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I object.

Mr. HALE. I am in favor of the amendment, and I think it should be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HALE] can move it himself.

Mr. HALE. Unless the Chair should recognize me again, I would not be entitled to the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to bargains. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair can make no bargain with the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to who shall be recognized. The gentleman is now in possession of the floor for the second time today.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I object to his yielding for that purpose.

Mr. HALE. I move the amendment, and I move the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. BEAMAN. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. MALLORY. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion. I want a record on this first step in the road of repudiation.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 50, nays 74, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Allison, Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Chanler, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Eden, Eliot, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Gooch, Higby, Asahel H. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Longyear, McDowell, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Morrison, Orth, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Robinson, Schenck, Sloan, Smithers, Stiles, Thayer, Tracy, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Wilson, and Woodbridge—50.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Alley, Ancona, Anderson, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brooks, Broomall, Coffroth, Cravens, Creswell, Denison, Driggs, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Grider, Grievold, Hale, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Loan, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McBride, McClurg, McDowell, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Amos Myers, Noble, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scott, Smith, John B. Steele, Strouse, Stuart, Thomas, Wadsworth, Ward, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilder, Windom, and Fernando Wood—74.

So the bill was not laid on the table.

The question being on seconding the demand for the previous question on the engrossment of the bill,

Mr. WILSON called for tellers.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Before putting the question on that motion the Chair will state that if the House now adjourns the evening session which has been set apart for the business of the District of Columbia will not be held.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 48, nays 83, not voting 51; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. William J. Allen, Ancona, Ashley, Baxter, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chandler, Freeman Clarke, Dawes, Deussen, Dixon, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Fenton, Gooch, John H. Hubbard, Hulbard, Ingersoll, William Johnson, Kabbelsch, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, LeBlond, Loan, Longyear, McIndoe, Morrison, Amos Myers, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Pike, Pruyn, Radford, John H. Rice, Robinson, Schenck, Sloan, Smithers, Stiles, Strouse, Thayer, Tracy, Eliza B. Washburne, and Williams—48.

NAYS.—Messrs. James C. Allen, Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Bailey, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Beaman, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Coffroth, Cole, Gravens, Creswell, Dawson, Donnelly, Driggs, Eliot, English, Finck, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Grider, Hale, Harding, Charles M. Harris, Higby, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Philip Johnson, Julian, Kernan, Lazenar, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McBride, McClurg, McDowell, Middleton, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Leonard Myers, Pendleton, Price, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scott, Smith, John B. Steele, Stevens, Stuart, Sweet, Thomas, Upson, Wadsworth, Ward, William B. Washburn, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilder, Wilson, Window, Fernando Wood, and Woodbridge—83.

NOT VOTING.—Messrs. Arnold, Blaine, Bliss, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Clay, Cox, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Deming, Dumont, Eckley, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Hutchins, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knapp, Littlejohn, Marvin, McAllister, McKinney, James K. Morris, Nelson, Noble, Norton, John O'Neill, Patterson, Perlman, Perry, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Edward H. Rollins, Seaford, Shannon, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Yeaman—51.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. HARRINGTON stated that he had paired with Mr. DEMING, of Connecticut, on all questions affecting the bill before the House, and as this vote might incidentally affect it, he would decline to vote.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 290) for the relief of Rhoda Wolcott;

An act (H. R. No. 521) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of the claims of Peruvian citizens under the convention between the United States and Peru of the 12th of January, 1863," approved June 1, 1864;

An act (H. R. No. 227) granting lands to the State of Michigan for the construction of certain wagon roads for military and other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 47) for the relief of Rev. W. B. Matchett.

REBELLION LOSSES—AGAIN.

The question being on seconding the demand for the previous question, on which tellers had been demanded, tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WILSON and STROUSE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, nays 48.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays on ordering the main question.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The main question was ordered—ayes 68, nays 24.

The question being put on the amendment submitted by Mr. HALE, on the suggestion of Mr. BOUTWELL, 68 voted in the affirmative and 24 in the negative.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HALE moved the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. LE BLOND called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CRESWELL. I move that the House adjourn immediately after the roll-call on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether that motion will be in order. The gentleman may, if he desires it, move to extend the session after half past four o'clock.

Mr. CRESWELL. I make that motion.

Mr. STEVENS. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion. We have set apart to-night for the consideration of the business of the District of Columbia, and I want to see whether we will break faith with that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, so that the House may understand it, what will be the condition of this bill if the House do now adjourn or take a recess. The main question having been ordered on its passage, should the House adjourn it will come up immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning, and should the House not adjourn but take a recess, inasmuch as to-night has been devoted to the business of the District of Columbia by unanimous consent, that business will take precedence, and this bill will still go over till to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to inquire whether this party opposition is to defeat the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer the question put in that way.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is there not a special order for to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The business of the Committee on Naval Affairs is assigned as a special order after to-morrow morning. During the morning hour the Pacific railroad bill is the business in order. The morning hour, however, will not commence until after the disposal of this bill should it go over to-day's session.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman to postpone his motion for half an hour.

Mr. CRESWELL. As that seems to be the pleasure of the House, I withdraw my motion for half an hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BLAINE. What will be the effect of an adjournment?

The SPEAKER. This bill will come up to-morrow in the morning hour, and there will be no evening session.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, nays 61.

Mr. ANCONA demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ANCONA, and Rice of Maine, were appointed.

During the division, the hour of half past four having arrived,

The SPEAKER announced that, under the order of the House, the House would take a recess until half past seven o'clock, p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House, at half past seven o'clock, p. m., resumed its session.

CALIFORNIA LANDS.

Mr. HIGBY. I move, by unanimous consent, to take up the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 179, concerning lands in the State of California, in order that they may be concurred in. They are immaterial amendments, and will give rise to no debate.

There was no objection, and the amendments were taken up and severally concurred in.

Mr. HIGBY moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ROAD TO LAKE SUPERIOR.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent to take up the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 247, granting lands to the State of Wisconsin to build a military road to Lake Superior, in order that the amendments may be concurred in. The amendments were read.

Mr. BROOKS. I object. I think the amendments ought to be referred to a committee of this House.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER stated that this evening was set apart for the consideration of business relating to the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know whether we are entitled to the morning hour for the Pacific railroad bill. I ask the gentleman from New York, [Mr. STEELE,] who is chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia, whether he will not have enough time after the morning hour for his business? I think he will, and I ask him to yield to me to call up the Pacific railroad bill.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The House will resume the consideration of the Pacific railroad bill, on which the gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I have no further remarks to make.

The question recurred on the following amendment submitted by Mr. HOLMAN:

And said road shall be a public highway, and shall transport the property and troops of the United States, when transportation of them shall be required, free of toll or other charge.

Mr. STEVENS. I have examined very carefully, as any gentleman may do, the original charter of this company, and it was granted on condition that the railroad shall at all times give the preference to the United States at a reasonable rate, which is to be credited on the bonds. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA. In the absence of the gentleman from Indiana I demand a division.

Mr. KERNAN. There is not a quorum present. It was the general understanding that District of Columbia business would be considered this evening. I know gentlemen who would be here if they thought this bill would come up, as they have amendments to offer to it.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I suggest that the bill be postponed until we dispose of the District business. We will not occupy more than an hour.

Mr. STEVENS. With the understanding that it will come up when this business is disposed of, I do not object.

It was so ordered.

ENTRIES OF LAND IN MISSOURI.

Mr. HALE, by unanimous consent, moved to take up and concur in the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 217, to confirm certain entries of land in the State of Missouri.

The bill was taken up, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALEXANDRIA AND WASHINGTON RAILROAD.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back House bill No. 514, to amend an act to extend the charter of the Alexandria and Washington railroad, and for other purposes, passed March 3, 1863, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read.

Mr. DRIGGS. The bill provides for steam power through this city, and I would like to have further time to consider it.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I withdraw the report for the present.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back Senate bill No. 54, to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read.

The several amendments recommended by the Committee for the District of Columbia to the bill of the Senate were agreed to without division, with the exception of the seventh amendment, which was reported as follows:

Strike out the following proviso at the end of the fourth section:

Provided, That there shall be no regulation excluding any person from any car on account of color.

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio. Will it be in order to move an amendment to perfect the clause before the vote is taken upon striking it out?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio. I move to amend by adding to the proviso the following:

But the said company may place cars upon said route, indorsed on the outside of same in large letters, "White persons admitted."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. No objection to that.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the words "provided they are sober."

Mr. UPSON. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it in order to move an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio?

The SPEAKER. It is not, as one amendment to the amendment is already pending.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I want to move to include also the members from Iowa. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. And the member from Wisconsin too. [Laughter.]

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The amendment offered by Mr. PRICE to the amendment of Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio, was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment as amended.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it in order now to move my amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The House was divided on the amendment; and there were—ayes 28, noes 33, no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio, and Mr. PRICE.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. It is evident there is no quorum here, and I suggest that we take up some other matter with which we can proceed.

Mr. STEVENS. There is a quorum here if they are only sober. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. They are all in the condition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. STEVENS. Then they are all right.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to inquire as to the effect of this vote. If we adopt this amendment does it admit white men provided they are sober, and drunken negroes?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer the question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. White men sober, and negroes drunk?

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported—ayes sixteen, noes not counted.

So the amendment as amended was not agreed to.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I demand the yeas and nays on agreeing with the recommendation of the committee to strike out the proviso.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was put; and there were—yeas 38, nays 45, not voting 99; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ancona, Baily, Augustus C. Baldwin, Brooks, James S. Brown, Coffroth, Dawson, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Grider, Harding, Charles M. Harris, William Johnson, Kernan, Lazear, Long, McDowell, McKinney, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, Noble, Robinson, Rose, Scott, Smithers, John B. Steele, Stiles, Thomas, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, and Joseph W. White—38.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alley, Ames, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Boutwell, Broomall, Cobb, Cole, Dawes, Dixon, Briggs, Eckley, Eliot, Gooch, Hale, Higby, Asabel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Orlando Kellogg, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, Anos Myers, Charles O'Neill, Patterson, Perham, Price, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Stevens, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Wilder, Wilson, and Windom—45.

NOT VOTING.—Messrs. William J. Allen, Allison, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, Blair, Bliss, Blow, Boyd, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Chandler, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cox, Cravens, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Hulburt, Hutchins, Jenckes, Philip Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knapp, Knox, Law, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Mallory, Marcy, McAllister, Middleton, Morrill, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Norton, Odell, John O'Neill, Orth, Pendleton, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Prunty, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Schenck, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Williams, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—99.

During the roll-call, Mr. DAWES stated that Mr. HOOPER was paired off.

Mr. McBRIDE stated that he was paired off. No quorum having voted,

Mr. J. C. ALLEN moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I suggest that we take up some other business, and take another vote upon this hereafter.

The SPEAKER. No business can be transacted until a quorum appears.

Mr. BLAINE. If the House adjourns now will this come up as unfinished business to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It will, as the previous question has been sustained on it.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw the motion to adjourn, that I may ask the House to set another day for the consideration of District of Columbia business.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I will do so.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I ask the House to assign some other time for District of Columbia business.

Mr. BLAINE. Say Monday evening.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I will ask for Wednesday evening.

The SPEAKER. The same objection exists to that as did to passing to other business, from the fact that no quorum is present.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I renew my motion to adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] that there be a call of the House will now be in order if on an actual count a quorum shall not be found in their seats. The Chair will count the House.

The SPEAKER proceeded to count the House, and ascertained that there were only 91 members present, being 1 less than a quorum.

The question was taken on Mr. BLAINE's motion; and it was agreed to.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The roll was accordingly called; when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. William J. Allen, Allison, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, Bliss, Boyd, Brandegee, Chandler, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Grinnell, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Hulburt, Hutchins, Jenckes, Philip Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Knapp, Law, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Mallory, Marcy, McAllister, Middleton, Morrill, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Norton, Odell, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Prunty, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Robinson, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Schenck, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman.

A quorum having now appeared,

Mr. ANCONA moved that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

So all further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The question recurred on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest that this bill be passed over, and that we take up some other bill about which there is no controversy.

The SPEAKER. That can be done now by unanimous consent. [Cries of "Agreed."]

Mr. STEELE, of New York. There is no objection to that on the part of the committee.

Mr. BLAINE. I object unless this bill, after the other business shall be disposed of, can take the place it now holds in reference to the business of to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. It can if it is passed over by unanimous consent. It will then retain precisely the same position it now occupies.

Mr. BLAINE. Then I make no objection.

The bill was then passed over informally.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I met the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KING] at the depot last evening, and he said that he was going home on account of the illness of his wife. He desired that I should ask leave of absence for him indefinitely, and I now do so.

There being no objection, the leave of absence was granted.

LANDLORD AND TENANT LAWS.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back, with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that it do pass, bill of the Senate No. 138, to regulate proceedings in cases between landlords and tenants in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, and the amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I should like to hear some explanation of this bill. If I understand it aright, it reverses the whole doctrine of tenancy at will. Tenancy at will is by sufferance generally, and without any contract. Now, if I understand the first section of this bill, tenancy at will can never exist except under express agreement. How that can be tortured into tenancy at will, I cannot understand.

There are two or three other provisions in the bill which are utterly at variance with the principles of the common law, and which may be well enough for the landlord, but very hard for the tenant. I think that the bill ought to be fully and thoroughly examined by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I move its reference to that committee.

Mr. WHEELER. One of the amendments reported by the committee for the District of Columbia, and which has been adopted, provides that the first section shall not apply to existing leases or contracts, and persons who contract hereafter and then lease buildings will contract with reference to the law as it then exists. There is no objection to it if it does change the common law rule on this subject.

The other amendments have been prepared simply for the purpose of adapting the proceedings of justices' courts so as to allow a civil remedy in obtaining possession of property. I think there is no necessity for referring this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary. I hope it will be passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the previous question on the motion to refer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if the previous question is ordered it will extend to the third reading of the bill, if the motion to refer should not be agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Very well; let us have the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 217) to confirm certain entries of land in the State of Missouri; when the Speaker signed the same.

WASHINGTON AND ALEXANDRIA RAILROAD.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DRIGGS] objected a short time ago to the passage of House bill No. 514, to amend and extend the charter of the Washington and Alexandria Railroad Company, and for other purposes. He has since examined the bill, and finding that his objections were not well founded is willing to withdraw them. I ask that the bill may be put upon its passage.

Mr. DRIGGS. I desire to state that when I objected to the bill I understood, not having heard it read distinctly, that its object was to extend the privileges of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company instead of the Washington and Alexandria Railroad Company; and I supposed that the right to use steam dummies upon the road was to be independent of any control by the corporation of Washington. I have since read the bill, and finding that I was mistaken in both suppositions, I have no objection to it and hope it will pass.

The bill was passed.

Mr. PATTERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD.

Mr. PATTERSON, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back House bill No. 522, to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, with an amendment in the form of a substitute.

The substitute gives the right to the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company to construct horse railways upon any public highway within the county of Washington, limiting the fare on such roads to ten cents for each passenger, and making the necessary limitations and guards connected with the grant.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PATTERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REVISION OF THE DISTRICT LAWS.

Mr. BEAMAN, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back without amendment Senate joint resolution No. 59, to provide for the revision of the laws of the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution was read. It states that the revised code of the District of Columbia was prepared under the act to improve the laws of the District of Columbia, and to codify the same, approved March 3, 1855, and published by order of Congress in 1857, and it is believed that said code was a comprehensive, complete, and accurate compilation of the laws of the District at the period of its execution, and that measures should be taken to have the work brought down to the present time and perfected; and enacts that the Committees on the District of Columbia of the two Houses of Congress, respectively, be instructed to cause said code to be so revised, amended, and corrected, and also the laws of Congress for said District passed since the compilation aforesaid, as shall adapt the same to the present condition of the laws, and may employ not more than two suitable persons on the preparation of the work at a compensation of ten dollars per day for the time employed; and the code so prepared shall be printed by direction of the committees in a neat and convenient form for the use of the committees and Congress; and the committees shall report the same to their respective Houses at the next session of Congress for adoption.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BEAMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER stated that the business of the Committee for the District of Columbia having been disposed of, the business next in order was the consideration of the Pacific railroad bill.

Mr. STEVENS: I have just learned that the Senate has taken off the duty on railroad iron, which I suppose will enable the Pacific Railroad Company to get their iron so cheaply that no further grant will be necessary. [Laughter.] I therefore move that the bill be postponed till tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the bill will come up in the morning hour at any rate.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well, I move, then, that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at nine o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 18, 1864.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. BOWMAN.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. COLLAMER presented twenty-five petitions, embracing the names of fourteen hundred and eighty-nine citizens of Vermont, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, presented a petition of men and women of Indiana, praying for the abolition of slavery, and such an amendment of the Constitution as will forever prohibit its existence in any portion of the Union; which was referred to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

Mr. FOOT presented three petitions of citizens of Vermont, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the motion to print the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating an abstract of the returns required to be made by banks and associations doing a banking business, as provided by the act of March 3, 1863, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That two thousand additional copies of the abstract of the reports of the banks, associations, corporations, and individuals doing a banking business, made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, communicated to the Senate by the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution passed May 20, 1864, be printed for the use of the Senate.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. TRUMBULL on the 13th instant, that five thousand additional copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution, for 1863, be printed, reported it without amendment; and it was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That five thousand additional copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for 1863 be printed, two thousand for the use of the Smithsonian Institution and three thousand for the use of the Senate: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages contained in said report shall not exceed four hundred and fifty, without woodcuts or plates, except those furnished by the Institution; and that the Superintendent of Public Printing be authorized, if consistent with the public service, to allow the Smithsonian Institution to stereotype the report at its own expense, or to otherwise print at its own expense such additional copies as may be desired, from the type set in the Government printing establishment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a resolution to print one thousand copies of all Indian treaties, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the motion to print the report of the Secretary of the Senate, exhibiting a detailed statement of all payments from the contingent fund of the Senate for the year ending December 6, 1863, reported in favor of printing the same; and the report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DIXON, it was Ordered, That the report of the Secretary of the Senate be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the motion to print the report of Lieutenant Colonel J. H. Simpson, on his explorations across the Great Basin of Utah Territory, to report a resolution on the subject. The report is an exceedingly valuable one, and at some time should be printed; but the cost of it will exceed $100,000, and the committee did not deem it proper to recommend such an appropriation at the present time. They instruct me to report the following resolution, and I ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient at present to print the report of Lieutenant Colonel J. H. Simpson, and that the Secretary of the Senate return the manuscripts, drawings, and maps, now on the files of the Senate, to the chief of the engineer corp for preservation.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the motion to print the message of the President of the United States communicating a copy of the record containing the charges, sentence, judgment, and proceedings in the case of William Yocum, to report in favor of printing the same. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. WILSON. What is the use of printing that?

Mr. COLLAMER. I move that that report lie over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie over if objection be made.

Mr. POWELL. I hope not. It is a very small matter.

Mr. ANTHONY. The cost is very trifling; only some $50.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it must lie over.

Mr. HARLAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 483) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget sound on the Pacific coast, by the northern route, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 466) for the relief of the widow of C. A. Haun, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 86) which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 347) for the relief of Martha Jane Skaggs, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report (No. 87) which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. POMEROY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to bring in a joint resolution (S. No. 68) securing payment to the Delaware and Pottawatomie Indians for lands sold to the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company, now known as the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HARLAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 312) to regulate the compensation of registers and receivers of the land offices in the State of Iowa, in the location of lands by States and corporations under grants from Congress; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 313) for the relief of Henry Rudd; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 314) for the relief of James P. Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 315) in relation to the sale of reservations of the public lands; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOWE. The substance of this bill has been sent to me by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. There are some reservations ordered for sale, and he desires that this bill may be passed at this session, otherwise it will not be in season for those sales. I have shown it to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, and to one other member of that committee in the Senate, and the chairman of the committee on the part of the House of Representatives. They think it is right; and if there is no objection, I should like to have it considered now. It will lead to no debate.

Mr. WILSON. I object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it cannot be considered to-day.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. HAY, his Secretary, announced that he had on yesterday, the 17th instant, approved and signed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 106) to prohibit certain sales of gold and foreign exchange;

A bill (S. No. 129) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the corporation of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, to lay and collect a water tax, and for other purposes," approved May 21, 1863;

A bill (S. No. 216) to grant the right of preemption to certain settlers on the Rancho Bolsa de Tomales, in the State of California;

A bill (S. No. 223) to regulate the foreign and coasting trade on the northern, northeastern, and northwestern frontiers of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 282) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the withdrawal of goods from public stores and bonded warehouses, and for other purposes," approved 29th February, 1864;

A bill (S. No. 285) to regulate the veto power in the Territory of Washington; and

A bill (S. No. 293) to empower the Superannuated Fund Society of the Maryland Annual Conference to hold property in the District of Columbia, and to take a devise under the will of the late William Doughty.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 145) to equalize the pay of soldiers in the United States Army.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following House bills:

A bill (No. 179) concerning lands in the State of California;

A bill (No. 217) to confirm certain entries of lands in the State of Missouri; and

A bill (No. 247) granting lands to the State of Wisconsin to build a military road to Lake Superior.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolutions of the Senate:

A bill (No. 253) to amend the act of 21st December, 1861, entitled "An act to further promote the efficiency of the Navy;"

A bill (No. 270) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish and equalize the grades of line officers of the United States Navy," approved July 16, 1862;

A joint resolution (No. 44) for the relief of the clerks at the Kittery and Philadelphia navy-yards; and

A joint resolution (No. 59) to provide for the revision of the laws of the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (No. 514) to amend "An act to extend the charter of the Alexandria and Washington railroad, and for other purposes," passed March 3, 1863; and

A bill (No. 522) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company.

OVERLAND MAIL.

Mr. COLLAMER. By order of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I reported yesterday morning a joint resolution from the House of Representatives authorizing the Postmaster General to extend the contract with the Overland Mail Company for a year. I suggested then that the value of it depended entirely upon the promptness of action upon it. Unless we can have it passed immediately, it is of no use. I simply wish the Senate to pass upon it, either reject it or allow it, one or the other. I move to take up that joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 93) to authorize the Postmaster General to extend the contract with the Overland Mail Company. It authorizes the Postmaster General, in his discretion, to extend the mail contract, No. 10773, with the present contractors, commonly known as the Overland Mail Company, for the term of one year from the 1st of July next, upon the same terms and conditions with the present existing contract.

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads reported the joint resolution with an amendment, to add the following:

Except as to schedule time, which shall not exceed sixteen days for eight months of the year and twenty days for the remaining four months.

Mr. COLLAMER. Mr. President, the contract of the Pacific Mail Company expires on the 1st of July. By that contract that company receive $1,000,000 a year; but $160,000 of that is taken to pay for carrying the printed matter of that mail by water to California, leaving to them $840,000 for the overland letter mail for the Territories and for California. The Postmaster General, under authority given by law, advertised for bids for this service at the expiration of that contract. The bids were put in, but before they were opened (I believe they were opened the day before yesterday) and decided upon, the inquiry arose whether the bids would not be very extravagant and create the necessity for a very great outlay of money, and the House of Representatives passed this resolution which has been read, authorizing the Postmaster General, in his discretion, to extend the present contract for one year. As I understand, those bids have been opened, and the condition of the matter stands thus: there were four bids put in for the letter mail only, the Postmaster General being now authorized to have the printed matter carried by water at the expense of the Department, not exceeding the $160,000 a year. A Mr. John A. Hiestand bid for this contract at $750,000 a year; the next was Mr. Holaday, at $820,000; the next was Mr. Burbank, at $824,000, and then a Mr. Dinsmore, at $880,000. The lowest bid was that of Mr. Hiestand at $750,000, and as I understand he was declared to be the lowest bidder, and by law the Postmaster General is bound to give the contract to the lowest bidder; but immediately upon declaring that bid to be the lowest, the Postmaster General opened a letter which was at his office, and found that this man withdrew his bid and declined to proceed with it, and thereupon Mr. Holaday claims that he is the lowest bidder at $820,000, which would be about $20,000 less than the present company receives for that service. They receive $840,000. The rest of their pay goes to the steamboat service. There is a dispute and a question of law arising whether in point of fact this lowest bidder at $750,000 withdrew his bid in any regular season, and whether in that state of things he becomes a non-performer; and whether the next lowest bidder is therefore entitled to it remains a question.

The only amendment proposed to this resolution by the committee is one to limit the period of service, that is, the schedule time, to the same that is bid for in these contracts, that is at sixteen and twenty days. At present the time of the company, I believe, is twenty and twenty-three days, but it is proposed to require them to go in sixteen and twenty days, putting them upon the same footing as the present bids. In this condition of things the effect of this resolution if passed would be this: it would leave it optional with the Postmaster General to extend this contract for one year or to accept one of these bids. In the present state of the currency the query is whether it would be advisable to make a contract to extend for four years, or whether it might not be better, in his discretion, to make it for one year. The effect of passing this resolution will be to leave with him and at his discretion either of those courses that he thinks the public service may require.

Mr. President, I have explained the resolution as well as I am able.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to. Mr. NESMITH. If it is in order, I move the indefinite postponement of the resolution.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that will not be done. As has been stated by the chairman of the committee, this resolution has been fully considered by the committee, and it merely proposes to give the discretion to the Postmaster General to let the contract for one year or for four years and to secure the shortest schedule time. The instruction to him is to extend the service to the men who now perform it, and we do not care as to who shall perform it, but that it shall be performed in a certain way and at a given time. I cannot understand any proper motive for its indefinite postponement, and am very much surprised at the motion.

Mr. NESMITH. I am perfectly indifferent as to who shall perform the service, but I am not perfectly indifferent as to the amount of pay which shall be given for it. I have not been able to comprehend the reason for the passage of this resolution in the House of Representatives. There was perhaps at the time of its introduction some reason for it. It was then supposed that the bids which would be put in under the proposals that were invited by the Postmaster General, might be so exorbitant that they could not be accepted. The Government was paying that company $1,000,000 for the performance of this service under a schedule of twenty and twenty-three days. The Postmaster General advertised for proposals to carry the mails upon a reduced schedule of sixteen and twenty days. The House of Representatives then passed this resolution, providing that the Postmaster General may extend the contract under the old schedule, and pay $20,000 more for the service than is provided for under the new schedule at which the contract was let. As I understand, a bid of $830,000 has been received. The chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads states that that company is now receiving $840,000 on a twenty and twenty-three days' schedule. A bid is in, and I apprehend it is within the power of the Postmaster General to accept it, reducing that time four days, making it sixteen and twenty days for the sum of $820,000, $20,000 less than is now paid. Sir, I cannot conceive of any object for continuing the old contract at $20,000 per annum more than parties stand willing to accept it for under the new contract. There seems to be no plausible reason presented why it should be done. It may be left with perfect safety, perhaps, to the discretion of the Postmaster General; but I see no necessity for any such discretion in this case, where the exercise of it is to cost the Government $20,000 per annum.

There is another fact that should be taken into consideration. If this contract is continued at $1,000,000 a year under the old contract the question will be in a year from now whether we shall be any better prepared to get the service at a lower price. Generally the enhanced price of mail contracts results from the depreciation of the currency. I can see no evidence going to show that gold will be any lower in a year from now than it is at present, and I do not apprehend that the Postmaster General will be able to procure the service at any reduced price. I think it better, therefore, that this resolution be not passed, and that the Postmaster General avail himself of the bid that he now has the power to accept to carry the mail for four years at $820,000 with a reduced schedule of four days. The passage of this resolution will in no wise affect the reduced time. It merely increases the expense, and does not reduce the time below what other parties have already put in their bids for.

Mr. CONNESS. A very important consideration in this case has been presented briefly by the honorable chairman of the committee, namely, that at this time we cannot tell what the condition of our finances will be in a year from now. Suppose gold should go up to 300, three for one or four for one, would any mail contractors be able to continue their contracts? Would not Congress be called upon for an additional compensation to the contractors in this case? Is it wise not to place a discretion of this kind in the hands of the Postmaster General? Will he abuse it? Is $20,000 a sufficient sum to avail against placing that discretion in his hands? But sir, I do not wish to continue the debate.

Mr. POMEROY. I agree with what the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has said about this resolution. I believe that when it was introduced into the House of Representatives and passed by them it was eminently proper, because at that time there was great danger that the Government would have to pay an exorbitant price for this service. No one knew what the bids were going to be, and this resolution, therefore, was eminently proper. I do not think now there is much importance to be attached to it, because Benjamin Holaday, who is perfectly able and responsible, is entitled, as I think, and as the law officers of the Government have given their opinion, to this contract at $820,000. I do not know of any reason why there should be any effort to put it into the hands of the old contractors at $840,000. However, as a matter of fact, the contractors either way will be about the same. Benjamin Holaday is a sub-contractor under the old parties, and if he gets the contract they will be sub-contractors under him and run their end of the route. That is all there is to it. He will be the principal where now he is only the deputy. If the resolution does not pass Holaday will get the contract and the Government will save $20,000 a year. I think it is very important that Holaday should have the contract on one account: if he should come here, as the Senator from California suggests, after additional pay, he will not have the sympathy of Congress as a poor man would, or a man who had not the means to carry it on. Holaday has abundant means, and if the Government currency depreciates he will be able to carry it out of his own funds.

As we cannot get any shorter service, as we cannot get any reduced price, and as the contractor runs as much risk as the Government about the currency—I consider they both run about the same risk—I think the Postmaster General ought to let it to the lowest bidder, who is entitled to it under the law. I do not believe that Congress ought to interfere by any legislation, when bids are fairly made upon an advertisement.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I hope this resolution will not be postponed. The object of the resolution is this, to open up this route to competition by bidders. The time between the period when these bids were made and the 1st of July precluded competition, and the result has been that the old contractor has the lowest bid. If you pass this resolution and allow the Postmaster General to let the contract for a year, when that year expires there will be competitors for the route, and the Government will let it at a reasonable rate. I think it would be suicidal to close this contract for four years at the bid that has been declared the lowest at the present opening. I hope that the resolution will pass, and that we shall open this route to competition to the people of Kansas and to the people of other western States, and thereby greatly economize the outlay to the Government.

Mr. POMEROY. My colleague is mistaken in one or two of his statements. This matter has been open some three months. The bids have been in two months, if not three months; I think three months. Mr. Dinsmore bid for the old contractors.

Mr. COLLAMER. The old contractors did not bid at all.

Mr. POMEROY. Dinsmore bid for them.

Mr. COLLAMER. I do not know whether he bid for them or not. I know they did not bid in their own name.

Mr. POMEROY. He is one of them, and the Department understand that it was for them.

Mr. COLLAMER. They withdrew their bid.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Dinsmore, who was the highest bidder at $880,000, bid for the old company. Now, the proposition is to let it to the highest bidder for one year, that is the party who represented the highest bidder, in preference to the man who put in a bid at $820,000, who is now a sub-contractor, and runs two thirds of the road to-day. My colleague is mistaken in saying there has not been competition. This thing has been advertised for three months, and the bids have all been in in the regular way, and been regularly opened and published, and a report of them made to the House of Representatives yesterday. There was nothing secret about it.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I am not mistaken about the statement that I made. The constituents that I represent are not prepared now to bid upon this contract. The temporary rise in the price of stock and labor has prevented that competition which, in my opinion, we shall have at the end of a year. The question presented to the Senate is this: shall we continue this old contractor at $820,000 for four years, or shall we give the Postmaster General the privilege of continuing him for one year at $840,000?

Mr. CONNESS. That is the question exactly.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. That is the question. As far as my constituents are concerned, we want this limitation so that at the end of the year the contract can be let, and they may become competitors and save to the Government, in my opinion, hundreds of thousands of dollars. Should this rebellion be crushed, as I hope and believe it will within that year, two or three hundred thousand dollars will pay for this same service. The idea of agreeing to pay $820,000 for four years with this prospect before us is in my opinion most suicidal, and I hope the opinions and desires expressed by the chairman of our committee may be sanctioned by the Senate and this motion defeated.

Mr. NESMITH. It seems to me the constituents of the Senator from Kansas have had fair notice of this matter. This route has been advertised for some time, and I am at a loss to know how hundreds of thousands of dollars are going to be saved to the Government by delay. Before there was any rebellion, and when gold was paid for the transmission of the overland mail, a million dollars in coin was paid for that service. I do not apprehend that the close of the rebellion within one year is going to raise our paper to such a standard as will enable the contract to be let so much more cheaply as to save to the Government any hundreds of thousands of dollars at all. The probabilities seem to me to be that the currency of the country is liable to become more depreciated. On that, however, I do not pretend to give an opinion. We know that as the war has progressed the currency of the country has become depreciated; and I suppose it will be a fair inference to reason of what may occur in the future from the past. I do not believe there is going to be any such appreciation of the currency as will enable the Government to save a single dollar.

The question is now presented to the Senate whether this contract shall be let to the lowest bidder or whether the Postmaster General shall be authorized to let it to the highest bidder. The present proposition, which comes from the old contractors, is that the Postmaster General be authorized to let the contract, under this resolution, to the very highest bidders. It proposes to give the Postmaster General the discretionary power to give the contract for one year to the highest bidder to the exclusion of the lowest bidder for four years. That seems to me to be a very anomalous condition of affairs, and a reversal of the ordinary mode of proceedings in such circumstances. I do not believe the Government will save a cent by it. I believe that in a year from now you will not be able to get a bid to carry that mail for less than $1,000,000. I am anxious, therefore, that it should be closed at the present pending proposition.

Mr. HALE. I happened to be a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads when this contract was made, and know something about it. I desire to make a short statement in regard to it, and then I will leave it to the Senate.

When this contract was originally made, I think Mr. A. V. Brown was Postmaster General, and the route was run down through Arkansas, instead of going, as the manifest intention of the law was, straight across the country. It was supposed at that time to have been improperly if not corruptly done. At any rate, the contract was made, and the contractors ran it until the symptoms of rebellion began to manifest themselves, and the teams of the parties were seized and it was found impracticable to run it upon the route which was then contracted for. The contractors then came forward and asked to have that contract moved up from the extreme southern route to the route that is now run by this company. A bill was introduced, I think by my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON,] giving these contractors $1,150,000, and the report that was made was that they could not possibly run it short of that sum. I happened at that time, being on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to know that there were responsible parties in this city who were ready to take it for a very much less sum; and finally, I think it was upon my motion in the Senate, the sum was reduced from $1,150,000 to $1,000,000, and they took it. It was represented that it could not possibly be done for that sum; but there were gentlemen in this city at that moment ready to contract for it for a sum much less than $1,000,000. However, such were the representations made to Congress that it was let to them for $1,000,000. They have had it, and carried it, and I suppose received for their pay $1,000,000 per annum.

The fact that I am going to speak of now I do not know of myself; what I have said I know; but I have had it stated to me that in the regular operation of the Post Office laws they have advertised for the letting of this route, and responsible bidders have offered to carry it for $520,000, and they ought to have the contract. These parties have received $200,000 a year for four years more than the Government could have contracted for it at the time they took it, for it could have been let at $800,000 at that time. In the due course of law and the administration of this Department, this contract can be let to responsible parties for $820,000 a year at a less time than the old contractors have it; and instead of closing with that proposition here is an extraordinary proposition made to give these parties this contract for another year at $150,000 more than responsible parties stand ready to take it for.

Mr. COLLAMER. You mean $20,000 more. What they receive is $840,000.

Mr. HALE. They did have $1,000,000.

Mr. COLLAMER. But $160,000 was taken off to pay for carrying the printed matter by water.

Mr. HALE. That I was not aware of. But, sir, why not give it to these parties who have bid for it? Where is the necessity of renewing the present contract?

Mr. CONNESS. My friend from New Hampshire is always very ingenious as well as always able. He says why give $20,000 more for carrying it for a year than you can get it for four years?

Mr. COLLAMER. Carrying it by the year.

Mr. CONNESS. Carrying it by the year for four years at $820,000. I will tell the Senator, and I will speak it to the Senator from Oregon, who ought to be well aware of it and doubtless is. The price at which this contract was originally let, it should be remembered by the Senate, was a price based upon its being carried through an unpopulated country, through a country without roads, without population, without incidental business. To-day the overland route to California is the most profitable and the greatest stage route in the world. The whole route teems with population. New Territories and new States are springing up in every direction. Millions of dollars of treasure are offering to be carried at the highest rates by the parties who are to be paid for carrying the mail, and as it is to-day it offers the best opportunity for a colossal fortune to the parties engaged in it of any other operation under this Government or in this country.

Now, sir, why not give the Government the opportunity a year after this time of availing itself of the advantages that these great incidents place in its way? Admitting that currency shall be worth a year from this time just what it is now, does any Senator mean to say or suppose that the service over that great route cannot be let at a less rate than when it was originally let, under the circumstances so graphically and exactly described by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire? Why, sir, it must not be forgotten that it is entirely a different kind of proposition. As I desire in part to hold the Postmaster General responsible as the head of the Post Office Department for this service and for its fair and exact management, I am willing to place in his hand the power to close the contract with these parties for one year longer for $840,000, or, if he shall elect it, with these other parties for four years at $820,000. What the honorable Senator from Kansas [Mr. LANE] has said is strictly true. These advertisements, I think, have been but for the short period of two months. There has been no fair opportunity for competition, and it is exceedingly doubtful to my mind whether there has been but one real bid made.

Another fact in this connection that has not been stated is that the present contractors have already agreed with the Department to continue the service until October next upon the present terms. Why then desire to indefinitely postpone and dispose of this matter, and prevent the Government from availing itself of whatever advantage shall present itself hereafter?

Mr. JOHNSON. I have as much confidence in the discretion of the Postmaster General as the honorable member from California can have; but the reason that operates upon me, as at present advised, in voting against the resolution upon the table, or for its indefinite postponement, I rise simply to state. I do not understand it to be denied that the notice which the law requires for these lettings was in fact given. If that notice is not such as enables all parties concerned to have an opportunity of bidding, the fault is in the law, and should not be visited upon those who do bid.

As I recollect the facts from the debate (and I know nothing of them in any other way) this route was, in the ordinary way and in strict compliance with the law, advertised. There were four bids. Some of those bidders are entitled to the contract. That is very clear. The Postmaster General under certain circumstances has a right to reject a bid; but where the bid is the lowest, and the party is in a condition to satisfy the Postmaster General that he is able to comply with the contract, the Postmaster General is bound by law to give it to him. Now, sir, in my view, the observance of faith is just as much a duty with nations as with individuals; and if the Government of the United States, by its laws, has told its citizens that if they will agree to do a certain service for a certain specified sum, and they show that they are able to do the service and to secure the Government against the contingency of their not doing the service, it is just as much the obligation of the Government to give them the contract as it would be the obligation of the party offering to perform the service if the contract is given to him to perform it. That would seem to be clear. Now it is proposed to say by legislation that the Postmaster General may give it to somebody else.

Mr. COLLAMER. For one year.

Mr. JOHNSON. For one year; and if you can say that he can give it to some one else for one year, you can say he may give it to somebody else for four years. In other words, you come in by legislation and say to the Postmaster General, "Do not comply with your contract"—which binds the Government, if the Government does not interfere by legislation—"we have changed our mind; we have got the contractor bound, if we think proper to hold him; he thought he had us bound, but we are a Government, and beyond his control, and cannot be sued; and we tell you, however morally bound we may be, and however legally bound it would be held that we were if our obligation could be enforced legally, we will not be bound, and you may give it to somebody else." Without inquiring, therefore, whether the Government will gain in dollars by changing the contract, it seems to me, according to the old-fashioned notion which I have adopted, it is necessary for the public interest that the public faith should be preserved, and that legislation such as is proposed is, if not legally wrong, morally erroneous.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. My understanding of the rules of the Department does not agree with the statement of the Senator from Maryland at all. There is a rule binding the Department to give the contract to the lowest responsible bidder; but on his failing it is left entirely optional with the Department to give it to the next lowest bidder or not. Indeed, the Quartermaster General's department rules that in such a case there is no binding obligation at all, and that the bidding must be made over again.

I desire the Senate to understand this question fully before the vote is taken. When this contract was let, it was understood to be a wild adventure starting from the western terminus of the Hannibal and St. Joseph road. Within the next year a continuous road will be built from St. Louis to Lawrence, Kansas. We are already discussing the question at Leavenworth and Lawrence of starting an independent line of stages to Denver, expecting to be maintained by the passenger business along the route, a distance of some five or six hundred miles. Believing that this rebellion will be crushed during the next year, believing that that crushing will bring down the price of gold to the same value as our paper money, I believe that next year you will be able to let this contract for one fourth of the present amount, and the passenger business from Denver to Atchison will sustain a line of stages without any contract. I am not conversant with the business on the other side of the mountains, but I am conversant as to the business between Denver and the western terminus of our railroad.

I hope, as a matter of economy to the Government as well as justice to the other lines of railroad that will be completed within the next year, that the Government will not tie its hands for four years. As a matter of economy we have not had a more important question before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HALE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Carlile, Hale, Harlan, Hicks, Johnson, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, and Trumbull—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Foster, Harris, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Ramsey, Riddle, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Willey, and Wilson—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Cowan, Doolittle, Fessenden, Grimes, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morrill, Sherman, and Wright—13.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the resolution. It is to add: "And except as to the compensation, which shall not exceed the sum of $820,000."

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the Secretary to read the resolution as it will stand with that amendment.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to extend the mail contract No. 10773 with the present contractors, commonly known as the Overland Mail Company, for the term of one year from the 1st day of July next, upon the same terms and conditions with the present existing contract, except as to schedule time, which shall not exceed sixteen days for eight months of the year and twenty days for the remaining four months, and except as to the compensation, which shall not exceed the sum of $820,000.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I think that is right.

Mr. COLLAMER. There is one little difficulty which might arise under that amendment which the gentleman does not seem to have contemplated. The contract existing with the present company is for $1,000,000; but there is a law providing that they may have the printed matter carried by water at their expense. It is carried by water at their expense; at an expense of $160,000 a year. I think I can suggest a modification of the amendment which will cover that point and at the same time carry out the object of the gentleman from Missouri. I propose that it shall read in this way: "Not to exceed $820,000 beyond the amount paid for carrying the printed matter by water."

Mr. BROWN. The intention of the amendment is to confine the compensation to the bid now pending.

Mr. COLLAMER. You understand my suggestion?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir, and I accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on the amendment as modified, to insert at the end of the resolution these words: "And except as to the compensation, which shall not exceed the sum of $820,000 beyond the amount paid for carrying the printed matter by water."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I would suggest another amendment, which perhaps will not hurt the resolution. It is to insert after the word "contractors," in the sixth line, the words "or any other responsible party." That will allow the Postmaster General to contract with the old contractors or any other responsible party.

Mr. CONNESS. It is apparent that there will be no time to contract with new contractors, and I hope the Senator will not persist in offering that amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. I submit that this amendment will not injure the resolution at all. The Postmaster General will then have an opportunity to contract with the old contractors, or with other responsible parties, at his discretion.

Mr. BUCKALEW. No new party can contract for a year.

Mr. POMEROY. It will not do any hurt.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I wish somebody would tell me—perhaps the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads can—how long this contract runs now.

Mr. COLLAMER. It runs out on the 1st day of July.

Mr. HALE. Somebody told me that it ran until October.

Mr. CONNESS. They can continue the service until then.

Mr. COLLAMER. It is said that there is an agreement that they may run until October; but I do not know anything about it. The contract expires in a few days.

Mr. POMEROY. I think the resolution ought to be still further amended. Instead of saying "one year" we ought to say "not to exceed four years." That will bring it within the law.

Mr. COLLAMER. What law?

Mr. POMEROY. Within the lettings, and if the resolution is now amended so as to say "not to exceed four years," then we have it exactly.

Mr. HALE. I do not see why this resolution should be rushed through here in this way. If this contract runs until the 1st of October, and they want to make another contract, why not let it be upon advertisements and proposals?

Mr. CONNESS. The contract does not run until the 1st of October. It expires on the 1st of July. They have simply agreed temporarily with the Postmaster General to continue the service until October; but if they get this contract they go on from the 1st of July.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POMEROY. I think the title should be amended so as to read: A joint resolution to authorize the Postmaster General to extend the contract with the Overland Mail Company, or any other parties.

Mr. COLLAMER. It will be the same without amendment as with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will remain as it is unless otherwise ordered.

INTER-CONTINENTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the bill (S. No. 302) to encourage and facilitate telegraphic communication between the eastern and western continents.

Mr. WILSON. I had hoped that that bill would not be moved here this morning. A week ago last Thursday the bill in regard to commutation was taken up here and debated, and then gave way to the Senator from Maine, [Mr. Fessenden.] It was understood that we were to have the present week to act upon other matters; but this week has been consumed mainly by the Committee on Finance with bills under their care. I had to displace the bill of my colleague, and then I gave way to him, supposing I should have time enough to get that bill through this week. We have before us two very important military bills, and I am pressed every day by the Department to have those measures acted upon. I hope the Senator from Michigan will not press the consideration of that bill to-day. I came here this morning supposing as a matter of course that these military bills were to be acted upon. They are public bills of great importance to the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think the Senate has before it a bill more important than this for the present and future interests of this nation. It will not lead to much discussion, I think; certainly I shall occupy but very little of the time of the Senate in explaining it. The Committee on Commerce has not occupied four hours of the time of this Senate during the whole of this session. There are some four or five very important bills indeed coming from that committee that I desire to have acted upon, and I will promise the Senate I shall occupy as little time as possible in their explanation. I hope the Senate will grant me my request.

Mr. WILSON. I cannot consent to it. I think it of decided importance that we should proceed to the consideration of the measures to which I have alluded. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. I desire to make one remark with regard to that. I regret very much that the Senator from Michigan has moved his bill to-day, by which he excludes some other measures from the consideration of the Senate on which we have already commenced. My colleague has referred to the measures that he has in charge. There are one or two measures that I also have in charge, which I had hoped the Senate would be willing to act upon to-day and close before sunset. There is the bill for the establishment of a Bureau of Freedmen's Affairs. There is also a bill from the House of Representatives sweeping away all the fugitive slave acts. I do not like to let the opportunity slip of acting upon each of those measures. But the Senator from Michigan has the floor; he has made his motion; he has brought the measure forward; I am sincerely for that measure; I am anxious that no vote of mine shall throw any shadow over it at all; and therefore, under the circumstances of the case, I shall vote for his motion.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. President, of what use will this telegraph line be unless we put down the rebellion? How are we to put down the rebellion unless we fill up the Army? The first thing in my impression to be done is to keep the Army full through the agency and means of the bill to which the Senator from Massachusetts has alluded, and when that shall have passed, if the Senate can be disposed to encourage the establishment of several thousand miles of line of telegraphic communication, I shall have no objection myself. That bill perhaps will not pass as soon as the Senator from Michigan, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, seems to suppose. I am not aware of any very great and extended opposition to the bill, but I think it embraces very important features and proposes to confer very extreme and extensive privileges and advantages upon a company which now has very extensive and very extraordinary powers. It cannot be passed without attention, at least, being called to its character, and some amendments being proposed. I hope the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts will be taken up.

Mr. CHANDLER. This it will be noticed is a Senate bill, and if we hope to pass it at this session it must be passed immediately or it cannot be considered in the other House. I deem it a very important measure. I do not think it will lead to any extended debate. As I said before, I certainly shall occupy but a very few moments in explaining the bill. As I presume every Senator has made up his mind precisely how he will vote, I shall merely state the facts in the case, and then leave it to the judgment of the Senate. I see no reason why there should be any extended debate upon it, and I do not believe there will be. I think this measure and the measure the Senator from Massachusetts has in charge and several others can be passed to-day if debate can be avoided, as I think it can.

Mr. BROWN. The reason which has been assigned by the Senator from Michigan for taking up this bill, that it is a Senate bill and that if not acted upon now the chances are it will be lost in the other House, is very conclusive to me that it ought not to be taken up in preference to this military bill in regard to dispensing with the $300 commutation clause and other features that are seriously agitated in connection with our military system. That is perhaps the most important bill connected with our military affairs, and if the question is raised that we are likely to lose bills now originating in the Senate because of the short length of time which the session is likely to continue, unquestionably we ought to take up those bills that are the most important to the nation. I apprehend that no Senator here will deny but that our first business in hand is to deal with our military affairs, and deal with them as energetically as we may and as speedily as possible. The Senator from Massachusetts gave notice last night that he would move to take up this bill to-day. He has only awaited the getting through of the tariff bill and the tax bill for the purpose of facilitating necessary measures; and it naturally comes up in its proper order as a bill already partially acted upon, and having the precedence by right over the motion proposed by the Senator from Michigan. I trust the Senate will consider this matter calmly, and not be carried away by the mere idea of courtesy in this matter, but that we shall take up those bills which are partially gone through with that are essential to the effectiveness of the military service, and that are connected directly with the prosecution of the war.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Hale, Harlan, Hendricks, Hicks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Powell, Saulsbury, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wade—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Ten Eyck, Willey, and Wilson—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Cowan, Harding, Harris, Henderson, Howard, McDougall, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Wilkinson, and Wright—16.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 302) to encourage and facilitate telegraphic communication between the eastern and western continents.

The Governments of Russia and Great Britain have granted to Perry MacDonough Collins, a citizen of the United States, the right to construct and maintain a line of electric telegraph through their respective territories, from the mouth of the Amoor river, in Asiatic Russia, by way of Behring's straits and along the Pacific coast to the northern boundary of the United States, with a view of thereby uniting the telegraphic systems of both continents and of promoting international and commercial intercourse. The Government of Russia, in furtherance of that object, is now constructing a line of telegraph through its Asiatic territory to unite at the mouth of the Amoor river with the line projected by Collins; and as the Government of the United States desires cordially to cooperate with Russia and Great Britain in the establishment and maintenance of such a line of communication, the bill proposes to grant to Perry MacDonough Collins, of California, his associates and assignees, the right to construct and maintain a line or lines of telegraph from any point or points on the line of the Pacific telegraph, constructed in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 16, 1860, northerly, through any of the Territories of the United States, to the boundaries of British America, with such branch lines as may be needed to open communication with the various mining districts and other settlements in those Territories. And for these purposes Collins, his associates and assignees, are to have a permanent right of way over any unappropriated public lands of the United States, together with the right to take any timber and stone for construction purposes; and for the purpose of establishing and maintaining those lines and the stations necessary for the repair and working thereof, there is donated to them out of such unappropriated lands, not exceeding one quarter section for each fifteen miles of line constructed; but so much of this section as authorizes the construction of telegraph lines to open communications with the various mining districts and other settlements in those Territories is to be null and void unless the branch lines are completed within five years from the approval of this bill.

The second section of the bill, in order to encourage and aid the construction of the line of telegraph beyond the limits of the United States, authorizes and instructs the Secretary of the Navy to detail for the use of the surveys and soundings along that portion of the Pacific coast, both of America and Asia, where it is proposed to establish the telegraph, one steam or sailing vessel, in his discretion, to assist in surveys and soundings, laying down submerged cable, and in transporting materials connected therewith, and generally afford such assistance as may be deemed best calculated to secure a successful promotion of the enterprise.

The third section provides that if within five years from the passage of this act Collins, his associates and assignees, shall complete and have ready for successful use a line of telegraph from its connection with the Pacific telegraph to the mouth of the Amoor river, the Secretary of State is instructed to contract with the parties owning the line or lines, upon receiving suitable guarantees from them, as in the case of bids for mail contracts, for the use of the same by the Department of State, the Treasury, the War, the Navy, and the Interior Departments, the General Post Office, the legislative and judicial departments, and the respective offices thereof for all public purposes, for a period of ten years next ensuing the date of the contract, the United States to pay for such use at the rate of $50,000 a year in equal quarterly payments; but if, during any of those fifteen years, the business done for the United States under the contract shall, at the ordinary rate of charge for private messages, exceed the sum of $100,000, an account thereof, duly authenticated, is to be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is to certify the same to Congress for payment.

The fourth section provides that the Government of the United States shall, at all times, have priority in the use of the line or lines, so far as they are within its territory, and shall have the right, when authorized by law, to connect the line or lines by telegraph with any military posts of the United States, and to use them for Government purposes. In order to secure them from injury by savages or other evil-disposed persons, to the interruption of the public business, the commanders of the military districts or stations and other officers acting under authority of the United States in the Territories traversed by the telegraph are to use any available force at their command to protect them. Subject to the right of prior use by the Government, the line or lines are to be at all times open to the public for the transmission of messages in the order of their reception, upon the payment of the established charges.

The fifth section provides that the better to accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote the public interest and welfare, by facilitating international and commercial intercourse between the eastern and western continents, in the construction of the telegraph, and keeping it in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times, but particularly in time of war, the use and benefits of it for diplomatic, naval, military, postal, commercial, and other purposes, Congress may at any time, having due regard for the rights of the parties thereinbefore specified, add to, alter, amend, or repeal the act.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I suppose every member of the body has investigated this subject. The maps and drawings, the general plan and general route, have been laid upon the desk of every Senator, I presume. The proposition is to connect Europe, Asia, and China, by telegraph, with the United States. Mr. Collins has made a contract with the Russian Government, by which they agree to extend their line up to a certain point and grant him a large subsidy. Mr. Collins then went to England and made an arrangement to pass the line through the British American possessions. He proposes to build about seven thousand miles of telegraph through British North America, through Russian America, and through Siberia, to connect with this great Russian line, bringing us into direct telegraphic communication with nearly all the nations of Europe. The Committee on Commerce deem it a very great desideratum that this should be done.

In the bill there are three points: first, the granting of the right of way, and every fifteen miles the right to use a quarter section of the public lands for their buildings, stations, &c.; secondly, a ship, either a steam or sailing ship, is granted for the purpose of taking soundings across Behring's straits and around the Russian possessions, which will be very useful to the Government, even if the line should not be built; and next, we are to pay $50,000 a year for ten years for the use of the telegraph. In my judgment, the Government will use that telegraph to the amount of more than $100,000 a year every year from the day it is first completed; therefore I consider that no subsidy at all. It simply shows that the United States takes an interest in connecting herself with the rest of the world.

Those are the only points in the bill. We do not pay one dollar, we do not expend one dollar unless the route is completed, and completed within five years. The whole thing falls to the ground at the end of five years unless we are in direct communication with the world. The Committee on Commerce have reported the bill; and with this statement I leave it in the hands of the Senate.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I was in hopes that some one whose attention had been called earlier and doubtless more fully to this subject than mine has would have proposed some amendments to this bill and called the attention of the Senate to its features; but as it appears there is no other person, as I happen to be honored with a position on the Committee on Commerce, which did not report this bill unanimously—

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not so state it.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I know you did not. It may not be amiss for me to call the attention of the Senate to this bill before it shall receive its final action; but still, for the purpose of perfecting it and making it less objectionable, I desire to propose some amendments to it. The first amendment I shall propose is on page 2, section one, line nineteen, to strike out the word "donated" and insert "granted," and after the word "parties" to strike out the word "out" and to insert the words "the use;" so that it will read:

There is hereby granted to said parties the use of such unappropriated lands, not exceeding one quarter section, &c.

The object is to change this from an absolute gift of the land to the granting of the use of the land.

Mr. CHANDLER. I accept the amendment.
Mr. McDUGALL. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I now move to strike out the whole of the third section, and I ask for its reading.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That if within five years from the passage of this act the said Collins, his associates and assignees, shall complete and have ready for successful use a line of telegraph from its connection with the said Pacific telegraph to the mouth of the Amoor river aforesaid, the Secretary of State is authorized and instructed to contract with the parties owning said line or lines, upon receiving suitable guarantees from them, as in the case of bids for mail contracts, for the use of the same by the Department of State, the Treasury, the War, the Navy, and the Interior Departments, the General Post Office, the legislative and judicial departments, and the respective offices thereof for all public purposes, for a period of ten years next ensuing the date of said contract, the United States to pay for such use at the rate of $50,000 a year in equal quarterly payments: Provided, That if, during any of the fifteen years aforesaid, the business done for the United States under said contract shall, at the ordinary rate of charge for private messages, exceed the sum of $100,000, an account thereof, duly authenticated, shall be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall certify the same to Congress for payment.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I shall proceed to state in as few words as I possibly can the reason why this section should be stricken out. I may be allowed to say that I feel less interest in the success of this bill under the course its friends have pursued in endeavoring to force its passage at the expense of a much larger and more important interest to the country now at stake, and that is the passage of the amendment of the enrollment bill.

Mr. McDUGALL. I do not understand the Senator exactly when he speaks of the course of the friends of this bill. We have felt in my part of the country that we were as much concerned as any persons in the Republic in this measure, as it unites us immediately and particularly with eastern Asia. I was not aware when I came in here that this bill had been urged out of its order; but I trust it will receive no prejudice from the fact that it has been urged on the attention of the Senate. It is a simple bill, and I think it can be disposed of promptly, and there is no good reason why it should be objected to, because as a matter of legislation it is now pending.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I was not designing or intending to prejudice the passage of the bill. I was simply stating the reason why I felt less hesitancy in opposing a measure of this kind or interposing objections to its passage than I would have felt under other circumstances, because feeling, as I do, the absolute necessity of an immediate action on the part of Congress to fill up the ranks of our armies, which are now being thinned in consequence of the terrible warfare being carried on, I think I may be justified in at least stating the reasons emphatically and distinctly which influence my mind in opposing the bill in the character in which it now stands before the Senate.

Sir, I can understand as well as any other Senator on this floor, and I trust I am as keenly alive to the honor and glory of rendering efficient aid on the part of the Government in the establishment of a telegraph line which is to encircle the world as any other Senator, or as any person connected with the Government in either of its branches. It is an ennobling enterprise, worthy of the grandest thoughts and considerations of the greatest and ablest men of the country. But, sir, we should regard the position in which we are placed; we should not be captivated and carried away by the excellency of the motive and design, and lose sight of our judgments, and open the public Treasury to any demands which may be made upon it and from any quarter, no matter how respectable that quarter may be, and no matter how respectable the friends may be who come from that direction.

We are asked to aid in the construction of this great work. This bill asks us, in the first place, to grant the right of way, which is a great privilege to a company of this kind, because if the right of way is granted and a work of this kind is established, it will go very far toward preventing any competition hereafter on the part of other persons who have not the vast amount of capital that this company which is asking for these privileges under this bill have. They then ask, and we are willing to give, or at least the bill, as reported, contained an absolute gift of unappropriated lands not exceeding a quarter-section for each fifteen miles on the line of this telegraph. That at the present moment is no very great gift. The public lands are given upon almost every bill. Our western friends day after day receive donations in every variety of shape to the amount of millions; and I, for one, representing an old State, have made no objection, because I was desirous of doing what I could to contribute toward the progress of these new giants who, I fear, before many years will take entire control of the affairs of this nation; and knowing, too, that, let us do as we choose, the old States would derive but very little advantage from the public domain, as we have in times past derived very little advantage from it. But that is a gratuity. In addition to that this bill proposes that the Navy Department shall fit out and supply this company with a vessel. The second section is in these words:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in order to encourage and aid the construction of said line of telegraph beyond the limits of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and instructed to detail for the use of the surveys and soundings along that portion of the Pacific coast, both of America and Asia, where it is proposed to establish said telegraph, one steam or sailing vessel, in his discretion, to assist in surveys and soundings, laying down submerged cable, and in transporting materials connected therewith, and generally afford such assistance as may be deemed best calculated to secure a successful promotion of the enterprise.

This is no small assistance on the part of the Government. A national vessel is to be detailed with its officers at the public expense, without limitation with regard to time for the purpose of enabling this company to establish this great public work.

In addition to all that, this company ask us to subsidize them for a period of ten years, granting them $50,000 per year, amounting to $500,000 in the aggregate, in addition to all other privileges which they ask Congress to confer upon them toward the establishment of this line. It should be a very extreme case that should constrain the Government in making all these efforts and granting all these aids toward a company to construct a work of this kind. The Government should be first satisfied that they have the means at hand ready to do it. If we were in a state of peace and prosperity, and it was desired to lend a helping hand to a feeble company, unable to execute this work with their own means and unassisted, it would be a matter for the consideration of Congress; and no Secretary of State could have exceeded the present Secretary of State in his just eulogium upon the character and magnitude of this work and its desirability.

But, sir, if I am not incorrectly informed, this company is one of immense wealth; and my honest and firm conviction from the evidence which has come before me is, that they will gladly complete this work without any such subsidy as $50,000 per year from the Treasury for ten years, amounting to $500,000 in the aggregate. I have been informed that the company who ask this privilege, the chief of whom is this Mr. Collins who comes here armed with charters from the different Governments of Europe to build this line over the territory of those Governments, commenced its operations some years ago with a capital of some three hundred thousand dollars, and that is all the capital they have ever had by any charter or by any law.

I repeat, I have been credibly informed that the company now asking for this subsidy and the right to build this telegraph line across the continent, a distance, as the Senator from Michigan says, of several thousand miles, commenced with a capital stock of $300,000, and by their business tact, by the skill with which they have managed their affairs, and by the purchasing out of other and rival companies and throwing impediments in their way, their capital this day is worth $9,000,000; their capital stock has increased between three and four hundred per cent. It is stated that there is a prospective purchase in view of the California Telegraph Company, to be estimated at some three million dollars, which, if true, would swell up this capital to the amount of $12,000,000. I do not vouch for the truth of these statements, because I have no means of personal knowledge; but I have been informed in a way and from a source upon which I place great reliance that such is the fact.

Then, sir, if that be true, here we have a company with a capital of either $9,000,000 or $12,000,000, which has increased faster than any snow ball ever did by rolling it over the surface of the ground, by the increase of its own stock and by the increased value of its lines arising from the manner in which they have conducted business, asking this Government to bestow all these privileges upon them, and to subsidize them to the tune of $500,000 in order to enable them to construct this line and to carry on their works. I understand, I do not know how true it is, that the gentleman to whom the chairman of the Committee on Commerce has referred, and who has brought the Russian charter here, to which he has referred with commendations, proposes to place that in the charter of this new company at the value of some three million dollars.

It is by these means that the men who are engaged in this originally comparatively small company have become millionaires, it being rather a close corporation, and confined to perhaps not more than a score of men, if they amount to that number. I would not for all this throw any impediment in the way of their constructing this line; nor would I oppose their having the right of way granted to them; nor would I oppose their having granted to them upon which to construct their works the use of a quarter section of land at the distance of every fifteen miles; nor would I, as it is a great national measure and would reflect credit upon our nation, refuse to give them the benefit and advantage of a national vessel to give them credit abroad, and to overawe the Indian tribes and lawless people who might be disposed to interfere with them upon the Pacific coast. I would not oppose any of these things, but would cheerfully and gladly grant them all; but when they come and ask in addition to this a subsidy of $500,000 to enable them to construct a work which they would in my opinion gladly and joyfully construct without a dollar being granted to them, under the protection of the Government, and the grant of a right of way; in a time of war, when the Committee on Finance with all their ability and all their skill are driven to their wits' ends to keep the coffers of the Treasury full enough even to pay the soldiers in greenbacks, I would hesitate for the time before I would undertake to give this subsidy.

It does not stop there. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce says he has no doubt the Government will require the use of this telegraph line for its business to an amount exceeding $100,000 a year. What I have to say on that subject is this: I had much rather that the Government should pay as it has its work performed, as every citizen pays, than to undertake such a work under these circumstances, and offer a large sum of money in advance without knowing whether we should require that amount of service to be performed upon this work or not. But the bill does not stop here; there is a very cautious expression at the end of the third section to this effect:

That if, during any of the fifteen years aforesaid, the business done for the United States under said contract shall, at the ordinary rate of charge for private messages exceed the sum of $100,000, an account thereof, duly authenticated, shall be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall certify the same to Congress for payment.

As I understand this section we undertake to subsidize them to the tune of $500,000, at the rate of $50,000 a year; but if the charges for carrying the messages of the Government should exceed the sum of $100,000, then we are to pay all the excess of that $100,000, let the amount be more or less.

Mr. President, I have felt it my duty in moving to strike out the third section of this bill to lay these statements before the Senate that they may see what they are doing at the present time, and to ask them seriously whether in their admiration and regard for so great a work, which is to reflect credit and honor upon the nation, they are willing to throw away $500,000 in addition to all the other aid and assistance they give this company, when it is manifest from the ability, power, and riches of this corporation, they are not only willing but able to construct this work, and doubtless will construct it without the aid of this third section which I have moved to strike out.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has alluded to the affairs of the American Telegraph Company. I understand they have made a great deal of money, but I do not know anything about the facts that the Senator states; nor do I care. I only hope that they have money enough to build this line. They propose to go through an inhospitable region, across Behring's straits, and to connect us in five years with the whole of Europe and China. It will be seen by the map which I have before me that the whole of Europe, which is now traversed in every direction by telegraph lines, would instantly be brought by the construction of this line in telegraphic communication with the city of Washington.

With regard to the former management of that company or its future management I have nothing to say. I deem this a great national work of so much importance that I should be very glad to have them use the money they have made or any other money that they can get in building this line.

If the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to strike out the third section of this bill prevails, in my judgment it will defeat the measure. The Senator talks of the condition of the Treasury. This bill does not take a single dollar out of the Treasury until the completion of this work, and I trust in five years from to-day our Treasury will be in a better condition than it is now. This is not a subsidy. There is not a Senator on this floor who does not know that when this Government shall be placed in telegraphic communication with the whole of Europe and Asia, our telegraphic bill would amount to more than this sum of $50,000. The Government of Russia has very kindly agreed to subsidize this line in order to bring herself into communication with the United States. Would it be well now for the United States to turn her back upon this great enterprise and coldly say, "We take no interest in the work?" I repeat, sir, this is not a subsidy. It is merely a contract in advance for what you know you will need when the time arrives.

Mr. GRIMES. I rise for the purpose of obtaining some information from the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. I should like to know what is the character of this subsidy that is given by the Russian Government. As I understand it, the Russian Government have agreed to assist in building a line over their own territory as far as a certain point, and that it is now near the mouth of the Amoor river, for the purpose of connecting with this line at that point.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir; that is so.

Mr. GRIMES. Has the Russian Government ever agreed to build, or to assist in building, or have they subsidized this company so as to enable them to build through the Russian possessions in America?

Mr. CHANDLER. I cannot answer that question. They have granted them a subsidy. Russia owns all her telegraphic lines. She has agreed to give forty per cent. of the receipts from her portion of the line to this line as a subsidy.

Mr. GRIMES. As far as the mouth of the Amoor river?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir; through.

Mr. GRIMES. To what point?

Mr. CHANDLER. The capital of Russia, St. Petersburg.

Mr. GRIMES. From the capital of Russia how far west?

Mr. CHANDLER. To the British possessions, I suppose.

Mr. GRIMES. Has the Senator a copy of that contract between the Russian Government and Mr. Collins?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have it not with me.

Mr. GRIMES. It would be very satisfactory to know exactly what are the relations this man holds to the Russian Government.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have seen the contract.

Mr. GRIMES. Can the Senator tell how far the line is completed through the British possessions? How much yet remains to be completed?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir. Nine thousand five hundred miles remain to be completed.

Mr. GRIMES. In Russia?

Mr. CHANDLER. Oh, no, sir. The Russian Government have agreed to build two thousand five hundred miles, or to the mouth of the Amoor river, to extend her line to the mouth of the Amoor, and from there this Mr. Collins is to take it.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey. It is a matter of a good deal of consequence.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will simply remark that if this amendment prevails it defeats the bill; that is all.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It seems to me that some gentlemen are falling into a very great mistake if they suppose this is a subsidy of $500,000. It is simply an agreement on our part that if they will build the line at their own expense and set it in operation, we will pay them for the use of it by this Government to the amount of $50,000 a year for ten years. We agreed, in order to aid in the building of the Pacific telegraph, to give them $40,000 or $50,000 a year; I forget which.

Mr. CONNESS. Sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, that enterprise was undertaken by those gentlemen at a time when the majority of men denounced it as a humbug. It was said it could not be built, and that even if it were you could not keep it up against the Indians. Mr. Benton, who was a very wise man generally, said if such a thing was attempted the Indians would dig up the poles and carry off the wire. But, sir, it was attempted, and by great energy and skill carried through, and it was a success.

Mr. Collins has gone to Russia and obtained from Russia this contract by which the Russian Government grants to him lands for stations, the right to the timber, and assistance in the building of the line, and furthermore, as I understand, has agreed to pay at the rate of forty per cent. of the through business on their line to aid in sustaining the line. What are we asked to do? To give this company for the use of the line by the Government $50,000 a year. In relation to that provision in regard to certifying the account for payment whenever the amount of Government business exceeds $100,000, I think that might be amended so as to be more definite and clear as to what is meant by certifying it to Congress for payment. I suppose the facts will be reported to Congress and they can do as they will about it.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I do not wish to interrupt him.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If this question is going to give rise to any discussion I do not propose to go into it myself. I want to have the bill acted upon. I do not want it to stand in the way of other business.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the "act to facilitate communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States by electric telegraph," provided in the first place that it should be thrown open to public competition to see who would do it for the lowest amount. In the second place the subsidy was not $50,000 or $60,000, but it was "not to exceed $40,000." I will call the attention of the Senator to the further fact that notwithstanding the large bonuses and grants that have been given to that company, I am informed there is another telegraph company constructing a line across the continent without any bonus at all, on their own hook.

Mr. TEN EYCK. The bill has been reported.

Mr. BROWN. I believe there is one in contemplation going ahead.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. President, I think my friend, the Senator from Wisconsin, could not have read this bill, or else he would not inform the Senate that all there was in it was what the Senator from New Jersey has denominated the subsidy; that is, the payment of $50,000 a year for ten years. In the first place the first section declares that this Mr. Collins shall be entitled to the "right of way over any unappropriated public lands of the United States, together with the right to take any timber and stone for construction purposes;" not for the construction of the telegraph line, but for "construction purposes," leaving it in the broadest terms possible.

And for the purpose of establishing and maintaining said lines and the stations necessary for the repair and working thereof, there is hereby donated—

Not the use of, but an absolute donation—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That has been amended.

Mr. GRIMES. I was not aware that it had been amended. That is the way the bill read as introduced here:

Donated to said parties, out of such unappropriated lands, not exceeding one quarter section for each fifteen miles of line constructed.

The second section declares:

That in order to encourage and aid the construction of said line of telegraph beyond the limits of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and instructed—

He is absolutely required—to detail for the use of the surveys and soundings along that portion of the Pacific coast, both of America and Asia, where it is proposed to establish said telegraph, one steam or sailing vessel, in his discretion, to aid and assist in surveys and soundings,—

And not in that only—laying down submerged cable, and in transporting materials connected therewith, and generally afford such assistance as may be deemed best calculated to secure a successful promotion of the enterprise.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will recollect that a few years ago this Government agreed to pay $70,000 a year for ten years, and to furnish ships to lay the cable across the Atlantic, and to do divers and sundry other things to a much greater extent than we propose to do here.

Mr. GRIMES. Because this Government contracted several years ago to do some very foolish things is no reason in the world why I as a Senator to-day should contract to do what, in my estimation, is an exceedingly foolish thing. I do not know what the contract was, nor what agreement this Government made in regard to the laying of the Atlantic cable. I only know that according to the provisions of this bill, so far as the laying of this cable is concerned through Behring's straits or in the northern Pacific ocean, the Navy Department is required to perform all the duty; first, to make the survey; second, to transport the material for the company; and third, to lay down the cable after they get it there; to furnish the vessels to do it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Only across Behring's straits.

Mr. GRIMES. I suppose that does not follow as a matter of course. Behring's straits are tolerably wide in certain places. We do not know where the cable is going to be laid. It may be laid across the straits in the narrowest point, or it may be laid further south in order to obviate the objections that may arise in consequence of the cold weather, running it from island to island. The very purpose of making surveys is to determine whether or not there may not be some more feasible plan and place of laying it than laying it across the straits; because, if they were going to lay it across the straits at the shortest point, there would be no necessity for putting in this requirement here, that the Navy Department shall survey and sound out the routes across there. I understand from the Senator from New Jersey that the company claim that the most proper point probably for taking the telegraph wire across would be from the Russian-American possessions to the St. Lawrence island, and from the St. Lawrence island over to the Asiatic side. If so, we shall be compelled, under the provisions of this bill, to transport a very considerable amount of material. I am now only alluding to those portions of the bill which were not referred to by my friend from Wisconsin. Now, if he will turn to the fourth section—

Mr. CHANDLER. I stated them all.

Mr. GRIMES. "In order to secure the same"—that is, this telegraph after it shall be established—"from injury by savages or other evil-disposed persons, to the interruption of the public business, the commanders of the military districts or stations and other officers, acting under authority of the United States, in the Territories traversed by said telegraph, shall use any available force at their command to protect the same."

The law requires that our military commanders in California or in Oregon or in Washington Territory or in any other of the Territories through which this telegraph wire shall be laid, shall use the whole available military force within their jurisdictions to see that this telegraph wire is kept unharmed by the Indians. I do not think that at this particular juncture we are prepared to assume any such burden.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is only the force he may happen to have at the spot where danger occurs.

Mr. GRIMES. It may not be convenient to bring up the whole force we may have in any one of these military departments and use it for the benefit of this company or the simple protection of their property. It may be convenient to the company; but there may be higher claims upon us to protect the citizens of some of these Territories or States from the savages than to protect the telegraph wire of this rich corporation to which, I understand, the benefit of this grant is to inure.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill, as I stated when I was up, proposes to give either a steamer or sailing vessel, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, for the purpose.

Mr. GRIMES. It is not at his direction; it says expressly, "is authorized and instructed."

Mr. CHANDLER. I said either a steamer or a sailing vessel at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. He is to furnish either a sailing vessel or a steamer at his discretion, whichever he prefers. Of course he is instructed to furnish either a steamer or a sailing vessel for this purpose. I stated that fairly at the outset. That is what it does propose to do. That is what I believe this nation would be derelict if it did not do.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Carlile, Clark, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Powell, Riddle, Sausbury, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, and Wilson—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Foster, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Richardson, Sprague, Sumner, and Wilkinson—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Harding, Henderson, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Sherman, Trumbull, Wade, Wiley, and Wright—15.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the first section:

Provided, That the lands thus set apart for said telegraph company shall always be kept open to settlement and occupancy, and shall be sold to actual settlers in quantities not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres each, at prices not exceeding $1 25 an acre, under regulations to be established by the Department of the Interior, and patents shall not issue except to the actual purchaser, on proof of payment and compliance with this provision.

The donations that are given to this company are in quarter sections. My object is to prevent the making of a land monopoly out of this company. I desire that if we are to give them the benefit of these lands, while we do so we shall also give the actual settlers of the country the benefit of settling them; in other words, that we shall retain the principle of preemption as far as practicable, and simply give the company the benefit of the money accruing from the sales. My object is to prevent, in other words, a monopolizing of the choice sites and locations along the whole of this route and consolidating them into a great land company upon which to make a banking operation. I am opposed to that system, and therefore move this amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator was present when the amendment was offered by the Senator from New Jersey he would have seen that it is simply the use of a quarter section for a station once in fifteen miles that is granted. They do not own one foot. The word was originally "donated," but that was a mistake. We do not intend to donate them one foot, but we grant them the use of a quarter section for their station, and for other purposes.

Mr. BROWN. In perpetuity?

Mr. CHANDLER. As long as they keep up the telegraph.

Mr. BROWN. I do not see much difference between the use in perpetuity and a donation.

Mr. CHANDLER. It can never be sold or any other use made of it except for a station. I do not see any object in the amendment.

Mr. HARLAN. I should like to hear that part of the bill read with the amendment which has heretofore been adopted.

Mr. CHANDLER. From line nineteen.

The SECRETARY. An amendment has been made in line nineteen of section one, to strike out "donated" and insert "granted;" to strike out the word "out" and insert "the use;" so that the clause will read:

And for the purpose of establishing and maintaining said lines and the stations necessary for the repair and working thereof, there is hereby granted to said parties the use of such unappropriated lands, not exceeding one quarter section for each fifteen miles of line constructed, &c.

Mr. BROWN. I was not aware that this bill had been so changed, and with the permission of the Senate I will withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BROWN. I now offer the following amendment to come in at the end of section three:

Provided further, That it shall not be competent for the owners or operators of said telegraph line to make any contract for the exclusive transmission of dispatches from any newspaper or newspaper associations upon terms different from those open to the enjoyment of all other newspapers; and in the event of any violation of this provision it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon proof thereof, to withhold the payment that may be coming to said parties from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to have that modified and changed, so as to make it apply to the company that we have already got established across to the Pacific coast.

Mr. CONNESS. I can say to the Senator that there is a bill now pending in the Senate on that subject.

Mr. GRIMES. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I move in the fourth line of the second section, on the 3d page, to strike out the words "and instructed," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "if in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby;" so as to read, "the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, if in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, to detail for the use of the surveys and soundings," &c.

Mr. CHANDLER. This clause is in the usual form, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. GRIMES. Our Navy, I supposed, was built for war purposes, and not for commercial purposes or for laying down telegraph lines, and if there is any time when we do need it we need it now on our coast and in our rivers for hostile purposes, and not for this purpose. This section provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall have authority to detail either a steam vessel or a sailing vessel; but the concoctors of this bill knew that no vessel would be of the slightest avail there except a steam vessel, and that one of a superior quality. You cannot send a sailing vessel around Cape Horn with the material that it is required to carry for this company and get it there under nine months from the time that she sails from some Atlantic port to be able to deliver it there. Therefore I suppose it was the intention of these parties that the Secretary of the Navy should be required to send a steamer—a steamer of very large capacity she must be, too—in order to carry this telegraphic wire, for she is compelled according to the terms of this bill to transport the "materials connected therewith." This bill would require her to carry not only the wire from the Atlantic ports around to this place, but it would require her to be the carrier of the poles to either side of the St. Lawrence island; or to either side of the straits.

If we are going to give this company the right to build this line and pay them $50,000, do so, and I am perfectly content that the Secretary of the Navy, if in his judgment he deems the public interest will be promoted thereby, shall send a vessel there to make surveys and soundings. That is legitimate; that pertains to the commerce of the country, although it is on the coast of a foreign nation, and it is fair that if we can detail a vessel at this time for that purpose that we should do a fair proportion toward making charts, laying down the soundings of waters other than those that appertain to our shores, &c. But when you ask the Government to send a vessel from the Atlantic or from San Francisco to the North Pacific to transport all the material that may be necessary to be carried for this company, as well as to make soundings and to lay the cable itself, and to do this in a time of war when you are constantly making complaints because you have not vessels enough on your coast, it is asking a little too much, Mr. President. It is enough for these men to put their hands into the Treasury and take our money, and not take our Navy and make us build vessels for them.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is well known that we have a Pacific squadron. A small vessel can be detached from that Pacific squadron, I apprehend, without any serious detriment to the public service. This vessel might just as well be up at Behring's straits, where we have hundreds of whale ships, as anywhere else. I do not think the public interest can be injured at all by detaching a small vessel from the Pacific squadron for this purpose.

Mr. GRIMES. If that be so, leave it to the Secretary of the Navy. Why do you want to require him to do it? Let him judge whether it can be safely done or not. I am willing to leave this clause so that he shall be authorized to do it; but it might not be safe to take away all the vessels from Panama and San Francisco and other points along the coast at this time. You may have the most efficient vessel that belongs to that squadron up two thousand miles north of the place where she ought to be, and then if a misfortune should befall our arms, what a clamor would be raised because the Secretary of the Navy did not have his vessel where it ought to have been; and how many men would there be who would excuse him for not having it there because Congress by a solemn act of legislation had required him to send off that vessel and assist in laying the telegraph wire for this company?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know what service the Pacific squadron has performed for the last three years. I imagine one of the ships from that squadron can very readily be detailed without detriment to the public welfare.

Mr. CONNESS. I have not been charged with any of the care of this bill, and yet I feel a great interest in it. It appears to me that the honorable Senator from Iowa, if he will excuse me, is rather narrow in his views on this question. Why shall we, as the legislative body of the United States, determine that the construction of this work shall be aided if, in his judgment, the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that it requires aid? Why shall we do that? Why shall we delegate that act to the Secretary of the Navy? Because he stands at the head of that Department. I think it is a question as to whether we shall aid this work or not; and, that question being determined, it is proper for us to say whether that aid or a part of it shall consist in a public vessel being placed at the disposition of this company for the performance of the service required in the construction of this work.

I have been astonished while I have listened to this discussion that gentlemen from the East, gentlemen directly interested in the great whaling interest, should hesitate a single moment to extend a reasonable degree of aid for the purpose of putting their whaling ships in direct connection with their owners in the East. They are not in connection with them now. They cannot connect with them nearer than San Francisco. It appears to me that we are dealing rather illiberally, or proposing to deal rather ungenerously, in connection with this great international work to put a telegraph cable around the world. Very well spoken it was a while since by the honorable Senator that has this bill in charge, when he said that we sent one of our greatest national ships to aid in laying the Atlantic telegraph. There never was such a jubilee in the nation as the celebration of the successful laying of that cable; there was never such a proud step of material progress up to that time as was then made; and there never have been deeper regrets expressed by the American public at large than upon the unfortunate failure of that cable.

Again, American capital, American genius, European capital, European genius, are engaged in an effort to relay that cable and make it a success. It is shrewdly suspected by some that we are making a mistake in the effort we are making to lay a cable from the kingdom of Great Britain to its transatlantic territory; and that notwithstanding any contract or promise that they make to us, in case of war they will use it against us, and I am very much inclined to think it is true. Nay, not very much inclined, but I have no doubt they would do it in an instant. Is it not important in that case that we should have communication with the European world by another means?

Mr. BROWN. This will go to the British possessions.

Mr. CONNESS. So it will, but it will go through a part of the British possessions that at the first sound of the tocsin of war we should seize and make our own. We would seize it by the strong arms that are now concentrating and gathering on the entire Pacific coast, and it would not be in the power of England to prevent the seizure. We cannot seize the transatlantic telegraph. Shall we be then placed at the mercy of Great Britain in the event of war, where our commerce and ourselves would be subjected to all its dire calamities, without giving us this great expedient and means? Shall we deal—Senators will excuse me, I only speak of their views—in a parsimonious manner with this great enterprise? It has been discussed for half a dozen years past. One of our most intelligent and patriotic citizens has addressed himself to this subject in a manner to make his name a part of the history of our country. The Secretary of State of the United States has sent you a communication that is deep and full of wisdom and meaning; based on the inquiries, the industry, and the great enterprise of that great and distinguished citizen, and he has recommended that the small aid asked for be given, generously given, be given in the spirit of American progress and enterprise.

What shall it avail if we sit here and talk as to whether a vessel may be dispatched or may not from the Pacific squadron to engage in making this survey and these soundings? Shall we spend our time as to the exact point upon Behring's straits upon which this survey shall be made? Have we not the ability to take one single ship and dispatch it upon this great service? I hope that we shall not waste time in such economy. I hope, on the contrary, that our discussions and our acts will partake of the spirit of the enterprise, of its great usefulness, of its great national interest, of its great consequences to the civilization of the entire world.

Why, sir, there is opening up to us in that portion of the earth that will be brought nearer to us by the construction of this line of telegraph, a country that we have little knowledge of, that the enterprise and industry of Mr. Collins have given us the first great and intelligent view of—a country full of trade, full of employment for our ships when peace shall come again. Sir, we are building up exactly opposite on the Pacific coast a community, nay, an empire of itself, composed of a population of the choicest portion of the American people. Shall we not invite neighborhood? Shall we not attempt to make a connection and a commercial fraternization between the two hemispheres in this manner? Shall we hesitate to do it, lest the Secretary of the Navy, under the instructions contained in this act, should employ a steam vessel rather than a sailing vessel? Why, Mr. President, I am ashamed of these views of the case. They bear no parallel to the subject; they in no part commend themselves in the advocacy or in the reasoning of so great a subject as this.

We are told that there are other lines of telegraph, other companies engaged in crossing the continent. Let them cross the continent. Give them aid, such only as you give to this, which is not an expensive aid to the nation. Let these great improvements go on. Shall it be because we are immersed in a great and expensive war that all progress and all efforts on the part of the Government to develop industry shall cease? Certainly not. Either we are able to carry both on, or we are not able to carry one on successfully.

I hope that first we shall give the aid that is asked for; it is very limited indeed; and next, that the aid we shall give will be generously and freely given.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa is eminently just and proper. What do we propose to do by this bill? We propose to put a part, at least, of the Navy of the United States under the control of this telegraph company; and at their bidding, and under their authority, the Secretary of the Navy is bound to detail a vessel for the purpose of carrying on all their operations. In time of peace I would not make the head of the Navy Department subject to the dictation of a telegraph company or any other company, no matter how respectable or how wealthy they might be.

Mr. CONNESS. I call the honorable Senator's attention, with his permission, to the fact that the whole eastern part of the continent is brought pretty much in subjection to a company that runs a railroad line through his own State, and I have not heard the declamation of the Senator against it. There can be no such objectionable monopoly and combination as that to which all of us are subjected who pass backward and forward between New York and the national capital.

Mr. TEN EYCK. When the time comes for that matter to be discussed, perhaps I may have something to say on that subject, but I generally endeavor to confine my remarks to the subject in hand before the Senate. I can see a very great difference, however, I may remark in passing, between establishing a new exclusive privilege and interfering with one that was established a quarter of a century ago. I respectfully submit, before discussing that subject, that the inquiry of the Senator from California is no argument upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CONNESS. It was not offered as such.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Then it was not offered legitimately in the discussion, but for some other purpose. Now, all the declarations of the Senator are very fine in relation to aiding and assisting in this national work. He has taken me captive by the power of his eloquence. I had some faint glimmering or idea of the honor that was to fall on our national character by the establishment of such a work; but I do not think it will add very much to our judgment, our prudence, or propriety as legislators, if we detail a part of our Navy and appropriate a portion of the public treasure for the establishment of a work which beyond all earthly doubt will be maintained and established by the corporation without any control. It was alluded to by the Senator from Missouri that this company, when they first introduced their bill asking for a subsidy, did not pretend to claim more than $40,000. That was enough; but I suppose on the principle on which other men act, when they go in for a penny they go in for a pound, and finding the disposition of the Senate to be perhaps to encourage these great works under the eloquent appeals of the Senator from California, they would just as soon vote $50,000 a year as $40,000, and perhaps $100,000, for aught I know, because after we get over the limit of $100,000, then an account is to be kept, and the Secretary of the Treasury is to settle the bill according to the charges they may choose to make.

Now, sir, I am not willing to detail the Navy for this purpose any more than I am willing that this other feature shall stand in the bill which declares that the Army of the United States, or such portions of the Army as may be in the region of country through which this line may run, may, under the order of the company and not under the order of the Secretary of War, be detailed and employed for the exclusive purpose and express design of protecting this long line of several thousands of miles of telegraph from the attacks of savages and every other wrong-doer who may see fit to lay his hand upon it. Why give any more exclusive privileges to this than to any other enterprise of like character for the transmission of intelligence or the transmission of passengers? I had intended to move an amendment on that point, but the floor was taken from me for the purpose of moving other amendments. I have two or three other amendments that I shall move at the proper time. The motion to strike out the third section having failed by a tie vote, I shall move to amend the fourth section so that the Army shall not be subject to be taken at the dictation of this company, or such portions of it as may be in that section, and that the rights and interests and property of the company shall be put upon the same footing in regard to governmental care and protection with the rights and interests and property of every other company and of every citizen in the Union; and that is, in case of their invasion, upon a call being made on the regular constituted authorities, the constituted authorities, if they see fit, appropriate the necessary force for the purpose of keeping the peace and maintaining the laws. I do not know that these gentlemen with their increase of capital in the course of fifteen months from $3,000,000 to $9,000,000 should lay the whole power of the United States, the Army, the Navy, and the Treasury to boot, at their hands and subject to their dictation and their call, especially in a time of war which is taxing every energy and straining every sinew in the arms of every loyal, noble, patriotic man within the length and breadth of the Union.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce spent more than three months in thoroughly investigating this subject; it was before them day after day; and they have recommended that a sailing vessel or a steamer shall be placed at the disposal of the company for this purpose. That is just what is intended. The Senator from New Jersey is perfectly consistent. If he has not proclaimed it himself he is an enemy to this bill in all its parts, and he was in committee. Aside from him, the committee were unanimous in every conclusion at which they arrived. The Senator gave us notice that he would fight the bill, and he is doing it manfully; but I want the friends of the bill to vote and not talk. I promised when it was taken up that I would not occupy the time of the Senate. I renew the pledge. I simply ask for a vote.

Mr. TEN EYCK. The Senator from Michigan says that the Committee on Commerce have been engaged three months in perfecting this bill. I happen to be a humble member of that committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. The papers were at the Senator's disposal.

Mr. TEN EYCK. All I was going to say was that if it took three months incubation to hatch a bill of this kind, I do not glory in the achievement.

Mr. McDUGALL. Mr. President, I have not been particularly pleased by the tone of the objections made by the Senator from New Jersey to this bill. I regret that I should have heard from him the expression of sentiments that have not to do with the security of our own people. He suggested among the considerations governing his action that the people of the older States were not concerned in these great enterprises; that the West calls for large appropriations, great subsidies, the lavishness of the public lands, from which his State of New Jersey derives no benefit. I regret to have heard the suggestion of an antagonism between the West and the East, or between the old and new States, come from the Senator from New Jersey, and mostly for the reason that for him I have a profound respect. I respect his judgment always.

Mr. TEN EYCK. The Senator entirely misunderstood me. I made no attack upon the West. I said it had always afforded us the utmost pleasure to vote for all the measures the West had at heart, asking for the donation of lands; and I do not know of any measure of that kind for which I have not voted except the amendment proposed this year to the Pacific railroad act. I withheld my vote from that on the ground that it was not simply for the building of a Pacific railroad, but proposed to build a great variety of branch roads in different States, and appropriated for that purpose millions of acres of land and additional millions of dollars in bonds, with interest payable in gold instead of in the ordinary currency of the country. That is the only case in which I have not voted in favor of the West in relation to all her measures, without ever expecting a dollar of benefit from the public lands for my State; and I do not now, and yet I shall freely vote for such measures in time to come.

Mr. McDUGALL. I understood the honorable Senator from New Jersey correctly, as he would have seen if he had allowed me to go on with my remarks. His remark was, that in all these things the older States had no interest. I remember within my own period—and I am not yet as venerable as some of the gentlemen who are about me—when, in the part of the country where the Senator was reared, land was hardly a salable commodity, and certainly did not command as a regular thing five dollars an acre. That same land now commands in the market a hundred dollars an acre. On the development of the West, in her special interests and with her special enterprises, has been dependent to a large extent the growth of New Jersey and her accumulated wealth. To the development and growth of the West is to be attributed to a large extent the development of the manufacturing interest of New England. We are mutually dependent. We could never have built up the great manufacturing cities of New England if it had not been for the labor in the corn and the grain fields of the farmers of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, and Wisconsin, and all the West; and they never would have culminated into their present prosperity but for the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, which secured to us a commanding position on the Pacific coast and developed those gold fields and those hills of silver that now furnish the prominent feature of the exportations of the entire Republic. Properly considered, we have no divided interest.

What is the true interest of the coast of the Pacific is the true interest of the State of Maine, and even her lumber fields have derived benefits from my State, for many a large house have I seen go up on the shores of the Pacific the timber for which had been cut down in the forests of Maine, and sawed in her mills and planed in her shops and framed by her mechanics and shipped by her ship-owners and constructed and put up in my own State.

The enterprise that is now suggested is one that belongs to a common development, in which the enterprising man, the man of capital, particularly the man of commerce, is as much concerned in New Jersey or Connecticut or Massachusetts or Maine as the merchant on my own coast. The subsidy asked for this enterprise is a mere bagatelle as compared to the great benefits it will insure to us. If the great enterprise of a telegraphic line across the Atlantic that failed some years ago, but that we hope yet to see realized, should be a thing accomplished, we should not command it in the event of our having a collision with a European Power, because it starts from Great Britain and lands in Great Britain's dependencies. It is well understood that our nearest relation to Asia and Europe is with Russia in Europe and Asia. The liberality exercised by the northern European Powers, and especially by Russia, should be a lesson to us to show some liberality. The amount of subsidy is of but little consideration; and I am confident that the amount of compensation proposed to be given to these parties is nothing like an equivalent to what would be justly due from the Government for the service it will require, and it is to have the command of the telegraph line.

A word now about this great conspiracy, this great combination, this aggregation of capital which seems to have filled the mind and overcome the vision of the Senator from New Jersey. I may take the liberty of remarking that when Mr. Collins, after making his trip from St. Petersburg to the Amoor river, reported himself in San Francisco, he brought with him the idea of this project; I took the opportunity to converse with him and possess myself as far as possible with his views, and to understand whether or not the enterprise was feasible. From that time until this time it has been more or less within the range of my observation. My fear has always been that we could not secure favor enough from the Government to establish it as a fact. My fear now is that we do not extend favor enough. If this is to be a very great and a very successful enterprise and it is going to embrace large capital, it will be because to carry out the main line of the work a great many accessories will have to be included. I do not believe that a line from San Francisco, taking that as the departing point, running up through Oregon and British America and Russian America, crossing at Behring's straits, and running down then by the coast line to the Amoor river, as an independent proposition can be maintained as a success; but upon a careful business calculation these gentlemen think that by joining with it various other enterprises of the same character, so as to bring the United States in communication with Europe and Asia, running down to China and Japan, it can be made a success; and if it is done at all it will be a great and triumphant success.

I cannot understand how persons having the true interests of the Government in their mind's eye can question the propriety of this action. It will be great economy to us, I believe, as a matter of mere government; it will be a great advantage to us as a matter of commercial regulation; it will give us our true position upon the Pacific, and that has been for years the theater of the greatest enterprises of the great nations of the world. France is in Mexico to get ascendancy there, and France is in Siam to get ascendancy there, and France is occupying positions on the Pacific to get ascendancy there. Russia bestows more attention on her policy on the Pacific than she does on her policy in any of the States of Europe. England is doing the same thing. It is our duty to do it, and we shall fail in duty if we do not look to our great interests, occupying as we do the most commanding position on the Pacific.

Then again, Mr. President, let me remind Senators that the history of England is the history to which we look for our great lessons. Look at her policy during her great wars with the continental Powers of Europe, including the war she conducted against us when we were called in rebellion, and again after our war of 1812. The course of the English, the stern, enterprising, determined English people, indicates and has established that by a resisting and compelling force that appears to exist in the Anglo-Saxon, the English as they have been assailed from abroad have risen stronger in their great northern strength; and therefore it is laid down as a truth by the ablest writers that have written upon politico-economical science in England, that instead of those great wars having impaired the wealth and strength of England, they have added both to her wealth and her strength, for two causes: first, their condition led (I am sorry it is not so in this country yet) to economy, private, individual, and particular economy; and second, it led to enterprises to overcome the privations that belonged to war. I might quote Mill, McCulloch, and Richards, as laying it down as a truth demonstrated by figures that England has been stronger by developing her resources even in time of war to overcome her necessities than she would have been if she had passed the same period in a time of profound peace. I say, let not our surroundings frighten us: let us make ourselves as strong as possible, so that when this war shall be over we shall be yet in the tide of prosperity.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from California has addressed the Senate very ably on the general subject of communication between the different portions of the world. I have nothing to say in regard to that; I am willing for the present to assent to the truth of everything he has said. The only question now before the Senate, however, is whether we shall make it absolutely imperative on the Secretary of the Navy to send a vessel to the Pacific for the purpose not only of surveying and sounding the waters of the North Pacific, but of transporting the material with which this telegraph line is to be laid, and afterwards of laying it. If a vessel is sent, it must be a steamer. If she is sent, she must be deprived of her armament. Now, are you going to direct, without any opportunity for the Secretary of the Navy to exercise his judgment about it, that in a time of war like this your vessels (and they must be your best vessels-of-war) shall be sent up into the North Pacific unarmed, upon an expedition of this kind, and be liable to capture?

Mr. McDUGALL. Allow me to make a suggestion. There are several vessels, old wooden ships, out there on that coast belonging to the squadron of the Pacific. The Senator knows what they are better than I do. It seems to me that to detail one of them would be no great charge on the Government. We can spare them from the harbor of San Francisco.

Mr. GRIMES. I have no objection to allowing the Secretary of the Navy to do that if he does not believe it will be to the detriment of the Government to permit it to be done; but I do not want to compel him to do it, because it is possible that when this company wants to lay its telegraph wires, or wants to transport its material, it may not be to the interest of the Government to thus detach a vessel for that purpose; and it seems to me somewhat singular that the Senators from the Pacific coast, who are so much interested in the maintenance of that fleet, should be the most anxious to detach some of the vessels from it and send them off on an expedition of this kind. I am willing to leave it exactly as the question always has been left before. It was not, I apprehend, made imperative on the Secretary of the Navy to detach the Niagara at the time the Atlantic cable was laid. The Secretary of the Navy was allowed to do it, and he did it.

Mr. CONNESS. And the nation applauded.

Mr. GRIMES. And the nation applauded it. Very well, that was in a time of peace; but you did not then, in a time of peace, instruct and require the Secretary of the Navy to do it. Now, in a time of war, you propose to require him to send vessels up into the North Pacific, where they will be liable to capture. That is the question that is before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the friends of this bill to let us vote. I think the subject is fully understood. Each section of the country has an equal interest in it with every other; perhaps the East more than the West. All the commercial interests of the nation are concerned in this bill, and I hope its friends will let us come to a vote. It is very well understood, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CHANDLER. We are passing a law in the usual form directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish a ship. Now the Senator proposes to say that it shall be the law if the Secretary thinks best; if he does not think it best it shall be no law. That is the question.

Mr. GRIMES. I suppose the Senator from Michigan wants to be ingenious. He does not want to misrepresent.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly not.

Mr. GRIMES. Does the Senator say that this is in the usual form?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. GRIMES. Does the Senator say that this was the form of the law passed for laying the Atlantic cable, that the Secretary of the Navy was instructed and required to detach the Niagara?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not read that law.

Mr. GRIMES. That is the only case that occurred, and I think if the Senator will refresh his memory by reference to the law, he will find that it says the Secretary of the Navy may do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not remember that.

Mr. GRIMES. If the Senator has not refreshed his memory by a reference to that law, I do not think he is justified in saying that this is the usual form. The Senator says that the effect of my amendment will be to make it dependent on the Secretary of the Navy to say whether this law is in operation or not. Not at all. The law will be in operation; the subsidy will be given; the Army of the United States, as the bill now stands without amendment, will be put under the control of this company in the departments through which the telegraphic line may be located; but so far as the detailing of a particular ship is concerned, that will be left to the Secretary of the Navy, and there is where it ought to be left. So far as the subsidy is concerned, so far as the grant of land and of the right of way is concerned, the law will stand; but in regard to the action of the Navy Department in detailing a ship, I trust we are not going to instruct the head of that Department absolutely to send a ship, but authorize him to do it if he believes the public exigencies will justify him in so doing.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator's amendment is not "if the public exigencies will justify him in so doing," but his amendment puts it in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to determine whether it will be for the public interest of this country to favor this telegraph. That is the form it is in, and I shall vote against it in that form.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to have the Senator explain how that is.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The amendment says in so many words, "if the Secretary of the Navy shall believe the public interest will be promoted by it."

Mr. GRIMES. By detailing a ship.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not believe in asking the Secretary of the Navy whether the public interests of the nation will be promoted or not. If it can be done without detriment to the public service I am for telling him to do it, for I think it is a proper thing to be done.

Mr. MORGAN. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he move simply to strike out the words "and instructed," and then I think there will be no objection to the amendment. The effect of that would be simply to authorize the Secretary to detail a vessel.

Mr. GRIMES. I accept the suggestion, and my amendment is to strike out the words "and instructed" after "authorized" in line four of section two.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I propose to strike out all of that section after the word "soundings" in line eight. The words I propose to strike out are:

Laying down submerged cable, and in transporting materials connected therewith, and generally afford such assistance as may be deemed best calculated to secure a successful promotion of the enterprise.

The effect of my amendment will be to leave the public vessel that may be detailed to be employed in making the surveys and soundings, but not to compel the Government to employ a vessel to transport the materials with which this telegraph company is to build its line.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It does not compel anything; it merely authorizes.

Mr. CONNESS. There is no compulsion about it now with the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRIMES. Then there is no use in having it in. I am not willing even that the Secretary of the Navy should have power, if he sees fit, to employ a public vessel to transport materials from the Atlantic to the Pacific for the purpose of building this line, when I am assured by men in whom I place the utmost confidence that this line will be constructed if we do not give one single copper by way of subsidy.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected—yeas 14, noes 15.

Mr. GRIMES. In the ninth line of the second section I move to strike out the words "and in transporting materials connected therewith." This will leave the Secretary of the Navy at liberty to use a public vessel, if he sees fit, in laying down the telegraph wire, but not in transporting materials.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am really sorry to see such objections made here. The Senate has yielded to the suggestions of the Senator from Iowa and has merely authorized the Secretary of the Navy to use a vessel in aid of this object. When he is authorized to send out a vessel, what objection can the Senator from Iowa have to allowing that vessel to take along some of the materials if the Secretary thinks it proper? He is not compelled to do it. You are not willing to authorize the Government of the United States to cooperate in this great enterprise, but you must put it in the law that a naval vessel shall not be permitted to take along an instrument. Certainly no harm can be done by it. I hope the Senate will vote down all such amendments.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator cannot be any more surprised at me than I am at him. I am surprised that he, a strict constructionist and economist, a man who has always professed to be an extreme economist and strict constructionist, should be in favor of such a proposition as is now under consideration in the Senate. I think I have seen the Senator stickle and higgie on much smaller questions than this. This is a question of granting naval vessels for the purpose of carrying all the materials for this immense company that we are required to pay a subsidy of $50,000 a year to get it to build this line; carrying them either from Europe, as it may be under this provision, or from the Atlantic coast to Behring's straits or to any other such point as the company may determine to lay down its telegraph wires to. I repeat, I am astonished that the Senator from Illinois should be willing to bestow on the chief of any Department of this Government such extraordinary power as is to be given in this section. I frankly confess that I am unwilling to do it. I thought I sympathized with the Senator from Illinois on all such questions as this. I would not confer any such power on the head of any Department.

Mr. CONNESS. The most prominent point that I see in this connection is the suddenness with which the honorable Senator from Iowa has lost confidence in the honorable Secretary.

Mr. GRIMES called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Cowan, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Pomeroy, Ten Eyck, Willey, and Wilson—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Hale, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Powell, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilkinson—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Collamer, Harding, Henderson, Johnson, Morrill, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, and Wright—15.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the bill, but before doing so I want to ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. I understand that there was a bill introduced into the Senate on the 31st of May for increased facilities of telegraphic communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific States and the Territory of Idaho. That bill contained in it a clause for a subsidy of $20,000 per annum. I would inquire of the chairman of the committee whether that bill has been reported back to the Senate with the subsidy stricken out.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir, it has been.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to ask, then, why there is a subsidy in this bill for this telegraph line to every mineral station in California, and none for that line across the continent to Idaho?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will answer the Senator: because we are already paying a subsidy for the same line.

Mr. BROWN. Not the same company.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not the same company; but the committee did not recommend subsidizing a new company for the same line.

Mr. BROWN. I desire then to call the attention of the Senate to the manifest injustice of the action of this committee. Here they go to work and bring in large subsidies for a corporation or for an individual who is proposed to be endowed with a large amount of land and to have the right of running a telegraphic communication not only across the States of California and Oregon, but to make connections with every mining district in that country; and, if I am correctly informed, the interests which connect this company with the present overland company are very closely allied; and yet when there is a proposition to give us a rival communication between the Atlantic and Pacific it is voted down by the Committee on Commerce, the subsidy is stricken out. I cannot understand where the fairness is in that transaction, nor do I appreciate the ground upon which the chairman has predicated the decision of the committee. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to that feature of the bill in connection with some amendments that I may hereafter offer. At the present time I desire to perfect the bill as far as possible, and I offer this amendment—

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will pardon me, the committee would not recommend subsidizing a new line in the same direction. Congress adopted its policy years ago when it was exceedingly doubtful whether a telegraphic communication could be opened with California, and voted a liberal subsidy. Another competing line now asks for a subsidy, but the Committee on Commerce declined to subsidize a new line on the same route. That is the whole of it. There is no inconsistency or injustice in it. We would not certainly recommend subsidizing another line on the route of this.

Mr. BROWN. The present telegraph across the continent is a close monopoly. I move to amend the bill by inserting after the words "open to the public" in line fifteen of section four the following:

And to any other telegraph company upon payment of the regular charges for transmission of dispatches, and all such dispatches shall be transmitted in the order of their reception, and the answers thereto shall be delivered to said companies for transmission over their lines to the office whence the original message was sent.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to strike out all of the tenth line of the fifth section and the word "specified" in the eleventh line. It will be observed—I suppose that it has attracted the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary—that this is a very peculiar provision, authorizing Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this act. It says that "Congress may at any time, having due regard to the rights of said parties hereinbefore specified, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act." We have been in the habit, in all charters granted by Congress since I have been here, of putting in an absolute authority to add to, alter, amend, or repeal them; I therefore move to strike out the tenth line and the word "specified" in the eleventh line, so as to let it stand like all other charters we pass. I propose to strike out the words "having due regard for the rights of said parties hereinbefore specified."

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he would repeal a law without having due regard to the rights of parties to be affected by it?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The clause is put in to control the legal right of Congress.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose that it is put in for the judgment of Congress.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Would there not be the same power if the words were out?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Exactly; and I ask the Senator from Maine then if it would make any difference with his vote if those words were out. Would he not just as soon vote to repeal what is granted here with the words in as he would with them out, and would he ever vote to repeal any law without having what he considered due regard to the rights of the parties?

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is not the question. The question is whether these words would not form a limitation on the power of Congress to act, and whether that was not the intention of putting them in. My opinion is that they would, and that that was the design of putting them in, to restrict the right of Congress over the subject.

Mr. TRUMBULL. In my judgment they would not restrict the power of Congress at all. I think it would be in the discretion of Congress to determine what was a due regard to the rights of the parties, and it would not be a judicial question for anybody else.

Mr. GRIMES. Then you have no objection to striking out the words.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not suppose it would make any difference with anybody's vote. I have no objection to the striking out, but I do not control the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. In the fourth section I move to strike out all after the word "purposes" in the seventh line, down to the word "subject" in the thirteenth line. The words, which are an unusual provision, are:

And in order to secure the same from injury by savages or other evil-disposed persons, to the interruption of the public business, the commanders of the military districts or stations and other officers, acting under authority of the United States in the Territories traversed by said telegraph, shall use any available force at their command to protect the same.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that will not be stricken out.

Mr. WILSON. I had prepared an amendment to this clause which I think ought to be adopted, and I hope no one will object to it.

Mr. GRIMES. I withdraw my amendment, then, that the Senator from Massachusetts may offer his.

Mr. WILSON. I think in the form in which it now stands the clause is very objectionable. It is passing a law allowing this company to command our troops, instead of having them under the control of the Government. I simply propose to insert before "commanders," in line nine of section four, the words "Secretary of War is authorized to direct the;" and in line twelve to strike out "shall" and insert "to;" so as to make it read:

The Secretary of War is authorized to direct the commanders of the military districts or stations, and other officers acting under authority of the United States in the Territories traversed by said telegraph, to use any available force at their command to protect the same.

That puts it under the control of the Secretary of War to direct the military, and to use the power of the Government to protect this line, and I think that ought to be accepted.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I was going to offer an amendment, striking out the grant of a quarter section every fifteen miles, but at the suggestion of one of the Senators who takes some interest in this bill I will modify it. It is thought some little provision may be needed for offices or something of that kind, but there certainly can be no need of one hundred and sixty acres of land. I will move, therefore, to substitute after the words "quarter section," in the twentieth line, the words "ten acres." ["Forty."] Well, I will say forty acres. That is the smallest legal subdivision.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I do not see what use they have for forty acres; I would rather say ten acres.

Mr. CONNESS. Forty acres is the smallest legal subdivision, and it is a small matter at any rate. I hope it will be left.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I cannot see why the telegraph company should want forty acres of land for a station.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, JUNE 21, 1864.

NEW SERIES....No. 193.

Mr. CONNESS. They will not consume it. It will only be given to them to be used.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I will agree to ten acres.

Mr. BROWN. That was my original motion, and I think I will let it stand at ten acres.

Mr. HOWE. It does not seem to me worth while to make this enterprise more expensive than is absolutely necessary, and I suppose every Senator knows it will cost the Government four times as much to survey and set out ten acres from a forty acre tract as the forty acre tract is worth to the Government.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the amendment will not prevail. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARLAN] has a proposition that I will agree to.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Ten acres will make a town every fifteen miles on this line. I think ten acres is as much as we ought to give them. If gentlemen fear the expense of survey they can put in a provision that the expense of the survey shall be borne by the company. Ten acres is as large as these stations ought to be, every fifteen miles. I hope the Senate will limit the amount, and I would propose an amendment that the survey of the ten acres, the town, shall be made at the expense of the telegraph company.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the smallest legal subdivision, forty acres, instead of ten acres. I hope that will be determined, and that we shall not waste time on so small a matter.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Is forty acres accepted on all hands? ["Yes."] If the Senate agree to it all round I will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out "one quarter section," and inserting "forty acres."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I move to amend the first section by striking out in the nineteenth, twentieth, and twenty-first lines, the words "granted to said parties the use of such unappropriated lands not exceeding forty acres for each fifteen miles of line constructed;" and inserting in lieu thereof:

Granted to said parties the use of so much unappropriated public lands not sold, granted, reserved, preempted, nor occupied by homestead settlers, as may be necessary for stations, not exceeding one quarter section for each fifteen miles of line constructed across the public lands of the United States, so long as the same may be used for said purpose.

Mr. BROWN. That has "one quarter section" in it.

Mr. HARLAN. I will suggest to the Senator that out on the plains, a long distance from settlements, it may be necessary for those who watch the stations to cultivate the lands to secure a subsistence; and if they have the use and occupancy of a quarter section of land it may become the nucleus of a new settlement. The fees not to be enjoyed by the company; they only have the enjoyment of the land as long as they use it for stations. It seems to me no detriment will result to the Government.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I submit whether the amendment is in order. The original bill fixed one hundred and sixty acres, and we have just stricken it out and substituted forty acres. Now it is proposed to strike out forty acres and insert one hundred and sixty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are other words to be stricken out with those. This amendment is in order.

Mr. HARLAN. It seemed to me there was some uncertainty in the language of the bill as it stood. It said a quarter section for each fifteen miles of the line. A large portion of the line may not be across the public lands; and it would not be proper, it seems to me, to select public lands for any line not built across the public lands. The language of the bill unamended would convey the use of a much larger quantity of land than this amendment will. This will only convey so much as may be necessary for stations, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres. If a less quantity should be necessary they will only be enabled to hold the smaller quantity.

Mr. BROWN. I trust the amendment will not be adopted, because it virtually restores the bill to what it was before. In the first place, I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifteen miles" and inserting "fifty miles."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. I now move to amend it by striking out "one quarter section" and inserting "forty acres."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TEN EYCK. There is one amendment I wish to propose that has relation to the subsidy in the third section. I move to strike out the proviso at the end of the section. I do not mean to use any words; the reason of it has been discussed and stated, and I trust the Senate will see the propriety of it.

The proviso proposed to be stricken out was read, as follows:

Provided, That if, during any of the fifteen years aforesaid, the business done for the United States under said contract shall, at the ordinary rate of charge for private messages, exceed the sum of $100,000, an account thereof, duly authenticated, shall be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall certify the same to Congress for payment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have read that over two or three times, but I confess myself at a loss to understand what it means.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$50,000." The original bill proposed $100,000 per annum; and the sum named in the proviso was overlooked when the amount was changed. It should be $50,000 to correspond with the bill.

Mr. TEN EYCK. It needs something more yet.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will attend to that in a moment.

Mr. TEN EYCK. It now reads, "provided, that if during any of the fifteen years aforesaid,"

Mr. CHANDLER. I will move to strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves to amend the proviso by striking out "fifteen" and inserting "ten," and striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$50,000."

Mr. TEN EYCK. I do not think it will answer yet according to my judgment. The object is to secure $50,000 by way of subsidy for ten years as the bill is now amended to this company, after the line shall have been completed. If that be the object and the sole object, why have any account kept to be "presented to the Secretary of the Treasury who shall certify the same to Congress for payment?" Does not that contemplate that we are to pay any amount of charge they may ask? Why say $500,000 at all?

Mr. CHANDLER. Up to the $50,000, of course, we shall have paid. Are you not willing if you use the wires to the amount of $100,000 to pay for it?

Mr. TEN EYCK. That is your object, is it?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I was not sure that I understood this before, and it seems that it was not exactly understandable. Now, the amendment makes it look more like something. If I understand it now, and I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, we are to pay $50,000 for ten years, at any rate, whether we have use for it to the extent of five, ten, fifteen or twenty thousand dollars. They are to have that, no matter how small the use of it may be on our part, or if we do not use it at all; but if we use it any more than that, we are to pay the excess on whatever we do use. That is the idea.

One thing more. They are of course to fix their own rate of charges for private messages. Being the only line, having no competitors, they may charge precisely what they please. They will fix their own tariff of charges; we shall have no control over it. They having fixed that, we are to give them $50,000 a year at all events, and if at the rate they charge for private messages, notwithstanding all we do for them, they can bring up the charge for Government business to over fifty thousand dollars in any year, we are to pay that excess, whatever they choose to make it. That is the plain construction of it. All I have to say about it is that it is simply monstrous; in the shape of a bargain or anything of that kind we have no advantage, but every disadvantage; and the Government and the public, after it is built, are to be entirely at the mercy of the company.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator voted in my presence to pay $70,000 a year to the Atlantic Telegraph Company under precisely the same circumstances in every respect.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is the Senator certain that I voted for it?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think so. I did.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You did; that is another matter. The Senator had better go back and look at the record. If I voted for it, I did it very much against my will, and very much against my judgment. I might have been carried away, but my impression is that I did not vote for it.

Mr. CHANDLER. We reserve the right to alter, amend, or take away these privileges.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Undoubtedly, but when do we ever alter, amend, or take them away? The interest that can control this thing so strongly as it evidently does here now can control it then quite as easily, in my judgment. In the first place, how does the matter stand before the Senate? We have a bill reported from a committee, but we have no statement of facts, we have no report, we have nothing from the committee itself. We are told that there are certain contracts, and when the chairman of the committee is inquired of what those contracts are, he says he does not know, he does not remember what they are, and in a few minutes after he says that he has been studying the subject for three months.

Mr. CHANDLER. I gave the substantial facts.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; but it would seem as if the facts upon which the bill is predicated should be familiar at least to the committee. It is the third bill of this kind that ever I saw brought in where a report was not made, and where the papers on which the report was predicated were not brought in for the Senate to look at and see what the facts were.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has had the report on his desk for more than a week.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The report of the committee?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have not seen it. Are the contracts printed?

Mr. CHANDLER. No.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why are not the contracts reported and printed, that we may see what they are? I should like to read the contracts myself, especially as no member of the committee is prepared to tell me what they are.

Mr. McDougall. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Maine that the proposition now is to do something in the form of a legislative contract between the United States and these parties. What has that to do with other outside contracts, supposing this to be a good contract for the Government under the circumstances?

Mr. FESSENDEN. But I am called upon to help to make this contract, and I should like to see the papers on which the contract that I am called upon to vote for is predicated, or to have somebody tell me what they are.

Mr. McDougall. All that the officers of the Government are authorized to do is contained in the provisions of this bill; and what contracts may have been made with outside persons is foreign to this discussion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But what I want to know is what contracts have been made with foreign Governments. It is set forth that some have been made.

Mr. McDougall. I do not see the importance of that.

Mr. Fessenden. I do. Because the Senator does not see it, it is no reason why I should not see it so far as I am concerned. I am afraid it is not considered of any consequence, but I should like to know something about it and have the liberty to examine it.

Mr. Howe. What is the importance of knowing what that contract is?

Mr. Fessenden. How do I know but that this story of a contract being made with foreign Governments is all got up?

Mr. Chandler. Tell you we have seen it.

Mr. Fessenden. Why should I not see it?

Mr. Chandler. What would the Senator from Maine think if I were to demand that he should show me every iota of proof of statements made before the Committee on Finance?

Mr. Fessenden. Certainly. I should show it to the Senate without hesitation.

Mr. Chandler. Suppose I were to get up here and ask him to present every single iota of proof before his committee on every bill?

Mr. Fessenden. I always produce papers when called for.

Mr. Chandler. If I were to ask such a thing I should consider it a piece of downright impertinence.

Mr. Fessenden. The Senator has a very queer idea of impertinence. His idea is that he can bring in a bill founded upon papers, tell us what the papers are, and if we call for them say he does not know what is in them.

Mr. Chandler. I did not say any such thing. I told you what was in them substantially. The papers were before the Committee on Commerce for months.

Mr. Fessenden. In answer to a question put by the Senator from Iowa, if I recollect aright, the Senator from Michigan said he could not remember what was in the papers. Does he deny that he told the Senator from Iowa that he did not remember a certain fact in those papers?

Mr. Chandler. I had not them with me, but I stated substantially what was in them.

Mr. Fessenden. Did not the Senator make that answer to the Senator from Iowa? Has the contract been before the committee?

Mr. Chandler. It has been for months.

Mr. Fessenden. The Senator from New Jersey says he never saw it.

Mr. Lane, of Kansas. I am a member of that committee, and I say those contracts were before the committee.

Mr. Ten Eyck. They may have been, but I have not seen them.

Mr. Lane, of Kansas. Our action was predicated upon the contracts made by Mr. Collins with foreign Governments. My action was governed solely by those contracts.

Mr. Fessenden. It is possible, barely possible, that I might have as good an opinion of my ability to construe and understand a contract, and what it meant, as I should have of the ability of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce to do the same thing.

Mr. Chandler. I will inform the Senator that the Committee on Commerce has upon it as able lawyers as he is himself, and that legal talent is there as well as on some other committees. That committee examined it critically. His colleague, if he were present, would explain all the legal points to him quite as well as he could himself if he had been on the committee.

Mr. Fessenden. I have no question about that; and I was not disputing but that the honorable Senator himself was as able as I was to construe a contract. All I said was that perhaps I might have as good an opinion of my ability to construe and understand a contract as I had of his; at any rate, it would be quite as satisfactory to myself. Further, I have a curiosity to see it, and before I act I do not see why my curiosity should not be gratified in relation to the matter, or why, when I call for the production of a paper which I would like to see upon which to predicate my action, I should be told that it is a piece of impertinence to ask to see a contract on which our committee have acted.

Mr. Chandler. I did not say that. I said that if I demanded the same thing from you it would be so regarded.

Mr. Fessenden. I should think the inference was very obvious. It is a new idea to me. I am getting to learn something. I am informed by the Senator from New Jersey that there is not only no contract here, but no report from the committee.

Mr. Chandler. The committee adopted the report of the Secretary of State as their report.

Mr. Fessenden. It may be; but I have not seen it.

Mr. Lane, of Kansas. Did I understand the Senator from Maine to say that the Senator from New Jersey declared that the contracts were not before the committee?

Mr. Fessenden. He said there was no contract that he was aware of.

Mr. Ten Eyck. I stated that I never saw one. I was told by the Senator from Michigan that the contracts were among the papers. I have gone to the desk and looked at the papers, and I see a copy of some paper, but no original, and there is no report from the committee except the letter of the Secretary of State commending this proposed telegraphic enterprise.

Mr. Chandler. Which the committee adopted.

Mr. Lane, of Kansas. Do I understand the Senator from New Jersey to say—

Mr. Fessenden. I am entitled to the floor; but I yield to this conversation, which seems to be very interesting.

Mr. Lane, of Kansas. I stated that these contracts were before the committee.

Mr. Ten Eyck. I say I never saw them.

Mr. Lane, of Kansas. And the originals were there.

Mr. Johnson. The Senator from New Jersey says they are not here.

Mr. Lane, of Kansas. Do I understand the Senator from New Jersey to say that the contracts were not before the committee?

Mr. Ten Eyck. No, sir; you did not. I never was so blind and rash as that. I say I never saw them, and they are not here now with the papers.

Mr. Lane, of Kansas. The contracts were before the committee.

Mr. Hale. Let me inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether the original contracts were in the Russian or in the English language. [Laughter.]

Mr. Lane, of Kansas. The contracts were before the committee, and Mr. Collins was before the committee with the contracts. I do not remember in what language they were. My knowledge of the Russian has become somewhat dull since I studied the language, [laughter,] and it is not likely I could have read them in that language.

Mr. Conness. I think the whole question is very well set forth in the communication from the Department of State, and the question of contract, as it is called, pretty well determined, too, by a paragraph in that communication where the honorable Secretary says:

"The only political difficulty in the way of the enterprise is the fact that it requires concerted aid from three several States, namely, the United States, Great Britain, and Russia. The two last named Powers have already, with enlightened and fraternal liberality toward the United States, made all the concessions which were demanded. Therefore if Congress shall grant the application of Mr. Collins, no political obstacle will remain."

I do not know what the Senators mean by talking of a contract, and predicating their action upon the production of the original papers or certified copies of them between Mr. Collins and the English Government and Mr. Collins and the Russian Government. I think it is rather an exceptionable exception, if the language be permissible. I have in my hand here also the report of the committee of the House of Representatives, which I will not weary the Senate by reading, though it appears as I cast my eye over it to be very clear and concise upon the whole subject, giving its facts. I apprehend that all the facts going to verify and necessary to verify the substantiality of the arrangements made between those two Governments and Mr. Collins are accessible to the honorable Senator from Maine. I have also here in my hand a report made by my predecessor in this body, Hon. Milton S. Latham, made at the second session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress. This appears to be very complete on the subject and very concise.

But without spending more time on this branch of the subject, I adopt the question propounded by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Howe,] of what consequence is it to us that we shall call for the production of the contracts, as they are termed here—the concessions, perhaps more properly speaking—made by the Governments of Russia and Great Britain to this company or to their agent? The honorable Senator from Maine says it is important to him. I am willing to concede that, but it is not important to me. I am prepared to vote on the information before me. I think the honorable Senator from Maine is not very friendly to this measure. I do not mean to underrate the weight of his arguments nor to try them by that position. But it appears to me that after the length of time which has been spent upon the measure it is, to say the least, a strange mode of opposition.

The honorable Senator, I think, might with great credit to himself—he will permit me to say that—take a prominent part in promoting a measure of this kind. I do not know any measure that has been before this body that is so pregnant with important results to the nation of which the distinguished Senator is so bright an ornament. I have before me, as I before observed, in these communications the necessary facts, I think, to predicate votes and action upon, very clearly and concisely set forth. I will take pleasure, if the Senator desires them, in sending them to his desk.

Mr. Hale. Mr. President—

Mr. Fessenden. I think I cannot give way any longer. I gave way to several gentlemen to hold a conversation when I was discussing the question.

Mr. Conness. I did not know that I was trespassing. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. Fessenden. I was about to say that with reference to my own action in the Committee on Finance, I have always held myself ready to produce any paper upon which our action was predicated, and I have often been called upon and the paper was forthcoming. I never regarded it as anything else than a duty on my part to produce it, and I never regarded it as anything else than a desire on the part of the Senator calling for it to get accurate information, more than I could convey by language, and certainly very proper in itself. That is the view in which I have looked at it, and I was applying the same rule precisely to the case under consideration.

The question about this matter is this: how much would our part of this telegraph, if we had it built, be worth to us unless the other part of it was built? Just nothing at all. Then it becomes us to inquire what the probabilities are and what the binding obligations are. With regard to that, I have frequently found a benefit in understanding a question and seeing what its probabilities were, in looking myself at the papers on which action was proposed to be predicated; and therefore in this case, and in the case of the other telegraph company, I deemed it not improper to comment upon the fact that those papers should be seen by Senators, and ought to be printed for the use of the Senate; that we may examine them before we act upon a question so important as this is. I did not impute any design to any one; far from it; it was a suggestion which I thought an important and a material one, and I am quite sorry that the honorable Senator from Michigan should have taken it in any degree amiss.

I did not intend when I rose to say anything on the main question, having made up my mind originally how I should vote upon it; and my conclusion was that I should not vote for the bill so long as it contained an appropriation of money to the amount of $50,000 a year for ten years, and an indefinite amount as it would seem afterwards. My view is based simply on this reason: it is an undertaking that can wait; it is not material to the development of the resources of this country that it should be done this year or the next; it can wait; and when we are pressed as we are in every direction by matters which relate to the salvation of the country itself, and as Senators know and complain pressed in every direction in the strongest manner with regard to money, this idea of embarking in a contract which is of no particular importance this year any more than next year, which no public exigency now calls for in any way, seems to me to be unwise.

Another thing. I have seen and heard no testimony whatever in relation to the question whether the amount of money proposed to be appropriated is necessary in order to insure the completion of the work. It has been stated here on this floor that this line would be built without the appropriation of any money at all; that if we give the assistance which is required by the bill of a vessel and certain other privileges which are asked for, and about which perhaps there is no dispute, that would be all that would be required, because the work was of such a character that it would pay for itself, and was in the hands of men that were abundantly able to undertake it. It was stated by a Senator on the floor at first that we shall secure to the amount of $50,000 the service of this company after the telegraph is built. But it seems we shall be no better off in consequence of the contract than before, because we have got to pay at all events and all hazards at the going rates, whatever the company may choose to call them, for every communication that we make abroad. I think it was the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] who said that we shall have their services to the amount of $50,000 a year at all events, and that is all we shall have to pay for ten years. The Senator did not observe that by the bill as it stands we have no security about that. We have got to pay the $50,000 if we do not use the telegraph to the extent of $10,000 a year in the way of communication. Gentlemen said it was not a subsidy. Does not that look like a subsidy? They said it was not a bonus. Does it not look like a bonus? We must pay the $50,000 whether we use the line to the amount of fifty dollars or not; but if the service they do amounts to a dollar over the $50,000 we must pay the excess; and on what terms? On just such terms as the company itself, perfectly independent, chooses to establish. It will have no rival; it will have no competing line; it may charge one dollar or one hundred dollars for every word it communicates. All the power we have is the power to repeal the charter, but our money will be paid and our expenses incurred.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. As the honorable Senator has referred to me, he will allow me just at this point to say a word in relation to the proviso providing for certifying the excess to Congress for payment. My attention was not particularly called to that provision in the bill until the discussion occurred after I had spoken, and in relation to it I confess there was some ambiguity in my mind as to what it meant. My own opinion is on further looking at the proviso that the intention of the committee must have been to certify the excess over $100,000 to Congress for payment. The effect, I think, must have been intended to be to pay them $50,000 a year, provided the Government business should not exceed $100,000; but if it should exceed $100,000 the excess over that should be certified for payment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was the explanation which was at first given to me, but on looking at it I saw that it did not meet that, and that is the reason of the inquiry I made of the chairman, and then the chairman alters it and puts it in the position it is now, striking out $100,000 and inserting $50,000. We are to pay $50,000 a year for ten years, whether we have little service or much, or none at all, and if we exceed the $50,000 at the rates they choose to establish, all they have to do is to send in their bill and it is to be certified to Congress for payment, which means that Congress must provide for payment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will say to the honorable Senator that in relation to the charges of this company, I have drawn an amendment which I intend to offer, providing that the amount of charges over this line shall not exceed the ordinary, usual rates for the same service in Europe and in America. I think it is well enough that there should be a limitation on that subject.

Mr. COWAN. I should like to say one word just at this point. How are the public to compel this company after it is chartered to exercise its franchises for their benefit? There are no rates fixed in the bill. If I go to the company to have a telegram carried, what am I to do if they refuse? How am I to tender them the amount to which they are entitled, and compel them to carry the message? This line may be of no use whatever to the community under the present form of the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President—

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to allow me to move for an executive session. There are some important matters that ought to be acted upon in executive session to-day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well.

Mr. McDUGALL. The business of yesterday was urged in the Senate, and I may say forced on some Senators. I trust that now those Senators who believe this really to be a measure of great public importance will not leave the position we have been arguing for several hours, when the measure has been resisted, not by public considerations, but by technical exceptions for the purpose of defeating action as it has seemed to me. I will not charge that as having been the motive of any Senator, but so it has appeared to me. I trust we may have a vote on this measure. Either let it be a thing accomplished or let it be defeated.

Mr. WILSON. I do not know that the Senator from California is authorized to make the statement he has made. There have been several amendments proposed to this bill which have been adopted. I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to have another to propose. This is a very important bill and its friends have taken it up to-day and have had the matter considered. It is Saturday afternoon, nearly half past four o'clock, and there are some nominations that ought to be acted upon to-day, and there is one especially that a request was made a day or two ago that we should get through this week, and I supposed we should have an opportunity to do it. That is the reason I made my motion.

Mr. GRIMES. Will the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his motion to enable me to make a motion to print some of these papers? I find among the papers in this case copies of the Russian and English grants to this telegraph company. I want to have them printed, so that when we come together on Monday we may see what they really are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts has moved an executive session.

Mr. McDUGALL. I will suggest for the information of Senators that, as we have been advised that this is a vast corporation and will make infinite profit, an amendment be made that twenty-five per cent. of the net profits of the whole enterprise be appropriated specifically to, first, the purchase of the New Jersey railroads, and after that for the extinguishment of the fishing bounties on the New England coast.

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw the motion I made, simply to reply in a word to the Senator from California.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion for an executive session is withdrawn.

Mr. WILSON. I do not know what right the Senator from California has to make the suggestions that he has made, or to throw out the insinuations he has thrown out here to-day. Certainly, so far as I am concerned, I have proposed but one amendment to the bill, which the committee accepted, and it was adopted without one word of opposition from any quarter. I do not know why a fling should be made at the State of Massachusetts or Maine.

Mr. McDUGALL. I did not design it as a fling at the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. WILSON. I came into the Senate with the expectation of voting for this bill, and I expect to do it yet; but there have been things brought up on this bill that I had not contemplated, and I want an opportunity to examine it; and propositions are being made to amend it; its very devoted friends tell us that they propose amendments to it. Now, sir, there are some matters in executive session that ought to be acted on.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to have certain papers printed that are connected with this bill in order to enlighten our understanding—the concessions or grants made by the Russian and British Governments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the order to print will be made.

Mr. WILSON. I renew my motion for an executive session.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn. The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I hope we shall not go into executive session, but will try and act upon this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are papers to be printed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know there are; but I understand, I think, the motion to print those papers. For myself, I have no special interest in this bill; I was inclined to look favorably upon something of the kind. I have not examined the bill very carefully—

Mr. WILSON. The motion for an executive session is pending.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am opposed to going into executive session.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is debatable, and it has been so decided, I will inform the Senator from Maine; and as a reason for not going into executive session, I desire to state that I think it would be more advisable to proceed with this bill. I think it would be more advisable to do so because of the character of the opposition which has been made to it, and especially because of some of the allusions which have fallen from the Senator from Maine. In the course of his remarks, when it was suggested by some one that this bill was in the power of Congress and might be repealed at any time, he replied that the same influences could control Congress on the question of repeal as controlled it here now. If the Senator from Maine meant by that to insinuate that improper influences were controlling members of the Senate in their action on this bill, it was unparliamentary; it was out of order; and if he did not mean that, I do not know what he did mean; and I would say to the Senator from Maine that it is quite as probable that improper influences may have controlled those opposing the bill as those who are for the bill; quite as probable that they may have been plied by rival interests as those favorable to the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. What rival interest is there?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Lobbyists about here electioneering with Senators to get them to go against this bill.

Mr. GRIMES. What rival interest is there to this bill? That is what I want to know.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not choose myself even to insinuate that Senators are governed by improper motives. I never made such an insinuation against any Senator in my life. I endeavor to address myself to the question under consideration if I see anything about it; I never impute improper motives, or attempt to hunt up motives other than those governing the public conduct of men for their actions. I never make those imputations; I do not impute them now; and I am not going to say to the Senator from Iowa that I suppose any improper motive has been brought to bear upon any Senator to oppose this bill, but I say it is just as reasonable to suppose it one way as the other, and I think they are very improper allusions and unparliamentary allusions upon either side.

The object of this bill is not to involve the country in such a great undertaking as to alarm the nation. Possibly it had best not be passed at all. I have been thinking about the bill. I have been favorably inclined toward it, because I thought it was inaugurating a great enterprise with very little expense, and nothing is to be paid unless it is a success, and then but $50,000 a year to be paid on a contract to be made by the Secretary of State of the United States after this work is completed. It is said there are no limitations in the bill. Perhaps there ought to be some in it. The Senator from Maine is very astute, and in a moment he could have proposed limitations that would obviate any defects of that kind, if any are necessary besides the limitation of interest which will be upon the company of course. They will want to do business. It will be no object for any set of men to construct a telegraph and then do no business upon it; and whatever price they charge individuals they are to charge the Government of the United States. They would have to charge, I presume, reasonable prices to command business; but if it is necessary to fix the rates, that is another consideration. It is perhaps better that they should be fixed.

I desired to make these remarks in opposition to going into executive session and upon this motion, because I thought it would be better in good temper and without undertaking to impugn the motives of brother Senators here, or insinuate that any improper influences are at work with anybody (for I assume that there are none anywhere,) to go on and finish the bill and vote upon it, either reject it or pass it as may be thought advisable. For myself I prefer to see it passed, but I should have no sort of feeling if the Senate reject it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not choose to take the lecture which the honorable Senator from Illinois has seen fit to read to me, without a word of reply, even at the risk of being considered ill-natured; and the reply that I shall make will be purely in self-defense. I made the careless remark that with regard to the remedy afforded by reserving the right to repeal the bill, it was no remedy at all, and everybody knew it was not, that the same influence—I cannot repeat the exact language—which would pass a bill that was improper would prevent its being repealed. I did not mean to be understood, of course, as imputing corruption or wrong to anybody; but any one who has seen the course upon this bill to-day can see that there is a very strong feeling about it. I do not impute any feeling to the honorable Senator from Illinois, because all of us who know him know that he is always so perfectly calm and self-possessed, and cares so little even for his own opinions, and is always so ready to yield, that anything of that kind would not apply to him of all men in the world.

What I meant is very simply stated. We all know that there has been great interest about this bill, that there have been lobby agents, that members of the Senate have been talked to, and their aid solicited, and their feelings have become interested to some degree, and their opinions have been pretty strongly formed. Can that be denied? I have seen it over and over again in the Senate in different quarters.

Mr. CONNESS rose.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir, I beg not to be interrupted.

Mr. CONNESS. A very queer way to beg.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is my way.

Mr. CONNESS. It is a very bad way.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a matter of taste.

Mr. CONNESS. Well, sir, it is bad taste.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order!

Mr. FESSENDEN. At any rate, I do not choose to be interrupted now. I have seen bills here over and over again in which there has been a very considerable feeling exhibited on the part of the Senate. I did not impute corruption or wrong motives to anybody. Look at the circumstances of the case. This morning the honorable Senator from Massachusetts told the Senate, what we knew before, that there were very important bills in relation to military affairs that he desired and that the War Department were very anxious should be disposed of, and we are just at the heel of the session; and yet on a yea and nay vote those bills, pressing as they are, were laid aside for this private enterprise, for the passage of which there is certainly no very great haste. It exhibited to me a pretty strong feeling on the subject and a pretty strong desire to put it through. But in the remark I made I did not mean—and the Senator had no right to draw that conclusion—to impute improper motives to anybody, so that so far as any unparliamentary language or improper insinuation is concerned, it comes from him and not from me. He should wait until I use language that necessarily conveys an impression of that sort, and not that may be tortured into it by one who is disposed to make a speech about it.

That is all I have to say on that particular part of the subject, but one word more to my friend from Illinois. He feels disposed, and he exhibits it on a great many occasions, to take me up very sharply if I by accident say anything that allows him to do it. I have repeatedly explained and repeatedly said to him that he misunderstood me; but there is hardly an occasion, if he is present in the Senate, when I drop a word which can be misconstrued, that my very excellent friend from Illinois does not exhibit the determination to put it in its worst attitude before the Senate. I think he is unjust to me in that particular, and I have gone as far in my explanations to him both in public and in private as I am disposed to do; but if he is determined to press a quarrel on me, he shall have it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Illinois presses quarrels upon nobody, and never manifests a disposition to misconstrue anybody. The Senator from Illinois protects himself in his own way against the imputations even of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Maine has made none.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Or any other person who thinks it in his line of duty to make those insinuations; and the threat of a readiness to quarrel will not deter me at any time from maintaining what I believe to be the just rights of a member of the body or the just rights of the body itself. In my judgment, remarks impugning the motives of Senators are unparliamentary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator allow me to ask—

Mr. TRUMBULL. When I am through, not till then.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I want to ask just here what—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois does not yield the floor.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator will keep his seat until I am through, and then he may make such remarks as he thinks proper. In my judgment, remarks imputing improper motives to members of the body are unparliamentary. I so understand the parliamentary law. In that I may be in error, but that is my view. I am not the only Senator who regarded the remarks of the Senator from Maine as unparliamentary. Senators older than I am and of longer service spoke of them as unparliamentary at the time. The Senator from Maine may not be aware, I do not think he is aware, of the manner—I hardly know what expression to use—he can hardly be aware of the bitterness that seems to be conveyed, not intentionally I hope, by insinuations of this kind. I am not alone in the Senate, I am not alone among the members of this body who think there is hardly an associate of the Senator from Maine that some time or other he has not taken occasion to make remarks that have led to—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will yield the floor when I am through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin rises to a question of order.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will hear the question.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. My point of order is that the motion to go into executive session is not debatable.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is too late to raise that question.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The question is made. I ask for a decision on it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I raise the question. I think the motion is not debatable, to this extent, at all events.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair a motion to go into executive session under the practice is debatable to a certain extent, but the Chair will take occasion to say that this debate has been entirely out of order, and beyond the proper range of debate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope not. The Senator from Illinois ought not to be cut off in the middle of a tirade of lecture upon me, and I have no chance to reply to it. That is unjust.

Mr. JOHNSON. The motion to adjourn perhaps is not debatable, but I will say that I want to cut him off; I want to stop the debate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is very unjust to me. He is charging me with giving offense to the members of the Senate. I could characterize that thing elsewhere, perhaps, in language that I could not use here.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I ask that the 18th rule of the Senate be read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

"18. On a motion made and seconded to shut the doors of the Senate, on the discussion of any business which may, in the opinion of a member, require secrecy, the President shall direct the gallery to be cleared; and during the discussion of such motion the doors shall remain shut."

Mr. HALE. With great deference to my friend from Iowa, that rule does not apply. It has no reference to going into executive session. I ask the Senate to indulge me for a moment. The question now before the Senate I believe is debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appeal is debatable.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I thought the motion was to adjourn.

Mr. HALE. The question is on the appeal from the decision of the Chair. The rule to which the Senator from Iowa alludes I never saw acted under but once, and many members here will recollect the time. Once Mr. Mason, of Virginia, wanted us to go into executive session. The Senate refused, by a large majority, to go in. He insisted on it; he said it was in his power, under the rules of the Senate, to compel the Senate to shut the doors; and he read that rule, and stated that there was business which required secrecy, and thereupon, without a vote of the Senate, the Chair ordered the room to be cleared. The rule relates to an entirely different case. If, in the course of legislation, any one member of the body has matter to lay before the Senate which he thinks should be debated in secret session, and he so states, he has a right to have the Senate cleared, without any vote; but it has no reference to an executive session.

Mr. HARLAN. I differ with the Senator as to the plain meaning of the language. What is meant by an executive session? I suppose that when construed it means that the doors be closed for the consideration of secret business. It can have no other meaning. There is no other rule for going into executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, "Shall the decision—"

Mr. JOHNSON. Does this appeal supersede my motion to adjourn?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator as insisting on that motion.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have, in common I think with nearly all the members of the Senate, listened with regret to the difference which, perhaps more from accidental circumstances than anything else, has arisen between the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Maine. It has been my good fortune to have constant association with the Senator from Maine and to listen to his debates on this floor; and perhaps to have still more association because of the relation in which I stand to him as a member of the committee of which he is chairman, with the Senator from Illinois. I think perhaps they have misunderstood each other. If the Senator from Illinois supposes that it is the impression of the Senate that the Senator from Maine by his course in this body has been so particularly unfortunate as to have placed himself in an offensive attitude to the members of the Senate, I am sure that he is mistaken. We are all of us more or less at times under the control of impulses, and we have all of us at times uttered in a moment of excitement what we afterwards upon cooler reflection much regret. The Senator from Maine will pardon me for saying, as I say it in his presence, that notwithstanding there may be in his temperament or character a tendency to those impulses, there is more than a countervailing quality which he ever exhibits; that is to say, a generous nature which when it is, as it almost always is, manifested, gives to him as a member of this body a character of great fairness and eminent ability. If he ever has offended any member of the body, or wounded his sensibility, it has ever been from a sense of the necessity of vindicating himself, and with no purpose of inflicting a wrong. It is, Mr. President, a part of the nature of an elevated man that, however sensitive he may be to any assault direct or indirect upon his own character, the moment he has defended it all feeling of anger terminates and he appears in the character which Providence has given him. In the instance of the Senator from Maine he has reason and his State and his friends have reason to be gratified with and proud of the character which he possesses in the estimation of the Senate and of the country.

I make the same observations of the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee. Mr. President, I have lived a good deal longer than either of these two Senators, and have outlived the excitement to which I was subject in my earlier years, and up perhaps to the period of life which they have respectively attained. But it is due to him to say that, although I think he has occasionally transcended the bounds which his cooler judgment would have prescribed, he never in any instance has designedly offended any member of this body.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator allow the Chair, before putting the question on the motion to adjourn, to lay before the Senate some bills from the House of Representatives?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to withdraw my appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be withdrawn if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (No. 514) to amend "An act to extend the charter of the Alexandria and Washington railroad, and for other purposes," passed March 3, 1863; and

A bill (No. 522) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, their Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which thereupon received the signature of the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 179) concerning lands in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. No. 217) to confirm certain entries of land in the State of Missouri; and

A joint resolution (S. No. 59) to provide for the revision of the laws of the District of Columbia.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives insisted upon its amendment to the bill of the Senate (No. 266) to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. T. D. ELIOT of Massachusetts, Mr. WILLIAM HIGBY of California, and Mr. N. PERRY of New Jersey, managers at the same on its part.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 266) to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate and insisted on by the House; and it was Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the said bill, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MORRILL, Mr. TEN EYCK, and Mr. RICHARDSON.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the forty-third amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 240) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1865, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, and had agreed to all the other amendments of the Senate to the said bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the forty-third amendment of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill. They have made a merely verbal amendment, to strike out the word "Cherokees" in one line, and insert the words "as well as the Cherokees" in the next line, which does not in any way alter the sense.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was concurred in.

Mr. JOHNSON. I renew the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the bill under consideration made the special order for Tuesday at half past twelve o'clock. ["No, no."]

Mr. BROWN. I object.

The motion of Mr. JOHNSON was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 18, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, REV. W. H. CHANNING.

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio, moved that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

OVERLAND MAIL BIDS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Postmaster General, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of 16th instant, directing information to be furnished as to what bids were made for carrying the mail on the overland route to the Pacific, whether any of the bidders were persons connected with the present Overland Mail Company, &c. The Postmaster General transmits a memorandum of the bids received for the entire or through route, and states that William B. Dinsmore is the only bidder officially known to the Department as connected with the present Overland Mail Company.

The communication was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY ROAD TO LAKE SUPERIOR.

Mr. McINDOE. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table the Senate amendment to House bill No. 247, granting lands to the State of Wisconsin to build a military road to Lake Superior.

There being no objection, the amendment was taken up for action.

Mr. SLOAN. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in. It was reported last evening.

The question was taken, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. McINDOE moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask to have taken from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 266, to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up for action.

Mr. ELIOT. I move that the House insist on its amendments to the bill, and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask leave to report from the Committee of Ways and Means a bill making appropriations for certain miscellaneous expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1865, and for other purposes.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If that is not a general appropriation bill the Committee of Ways and Means has no right to report it.

Mr. STEVENS. These items have been referred to the committee, and therefore we report this bill; but it is not a general appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of Ways and Means has the right to report general appropriation bills at any time; but to report any other bill it must ask consent.

Mr. STEVENS. That is what I am doing now.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object.

PRINTING AGRICULTURAL REPORTS.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask consent to introduce a resolution directing the Committee on Printing to inquire into the propriety of printing a number of copies of the agricultural report for the purposes therein mentioned.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I object.

Mr. DAWES. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania state what are the "purposes therein mentioned?"

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects, and the resolution is not before the House.

POST ROADS.

Mr. COLE, of California, called for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER stated the first business in order to be the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 532) to establish certain post roads reported yesterday, and withheld so as to have one or two additional routes inserted.

Mr. ALLEY. I ask leave to have some routes added in New York and Ohio.

There being no objection, the bill was amended.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REBELLION LOSSES.

The SPEAKER stated that the next business in order was the consideration of House bill No. 533, to provide for ascertaining and adjusting claims against the Government for injury or destruction of property by the Army of the United States or by military authority during the present rebellion, on which the main question had been ordered.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Has the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] been agreed to?

The SPEAKER. It has been.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HARDING. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order unless it shall be found, upon actual count, that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER having counted the House, and ascertained that there were only eighty-seven members present, stated that the motion for a call of the House was in order.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was then called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. William J. Allen, Allison, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Coffroth, Cox, Henry, Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Frank, Garfield, Grider, Grinnell, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jencks, Kalbfleisch, King, Littlejohn, Mallory, McAllister, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, Daniel Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Odell, John O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Tracy, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Webster, Whaley, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman.

Mr. STILES moved to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 41.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The list of absentees was called.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. There are one hundred and nineteen members present, and I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The House was divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 20.

Mr. HARDING demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. WADSWORTH demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARDING and A. MYERS were appointed.

The House divided; and there were—ayes twenty-five, more than one fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 99, nays 19, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Arnold, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Bliss, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chanler, Cobb, Cole, Cravens, Dawes, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Edgerton, Eldridge, Eliot, English, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Griswold, Hale, Charles M. Harris, Higby, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Kerian, Knapp, Knox, Law, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, McIndoe, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Perry, Pike, Price, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, John B. Steele, Strouse, Thayer, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Wadsworth, Elihu B. Wash-barne, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—99.

YAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Creswell, Dawson, Eden, Finck, Ganson, Harding, Hutchins, Long, McDowell, James R. Morris, Noble, Ross, Scott, Stiles, and Thomas—19.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. William J. Allen, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Ashley, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Coffroth, Cox, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, Grider, Grinnell, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hooper, Hubbard, Jencks, Kalbfleisch, Kelley, King, Lazar, Littlejohn, Mallory, Marcy, McAllister, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller, Daniel Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Norton, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Pomeroy, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Stevens, Stuart, Sweat, Tracy, Voorhees, Ward, Webster, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—64.

So all further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the Senate (No. 145) to equalize the pay of soldiers in the United States Army; that it had insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate (No. 55) in relation to the circuit court in and for the district of Wisconsin, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointed Messrs. TRUMBULL, COLLAMER, and POWELL the conferees on its part; that it had insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to bill of the House No. 450, to provide for the repair and preservation of certain public works of the United States; agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointed Messrs. CHANDLER, MORRILL, and MORGAN the conferees on its part; that it had further insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, and also on its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 192) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1865; agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointed Messrs. SHERMAN, COWAN, and DAVIS the conferees on its part; and that it had insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, and also disagreed to the amendments of the House to its amendments to the bill of the House (No. 405) to provide internal revenue to pay the interest on the public debt, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointed Messrs. FESSENDEN, HOWE, and VAN WINKLE the conferees on its part.

PAY OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the Senate (No. 145) to equalize the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the part of the Senate and House of Representatives upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to Senate bill No. 145, entitled "An act to equalize the pay of soldiers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes," having met and had a full and free conference upon the proposed Senate amendments to the House amendments to said bill, report as follows:

1. In the fourth and fifth lines of the first Senate amendment, strike out the words "regular Army and volunteer and drafted forces in the," and insert the word "military" in lieu thereof.

2. After the word "quartermasters," in the seventh line of said amendment, strike out all down to and including the word "dollars," in the ninth line of said Senate amendment, and insert in lieu thereof "and commissary sergeants of cavalry, artillery, and infantry, twenty-two dollars."

3. After the word "privates," in the fourteenth line of said first Senate amendment, strike out all down to and including the word "corps" in the sixteenth line of said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof, "of engineers and ordnance of the first class, eighteen dollars; and of the second class."

4. After the word "dollars" in the twenty-second line of said first Senate amendment, strike out all of said amendment down to the word "sixteen" in the twenty-fourth line, and insert in lieu thereof "leaders of brigade and regimental bands, seventy-five dollars; musicians." And that the House of Representatives agree to the said Senate amendment with the foregoing amendments.

5. That the Senate recede from its second amendment to wit, the insertion of section three.

6. That the House of Representatives agree to the third amendment of the Senate, to wit, the insertion of section four.

7. That the Senate recede from its fourth amendment, to wit, the insertion of section five.

8. In the second line of the sixth section of the Senate amendment strike out all of said section after the words "sergeant major," and insert in lieu thereof, "who shall be paid thirty-six dollars per month; and one quartermaster sergeant, who shall also be commissary sergeant, who shall be paid twenty-two dollars per month;" and that the House of Representatives do agree to said amendment of the Senate as amended.

9. That the House of Representatives do agree to the sixth Senate amendment, to wit, the insertion of section seven.

10. Strike out all the fourth, fifth, and all of the sixth line down to the word "and" in the seventh Senate amendment, and insert the following in lieu thereof: "the rank, pay, and allowance of a brigadier general; and an Assistant Judge Advocate General, with the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel of cavalry."

11. After the word "Advocate" in the seventh line of said seventh Senate amendment insert the word "General;" and that the House of Representatives do agree to said Senate amendment as amended.

12. That the House of Representatives agree to the eighth Senate amendment, being the insertion of section nine.

13. That the House of Representatives do agree to the ninth Senate amendment, to wit, the insertion of section ten.

14. That the House of Representatives agree to the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth of said Senate amendments.

HENRY WILSON,

J. W. NESMITH,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,

F. W. KELLOGG,

JAMES S. ROLLINS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. Before calling the previous question I will explain the character of this report. The House will recollect that this bill was called "A bill to equalize the pay of soldiers of the Army of the United States" when it came to us first from the Senate, as it was a bill to equalize the pay of colored and white troops. The Military Committee of the House proposed as an addition to that bill an amendment to increase the pay of all the soldiers of the Army, but the original portion of the Senate bill having been afterwards incorporated by the House into a general appropriation bill, which passed and has become a law, all that part of the bill fell to the ground, and the title of this bill has been changed to "A bill increasing the pay of the soldiers of the Army of the United States."

Being a bill of this character, the Senate propose to amend the first section of it as it was passed by the House, and the committee of conference has agreed to that new section added by the Senate with some slight modifications.

The first is the substitution of "military service" in the place of "regular Army and volunteer and drafted forces in the service." The effect of the amendment of the Senate would be not to put the payment of the militia upon the same footing with the volunteer and drafted men or soldiers of the regular Army. The committee of conference have agreed to substitute the general term "military service of the United States," so that the hundred days' men and all others called into the service of the United States shall receive the same pay. To this I apprehend there can be no objection.

The Senate amendment contained the following provision in reference to the amount of pay of the officers therein mentioned:

Sergeant majors, twenty-six dollars; quartermasters' sergeants of cavalry and artillery, twenty-three dollars; of infantry, twenty dollars.

The Senate made the pay of quartermasters' sergeants of cavalry and artillery twenty-three dollars a month, and left the pay of quartermasters' sergeants of infantry at twenty dollars. The committee have agreed to place these officers on the same footing, and make the pay of all twenty-two dollars a month. If the recommendation of the committee of conference is adopted the clause I have referred to will read as follows:

Sergeant majors, twenty-six dollars; quartermasters' and commissary sergeants of cavalry, artillery, and infantry, twenty-two dollars.

Another amendment to that section is made, simply verbal in its character. It provides that privates of engineers and ordnance of the first class and of the second class shall receive six-ty-two dollars a month.

The next amendment relates to the pay of leaders of brigade and regimental bands. As the law at present stands, the leader of a regimental band in the regular Army gets $125 a month, while the leader of a brigade band in the volunteer service gets only forty-five dollars a month. The committee of conference were unable to understand why music played for a whole brigade of volunteers ought to be paid for at a less rate than music for a single regiment in the regular Army; they have therefore put them both at a medium sum, seventy-five dollars.

There was also a difference made between the musicians in the artillery and infantry. The committee have put all the musicians, whether artillery, infantry, or engineer, on the same footing, at sixteen dollars a month, the same as privates. Those are the only changes made in the first section.

The third section provides for a system for the issuing of supplies in lieu of Army rations for soldiers in hospitals. Both the Senate and the House committee were disposed at first to concur in this as a part of the law, but upon subsequent inquiry at the commissary department it was ascertained that it would be attended with great inconvenience and difficulty. We concluded, therefore, to leave the law as it now is, and not to interfere with it for the present.

Another change is this: the Senate conferees have agreed to recede from their fourth amendment, section five, which is the section which provides for extra compensation to those soldiers who are detailed as clerks here in Washington, and at the headquarters of the several departments and military divisions. The conferees on the part of the House, not seeing any sufficient reason for giving a precedence to those employes here or at headquarters over other soldiers detailed for clerk's duty, objected to that, and the amendment was receded from by the Senate.

The next amendment is in the eighth section. The Senate have introduced into this bill a bill which has passed the House establishing a Bureau of Military Justice. They changed the bill, however, as it passed the House, when they came to attach it to this bill, by fixing the salary of the Judge Advocate at $5,000, and taking away from him all military rank. The objection to that is that inasmuch as all the subordinate judges advocate who are to serve under him have by law the military rank of majors, he, as their military head, having no military rank, could not order the arrest of any officer, or do any other military act over his subordinates. It was therefore thought better to restore the bill and make it precisely as it passed the House of Representatives. The only difference is that the Senate reduced the number of assistants from two to one, to which the conferees of the House agreed; so that the provision stands as it passed the House, except that there is one assistant with the rank of colonel instead of two assistants.

The other amendments are merely formal, not touching in any way the substance of the bill. With these remarks, unless some gentlemen have any inquiries to make, unless I have not made myself clear enough, I move the previous question on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 179) concerning lands in the State of California; when the Speaker signed the same.

REBELLION LOSSES.

The House then resumed, as the unfinished business of yesterday, bill of the House No. 523, to provide for ascertaining and adjusting claims against the Government for the injury or destruction of property by the Army of the United States, or by military authority during the present rebellion, the pending question being on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 70, nays 54, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ailey, Anderson, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, William G. Brown, Coffroth, Cravens, Creswell, Dawes, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Grider, Hale, Harding, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Kelley, Kerian, Knox, Lazar, Le Blond, Loan, Long, Marcy, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, McDowell, Middleton, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Moorhead, James R. Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ross, Schenck, Scott, Smithers, John B. Steele, Stevens, Strouse, Stuart, Thomas, Van Valkenburgh, Wadsworth, Ward, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Williams, Wilder, Windom, and Winfield—70.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Ancona, Arnold, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Bliss, Brandegee, Chandler, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cole, Dawson, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eden, Elliot, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Gooch, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, William Johnson, Julian, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Knapp, Longyear, Meludoe, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Norton, Orth, Pendleton, Perham, Perry, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Shannon, Stiles, Thayer, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburne, and Woodbridge—54.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ashley, Blaine, Blow, Brooks, James S. Brown, Clay, Cobb, Cox, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Denning, Donnelly, Dumont, Edgerton, English, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herriek, Higby, Jenckes, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, King, Law, Littlejohn, Mallory, McAllister, McKinney, Morrison, John O'Neill, Patterson, Pruyn, William H. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Scofield, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Sweet, Tracy, Voorhees, Webster, Joseph W. White, Wilson, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—58.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. DEMING stated that he was paired off on this bill with Mr. HARRINGTON, who would have voted "ay," while he [Mr. DEMING] would have voted "no."

Mr. WILSON stated that he was paired off on this bill with Mr. WEBSTER, who would have voted for the bill, while he [Mr. WILSON] would have voted against it.

Mr. WINDOM stated that his colleague, Mr. DONNELLY, was paired off with Mr. HERRICK.

The vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER stated that the next business in order was the consideration of Senate bill No. 54, reported back last evening from the Committee for the District of Columbia, in reference to a street railroad in the District of Columbia, the pending question being to amend by striking out the proviso that there shall be no regulation excluding any person from any car on account of color.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN called for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 60, nays 76, not voting 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Ancona, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Bliss, Brooks, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chandler, Coffroth, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Griswold, Harding, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kerian, Knapp, Law, Lazar, Le Blond, Loan, Long, Marcy, McDowell, McKinney, Middleton, Morrison, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ross, Schenck, Scott, Smithers, John B. Steele, Stevens, Strouse, Stuart, Thomas, Van Valkenburgh, William B. Washburne, Ward, Whaley, Wheeler, Joseph W. White, and Winfield—60.

NAYS—Messrs. Ailey, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Dawes, Denning, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Elliot, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, Meludoe, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Stuart, Thayer, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburne, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—76.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Blow, Clay, Cox, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, English, Grinnell, Hale, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herriek, Jenckes, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Littlejohn, Mallory, McAllister, McBride, Odell, John O'Neill, William H. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Strouse, Sweet, Tracy, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Webster, Chilton A. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—46.

So the amendment was rejected.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. PRICE stated that Mr. ALLISON had paired with Mr. FERNANDO WOOD.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN moved to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was disagreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading. I do it for the purpose of correcting an amendment which was inserted by mistake. I will state what it is: an amendment was reported and passed which required the company to pave the street for six feet on each side of the track in addition to paving and keeping in repair the pavement between the tracks. That amendment was not agreed to by the committee, and it was inserted by mistake. The original bill required the company to pave two feet each side of the track.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the amendment referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin will be stricken from the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think six feet on each side of the track is not too much.

Mr. WHEELER. I was not directed to report the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Then to relieve the difficulty of the gentlemen I ask him to allow me to submit the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. I will if the third reading of the bill is reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The vote adopting the amendment referred to was then by unanimous consent reconsidered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now submit that amendment as my own.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes fifty, noes not counted.

The bill was again ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. BEAMAN. Is that motion in order, the same motion having been made and voted down?

The SPEAKER. The motion is in order, action having been had upon the bill since the motion was made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. J. C. ALLEN.]

The motion was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 82, nays 47, not voting 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ailey, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Broomall, William G. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cole, Denning, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Elliot, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Griswold, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, Julian, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, Meludoe, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Radford, Perry, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Stewart, Thayer, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, William B. Washburne, Wheeler, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—82.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Ancona, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, Bliss, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chandler, Coffroth, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Finck, Grider, Harding, Charles M. Harris, Hutchins, William Johnson, Knapp, Le Blond, Loan, Marcy, McDowell, McKinney, Middleton, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, Pendleton, Perry, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Sloan, James S. Rollins, Ross, John B. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, and Winfield—47.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Clay, Cobb, Cox, Cravens, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, Ganson, Grinnell, Hale, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herriek, Holman, Jenckes, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, Kerian, King, Law, Lazar, Littlejohn, Mallory, McAllister, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, John O'Neill, Pruyn, William H. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Schenck, Scott, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Stuart, Sweet, Thomas, Tracy, Voorhees, Webster, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—53.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. PATTERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate have passed the bill of the House (No. 494) to increase the duties on imports, and for other purposes, with amendments; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. I suppose it is hardly necessary to have it printed.

Mr. BROOKS. I hope we shall be allowed to have these amendments in print.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well, I move, then, that the amendments be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I am directed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back the amendments of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill, and to ask that they may now be considered. We recommend a concurrence, in one case with a slight amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object to the amendments being considered at this time.

Mr. STEVENS moved that they be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, in the chair.)

Mr. STEVENS moved to take up the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 240, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1865.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. What are those amendments? Do they provide for anything extraordinary?

Mr. STEVENS. They are all founded on estimates from the Department, and some are to carry out treaties made and ratified since the original bill was passed.

The amendments of the Senate were severally concurred in with one slight amendment.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the amendments of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with the recommendation that they be concurred in with an amendment.

The action of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD BILL.

The SPEAKER stated the next business in order to be the consideration of the Pacific railroad bill.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. This day has been specially set apart for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Naval Affairs. Already two hours have been taken up with other matters, and I ask that the pending bill be postponed until some other day in the morning hour. We have many bills to present, and unless we soon begin we will not be able to accomplish much to-day.

Mr. STEVENS. Will there not be time enough after the morning hour?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. There will not.

Mr. PRICE. I hope that this bill will not be postponed. It has already been postponed from day to day, and I now want it disposed of.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move that it be postponed until the morning hour of Tuesday next.

Mr. PRICE. I cannot agree to that, and I hope that the motion will be voted down.

Mr. STEVENS. What will be the effect of the postponement?

The SPEAKER. Tuesday has been devoted to the business of the Committee on Military Affairs, and the morning hour will occur in the evening, if there be an evening session.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope that the bill will be postponed. I want to be heard on the subject; and I think that it is reasonable we should yield to the business of the Committee on Naval Affairs, as this day was specially set apart for that purpose. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that that committee will propose several matters of great interest to the West.

Mr. COLE, of California. I object to the postponement. The Naval Committee has already had the attention of the House, and this is the first time that the special committee has had a chance. This bill can be disposed of in a short time. Its provisions are clear and plain. I presume that it can be disposed of this morning.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think not. Mr. COLE, of California. It can unless there be factious opposition.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I shall make no factious opposition. I want to be heard, and ask that the bill shall be postponed until Monday or Tuesday next.

Mr. WILSON. The same motion will be made next Tuesday evening, unless in the mean time the tariff bill is disposed of. It will take a good deal of iron to build this line, and I apprehend that this motion will be made and continued until the iron question is disposed of in some way or other. I do not think that there will be any antagonism. The original charter provides that none but American iron shall be used.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I want to speak on the Pacific railroad bill, and am not now prepared. I hope that it will be postponed.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think the bill will be passed during this morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If gentlemen do not desire to press the bill to a vote this morning, I have not so much objection to proceeding with it now, though I think the Committee on Naval Affairs ought to have the day set apart for them. There have been two hours of the day already consumed by other business.

Mr. McBRIDE. I desire to say that we have a bill of the Senate before us which differs very materially from the bill of the House, and it is important that this bill should be acted on soon, because there is evidently a disagreement of sentiment between the two Houses which must be reconciled if we expect to pass this bill this session. One thing is certain, this disagreement must be reconciled in some way, and the action of the House should be taken at an early day in order to secure some amendments, which all parties agree ought to be made.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to inquire if we are to have an evening session today?

The SPEAKER. There will be, this evening and every other evening unless otherwise ordered; but a motion to adjourn would adjourn the House over until Monday. If the hour of four and a half arrives without any such motion being made, the House will then take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I trust gentlemen will withdraw their objection and let this matter go over.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to postpone the Pacific railroad bill until next Tuesday.

Mr. McBRIDE. If the motion to postpone is voted down, will the Committee on Naval Affairs be entitled to have this evening session?

The SPEAKER. No order of that kind has yet been made by the House.

Mr. WILSON. I would inquire what will be the situation of this bill if the motion of the gentleman from Illinois prevails?

The SPEAKER. It will be postponed until the time indicated—next Tuesday in the morning hour, which will occur in the evening if there is an evening session. If there be no evening session, there will be no morning hour, as the whole day is set apart for other business.

Mr. STEVENS. I now ask that, by unanimous consent, there be an evening session on Tuesday.

Mr. BROOKS. Is that question debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. BROOKS. I am sorry, because I was going to say, if it was in order, that I hope we shall have no more evening sessions. We have too much time already, and I do not think there will be an acre of the public lands left if we have many evening sessions.

Mr. STEVENS. The evening session is for the consideration of this particular matter.

The SPEAKER. The question is, "Shall there be an evening session on Tuesday for the consideration of the Pacific railroad bill and nothing else?"

Mr. STEELE, of New York. If unanimous consent should be given now for an evening session on Tuesday, could not a majority adjourn over on Tuesday?

The SPEAKER. There must be an evening session if ordered by unanimous consent. If a motion to adjourn should be made Tuesday afternoon and prevail, the House would adjourn to Tuesday night, to the hour which, by unanimous consent, had been fixed for an evening session.

No objection being made, it was ordered that an evening session should be held on Tuesday evening next.

Mr. PRICE. Now I hope the motion to postpone will not prevail.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the motion to postpone was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate have agreed to the bill of the House authorizing the Postmaster General to extend the contract for the overland mail route, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

EFFICIENCY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass, an act (S. No. 253) to amend the act of 21st December, 1861, entitled "An act further to promote the efficiency of the Navy."

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

NAVY-YARD CLERKS.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, joint resolution of the Senate (No. 44) for the relief of clerks at the Kittery and Philadelphia navy-yards.

The resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GRADE OF NAVY OFFICERS.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back bill of the Senate No. 270, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish and equalize the grade of line officers of the United States Navy," approved July 16, 1862.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WARRANT OFFICERS OF THE NAVY.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, House bill No. 470, to authorize assimilated rank to be given to the warrant officers of the United States Navy, and for other purposes.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS IN PRIZE CASES.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back, with sundry amendments, bill of the House No. 446, to regulate prize proceedings and the distribution of prize money, and for other purposes.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs were agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VOTES RECORDED.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask permission of the House to record my vote in two cases this morning. I wish to record my vote in favor of the bill providing for commissioners to take proofs in cases of claims against the Government of the United States for losses occasioned by the Government, and I wish also to record my vote against the bill chartering the Metropolitan Railroad Company.

No objection was made, and Mr. MALLORY recorded his votes as above indicated.

Mr. ROLLINS, of Missouri. I ask the privilege of recording my vote on the same questions as those named by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MALLORY,] and in the same way.

No objection was made.

Mr. ROLLINS, of Missouri, then recorded his vote in favor of the rebellion losses bill, and against the Metropolitan railroad bill.

Mr. J. W. WHITE asked and obtained leave to record his vote in the affirmative on the bill in reference to rebellion losses.

Mr. SLOAN asked and obtained leave to record his vote in the negative on the same bill.

THE FORT PILLOW MASSACRE.

Mr. HOTCHKISS asked the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the members of this House, in addition to the copies already ordered, one hundred and sixty thousand copies of the report of the committee on the conduct of the war relative to the Fort Pillow massacre and the cruelties inflicted upon our soldiers while in the hands of the enemy as prisoners of war.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania, objected.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTORS.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the education of naval constructors and steam engineers, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VOTES RECORDED.

Mr. DEMING asked and obtained unanimous consent to have his vote recorded on the passage of the bill repealing the fugitive slave law. He voted "ay."

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania, asked and obtained a like privilege. He voted "no."

Mr. McBRIDE asked and obtained a like privilege. He voted "ay."

Mr. ROLLINS, of New Hampshire, asked and obtained a like privilege. He voted "ay." He also voted "ay" on the Senate resolution to amend the Constitution.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, asked and obtained a like privilege. He voted "no."

CONTRACT FOR IRON-CLADS.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to amend the contract with John Ericsson for the construction of two impregnable floating batteries, the Dictator and the Puritan.

The joint resolution, which was read a first and second time, is as follows:

Whereas the Navy Department on the 28th day of July, 1862, entered into contract with Captain John Ericsson, of the city of New York, for the construction of two impregnable floating batteries, the Dictator and the Puritan; and whereas experience with a similar class of vessels in actual conflict and during a varied service of more than two years has demonstrated that many improvements could be made to render them more complete and efficient as vessels of war; and whereas these improvements have added largely to the cost of construction of each of these vessels, rendering it impossible for the contractor to complete them under existing arrangements; and whereas it is of the utmost importance to the honor and interests of the country that they should be finished and ready for service at the earliest moment: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to amend the existing contract for the construction of these vessels so far as it relates to the Puritan, and to appoint a competent board to ascertain the present value, as far as completed, of that vessel, and of the material on hand deemed actually necessary to her construction, and to pay to Captain John Ericsson, the contractor, the amount of valuation so ascertained, deducting therefrom any sums already advanced toward the completion of said vessel; and that upon said payment being made by the Secretary of the Navy the rights of the contractor to said vessel and material or any portion thereof shall cease and be vested wholly and absolutely in the United States, which shall thenceforth proceed to complete said vessel under such arrangements as may be deemed most advantageous: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall in any manner affect the contract for the construction of the Dictator, which shall be completed by said contractor upon the same terms and conditions as if this resolution had not been passed: And provided further, That no action shall be had under this resolution until said contractor shall have signified to the Secretary of the Navy in writing his acceptance of its provisions, and his willingness to superintend to completion the construction of the Puritan: Provided further, That this resolution shall not take effect until the completion and delivery of the Dictator: Provided, also, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy, in carrying this resolution into execution, to apportion and apply to the Dictator a payment for that vessel only such portion of the gross contract price of $2,300,000 for the Dictator and Puritan, as the Dictator would justly be entitled to, if both vessels had been completed at the price and in the mode of construction specified in the contract, special reference being had to the difference in cost between the two vessels arising in the difference of their construction provided for in this act.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will make an explanation of this act.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the joint resolution, as the House will see, involves a relief for Captain John Ericsson, who presents a memorial for relief from the terms of his contract for building the iron-clad monitors Dictator and Puritan. The reputation of Mr. Ericsson as a scientific engineer, and the great benefit that he has conferred on the country in the invention of an entirely new class of naval vessels, are too well known to require any recital here.

The House is perfectly familiar with the remarkable encounter of one of his vessels, the original Monitor, with the Merrimac at Hampton Roads, in the early part of 1862, also with the recent encounter between the Weehawken, another of his vessels, and the Atlanta.

At a subsequent period, after the experiments made with the original monitors, it became evident to the Navy Department, to engineers, and to the country, that it was expedient, especially for purposes of harbor defense, that a larger number of vessels of this class should be built. Mr. Ericsson entered into a contract with the Navy Department for the construction of two large-class monitors, having a tonnage of about three thousand tons each, to be guaranteed a speed of sixteen knots an hour, and to be in all respects the most formidable vessels of the class up to this time constructed. Of course very little experience had been had in this country at that time in building vessels of this class. There were very few valuable results of experience to be derived from other countries. The contract for the two vessels was common to both. The price to be paid for both was $2,300,000. They were to be alike, except that the Puritan was to be about thirty feet longer than the Dictator, and was to have two turrets, while the Dictator was to have but one. Excepting in these particulars the ships were to be exactly alike.

Mr. Ericsson entered on the execution of his contract. But from time to time various improvements were suggested, either through the inventive genius of the country, through the experience of our own people in the use of naval vessels of this kind, and also from the experience of France and England, which countries had embarked somewhat extensively in the building of monitors. It was, of course, desirable that vessels involving such great expense, and on which such great interests depended, should embody all perfections and improvements. The incorporation of such improvements has delayed the construction of these vessels. In the mean time there has been, as everybody knows, an advance in the cost of labor and material, which has increased the cost of making these alterations.

The contract does not call for the appropriation of a specific sum of money for the relief of the contractors for the building of these vessels. But the proposition involved in the resolution, as those gentlemen who have given attention to it will perceive, is that the Dictator, which is nearly completed, shall be immediately completed without any delay, and without any additional cost to the Government; and that the proportion of the $2,300,000 which belongs to the Dictator, as the smaller of the two vessels, shall be paid on her completion. It then provides that the Puritan shall be surveyed under the direction of the Navy Department, shall be taken into account and a valuation placed upon her in her present condition, paid for at that valuation, the Government then to go on and finish the vessel itself, on its own plan, with as much economy as possible. That, I believe, is a fair statement of the questions and facts involved in this joint resolution.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I have heard the statement of my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, in regard to this joint resolution which has been introduced here this morning, I believe, for the first time.

He has paid a glowing, and I have no doubt deserved tribute to the genius, and I may say patriotism of Captain Ericsson, who has perhaps conferred a great benefit upon the country by his invention, and it may be that my heart might possibly soften so far as to vote him something if presented in a separate bill for that purpose. But I have not been able to see the propriety of making him the compensation which he desires precisely in this way.

This proposition, as I understand it, from the reading of the resolution itself as well as from the explanation of the gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, "simmers down" to about this: Captain Ericsson made a contract with the Government voluntarily, for the building of two certain vessels, which have been named the Puritan and Dictator—very good names, particularly the former, as I came from that sort of stock myself; and I like the name of the Dictator also, for I trust she will be able to dictate terms to the rebels and to all others who are against us.

Well, sir, this contract having been made, as it appears, for the construction of these two vessels, the party making it now comes forward and asks that the terms of it may be materially changed, or, in fact, I may say that the whole contract for this one vessel is proposed to be abrogated, which, as I understand, will enable the contractor to build the other without loss. It all, as it seems to me, amounts to just this: that this man, Captain Ericsson, says he has made a bad bargain, and that he cannot comply with his contract without losing money. He therefore asks us to come in and relieve him to this extent.

Now, I beg to say that I am utterly opposed to this manner of relieving the Government contractors. There have been a great many contracts during the progress of this war; there has been a great deal of money made by contractors out of the Government. I believe I remarked this morning to a gentleman that there had been money enough made by them to fill this Hall with greenbacks. We have seen the effect of the money which has been made by these contractors in too many places—in the shoddy operations which are everywhere visible; but in all the vast amount of money which has been so made I have never known any contractor offer to refund any money to the Government in consequence of a good contract. Whenever any one of them, however, alleges that he has lost money, he comes in here and asks us to make up to him the amount he expected to realize from the contract.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question, for I desire to understand the merits of this bill? I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to state that a contract was made with Captain Ericsson for the construction of both of these vessels, but Captain Ericsson found it impossible to comply with his contract because of interference on the part of the Government. Now, I ask whether when a contract with such a man as Ericsson is interfered with by the Government the Government is not bound to make his losses good in consequence of such interference?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. As I understand, in regard to that matter, the Government, under the conditions of the contract which it made with Captain Ericsson, had the right to make certain changes, that the Government made those changes, and granted allowances to Captain Ericsson, which were deemed proper. These I understand to be the facts; and that the Government has faithfully carried out its part of the contract which Captain Ericsson deliberately entered into. If I am not right I desire the gentleman to correct me, for I have no intention to do Captain Ericsson injustice.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The Government has made allowance for some of the alterations which have been made by Captain Ericsson in these vessels. My friend from Illinois will allow me, I hope, to make a suggestion, and that is, not to involve this resolution, in which honorable parties are concerned, in any connection with contracts of a disreputable character, like those to which he has alluded. I am sure he does not mean to apply the language which he has uttered to the particular contract now under consideration.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I was merely illustrating the fact that when these contractors make vast sums of money they never divide with the Government, but keep every dollar, however enormous may be their profits. But when they lose, be it ever so little, they ask us to absolve them and to make their losses good. Now, I do not forget the bill that went through last Congress and which I resisted, but in vain. It was for the relief of large contractors, who, as the gentleman from Massachusetts said, had made a bad bargain with the Government—that the articles which they had contracted to furnish had risen in price very much, and that they could not furnish them without a great loss. They had made a contract with the Government and I thought they ought to stand by it. But they came and asked us for relief, and, I am sorry to say, they obtained it. I resisted that application then upon precisely the same ground that I now resist this one.

But, sir, I do not mean to go into any lengthy argument on the subject. Mr. Ericsson made a contract with the Government, fairly and satisfactorily, to build these vessels of war. The Government, as I understand, reserved to itself in that contract the right to make alterations. It has made those alterations, and has given to Mr. Ericsson all that it believed he is entitled to. But Mr. Ericsson is not satisfied with that, and comes here and asks to be relieved in the manner specified.

Mr. THAYER. Does the gentleman from Illinois suppose that the Puritan can be finished in the time specified?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If she is not finished by Captain Ericsson, then let the Government come upon his sureties for the damage done by his failure to fulfill the contract. He has given surety. It was the duty of the Government to exact sureties, full and ample, and if the terms of the contract be not complied with it is the duty of the Government to institute proceedings against these parties.

Mr. THAYER. It may or may not be that the United States may be successful in such a lawsuit; but the point I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois is whether it is not of greater importance that the Government should have the early use of these ships than to enter into a doubtful lawsuit with Captain Ericsson.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Does my friend from Pennsylvania propose, in this and all other like cases, to allow parties who make contracts with the Government go scot-free when they say that they cannot go forward with their contracts, and pay them whatever they demand? Are these men to come here after failing to fulfill their contracts, and to declare that they will not fulfill them, and that unless we vote them an appropriation we cannot have these vessels? Why, sir, it would never do for this House to yield to such a principle, as my friend suggests.

Mr. KELLEY. Abstractly the gentleman from Illinois is right, that the principle is not a good one; but it is a fact that something must be done, or the Puritan and Dictator will remain unfinished. Nothing, sir, that has come before the Naval Committee has been more carefully scrutinized than this; and they have arrived at the judgment, after mature deliberation, that the interests of the country require something to be done.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Then, according to that, the Government is in the hands of this contractor.

Mr. KELLEY. There is no other contractor building such vessels as these. There is no other man in the country who will undertake to-day to build these vessels for fifty per cent. more than Captain Ericsson will get under this contract.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. But Mr. Ericsson has contracted to build these vessels, and has given security for the faithful execution of that contract.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Ericsson has already exhausted the amount appropriated for building these vessels, and that he and his sureties have expended some six or seven hundred thousand dollars besides.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. That is their misfortune. Those were matters which they were bound to take into consideration when they made the contract. If my friend from Massachusetts should make a contract for performing a certain thing and he becomes a loser thereby he does not go whining around to be relieved from the effect of his own act; but he comes up and stands to his contract like a man.

Mr. PIKE. The gentleman from Illinois wants to discuss this matter fairly.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I do.

Mr. PIKE. I wish to make one suggestion. The Department has directed some alterations to be made in these vessels.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I understand that.

Mr. PIKE. The Government has paid for those alterations at their cost.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. According to the contract and in the manner stipulated in the contract.

Mr. PIKE. But in making them a large delay was occasioned in building the vessels, so that instead of costing $2,300,000 according to the contract, the cost has been very largely enhanced by the increased price of labor and materials. This delay was occasioned in a great degree by the alterations made in the vessels.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Was not the possible delay occasioned by alterations perfectly understood by the parties? They agreed that alterations might be made.

Mr. PIKE. The gentleman from Illinois does not understand the contract as I do.

Mr. STEVENS. Does not the Government always reserve the right to direct alterations, by paying the cost?

Mr. PIKE. It is not so, so far as I have examined contracts. I think it is not so in this case. I will state the contract as I understand it, and the proceedings under it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Of course the committee before they made the report had the contract before them. That becomes a material matter.

Mr. PIKE. The facts are these: there is no provision in the contract for alterations. Mr. Ericsson himself was desirous of producing the most perfect thing possible. He consequently assented to alterations for the purpose of bringing about that result. Those alterations, in consequence of a want of experience in building iron-clads both in this and foreign countries, were very extensive. That caused great delay, and although the Government may have paid the cost of a specific alteration, still the delay enhanced the cost so much that Captain Ericsson is a very large loser, and he should be equitably compensated by the Government.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask my friend if the Government has not compensated him in accordance with the terms of the contract. I certainly understood that.

Mr. PIKE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. NELSON. I would inquire whether we could not heal up the injury by granting to these contractors a few millions of public land?

Mr. PIKE. I am not in the land business and cannot answer.

Mr. NELSON. We have been in it so extensively we might keep it up a little while longer. When Ericsson made the contract he undoubtedly thought he should make money, but, as he has not done so, perhaps a few million acres of land, and a few bonds thrown in, will heal the injury.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I was trying to get some information in regard to the nature of this contract. I supposed the committee had the contract Ericsson made with the Government and would produce it to the House before they would ask them to act upon this subject. I desire the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to state what the contract is.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I have not the contract here.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I understood my friend from Massachusetts to admit that the right was reserved in the contract to make these alterations, upon the Government paying a just compensation.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. That is not the question he put to me. What I understood him to ask me was whether the Government had made any allowance for the alterations, and I answered that they had; and such is the fact.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If the Government has made an allowance they must have made it under the contract. They could not have made it unless there was a contract for it. These are the considerations which have induced me to question very much the propriety of passing this bill.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois if, since the time this contract was made, the prices of material and the rates of labor have not advanced more than a hundred per cent.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. That may be; but that is a matter which a party who bids for contracts is bound to take into consideration. Suppose materials had depreciated a hundred per cent., would Mr. Ericsson have come forward and returned anything to the Government?

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I understand this proposition is to allow Mr. Ericsson something on account of the increased prices of materials.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Yes; that is it.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. Well, sir, if we allow to him we ought in justice to make the same allowance to all who have contracts with the Government for the manufacture of engines or the building of ships. Others are just as much entitled to it as Mr. Ericsson.

Mr. PIKE. I send to the Clerk's desk a letter from Mr. Ericsson, part of which I ask to have read. It is dated New York, June 12, 1864. The Clerk read, as follows:

"Sir: The honorable Secretary of the Navy in his reply to your communication of the 20th of May, requesting the views of the Department on the subject of my petition for additional allowance on the contract for constructing the Dictator and Puritan, has been pleased to recommend my case to the favorable consideration of Congress; but the honorable Secretary in his zeal to curtail the expenditure of the Department has not been so liberal in paying for extra work as his communication would indicate, for notwithstanding the positive recommendation of Admiral Gregory to pay the whole amount claimed, and notwithstanding the award in my favor of two separate boards of naval officers and engineers, more than one third of the work enumerated in my supplemental specification for extra work has been ruled out by the Department under the assumption, most erroneous in my humble opinion, that it formed part of the contract. Nor is this all, for the prices in my supplemental specification were fixed a year ago, since which an increase of thirty per cent. on labor and materials has taken place. Again, the payment of the difference of eight and one third per cent. of the reservation which the honorable Secretary promises when the work on the Puritan shall have advanced as far as the Dictator, namely, when the vessel is nearly ready for trial, will come too late. But the frank statement of the Secretary of the Navy that the memorialist and his associates or sub-contractors are liable and likely to sustain a loss on the vast expenditures that have been made under the original contract is not questioned, together with his forcible remark that 'the work was novel, unanticipated delays intervened, great changes have taken place in our monetary concerns, affecting prices and every business interest.' These statements of the honorable Secretary would appear to be all-sufficient to entitle me to favorable consideration. Congress, I feel confident, will not refuse to grant relief in view of the peculiar merits of the case as set forth by the chief of the Navy Department."

Mr. PIKE. These alterations were made by the consent of Mr. Ericsson, and many of them doubtless at his own suggestion. The Secretary of the Navy has taken the ground that it would be improper for him as an executive officer to do anything more than simply pay the cost of the alterations. All the delay that has been occasioned to the contractors and the consequent expense in keeping up their establishments, and the continually increasing price of labor and materials, have not been compensated for by the Navy Department. I believe the Department concurs with the committee in the belief that this relief should be accorded to these contractors. Certainly the House will be willing to deal at least equitably with Mr. Ericsson, who has conferred such great benefits on this country. They will not treat him in a niggardly spirit and ruin him irretrievably, simply because he has introduced this great naval improvement from which we have profited so immensely. These contracts run to such great amount—between two and three million dollars—that get off the best way he can, Captain Ericsson will suffer a large loss. The proposition in relation to the Dictator is to pay simply the contract price and let him pocket the loss. The proposition in relation to the Puritan is that the Government shall pay only what she is worth, and that is all there is in the resolution. It is so fair and equitable that the House cannot hesitate to adopt it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I take the side of the Committee on Naval Affairs in this matter, and I want to say just a word in support of it. In my view of the case the Government is much to blame for the increased cost of the vessels. The alterations proposed by the Government necessarily occasioned considerable delay, and during that time material and labor rose greatly in price. The necessities of the Government required heavy internal taxation and increase of the tariff, and articles thus burdened rose in price. Thus the expense was largely increased by the delay necessarily resulting from the alterations required by the Government in the structure of the vessels. Nor must we forget the great decline since the date of the contract in the paper of the Government in which payment is to be made, another serious injury to Captain Ericsson resulting from the delay caused by alterations. I think the citizen should suffer no injury from the action of the Government without appropriate redress; and to be consistent I must vote to indemnify this party against this loss for which the Government itself is largely responsible. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] is consistent in opposing this bill, for he uniformly opposes the payment of losses to the citizen when the Government has directly occasioned them. My friend, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, [Mr. RICE], is not quite consistent in advocating it in view of some other recent votes; but I let that pass.

But, sir, I base my advocacy of this bill upon another ground. I do not care whether the Government by its action occasioned the loss or whether it arises from too low a bid in the first instance. A great Government like the United States ought not to suffer an injury to fall upon a citizen like Captain Ericsson while employed about its business. If Captain Ericsson was led by a generous enthusiasm for science and uncalculating devotion to the cause of his country to undertake to perfect certain works of naval architecture, new and difficult, and deemed essential to uphold the honor and interest of the country upon the ocean, and in accomplishing them has been ruined, the Government to which he has devoted his genius, labor, and means, owes it to itself to indemnify him. Sir, this is not to be likened to the case of an ordinary contract, where fraud and cunning have secured an ample margin; there is no shoddy in it; it is the case of a patriotic and devoted man, supposing that he could accomplish certain results by a certain outlay, and in that being grossly mistaken to his ruin. Zeal for the public service and pride in his noble conceptions have made him careless of his pecuniary interest, and a great Government ought to be incapable of taking advantage of this devotion. The Government receives the avails of his labor, the works of his genius, and sends them against the foe. In a critical moment of our history the country was saved by the genius of this man. For this she owes him a debt of gratitude which no sum of money can ever repay. When our fleets and the capital itself were threatened by the success of that monster, the Merrimac, this man's genius, like a divine inspiration, steps in and saves us. I should tremble for the result if the Dictator and Puritan went into battle with the ruin of Ericsson engraved on their armor. I do not know how a Government like ours could consent to ruin a man like this because he miscalculates the cost of great works, whose originality and novelty might easily disappoint the public estimates of the greediest contractor.

If I understand the proposition of the committee, it is to put one vessel on the hands of Ericsson and his sureties at whatever loss it may net. In the other case the proposition simply is to take the vessel at what it has cost this public-spirited citizen. Sir, I could go further than that, and indemnify him as to both vessels against any loss. Captain Ericsson is not that description of man who is likely to flourish by contracts. He does not belong to that venal crop of plunderers that have made a merchandise of the tears and blood of a nation, and now bear "the cost of princes on unworthy shoulders." He belongs rather to that notable and noble class of men who in all ages have seen great nations flourish by the discoveries to which their genius gave birth, while themselves linger out a life of poverty and neglect. I hope our country will make a distinction in his case, and take care that he suffers no loss whatever through his devotion to the public service, but rather that his patriot labors do not go unrewarded. He has a claim to a generous recognition of his services at the hands of the national Legislature, and I, for one, am prepared to give it to him.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if there is any controversy in regard to Captain Ericsson having sustained this loss.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understand from the report of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs that he sustained a serious loss in the construction of both vessels; that he and his sureties are willing to shoulder the loss on the Dictator, and only ask to be indemnified by the Government as to the Puritan.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I believe there is no controversy or misunderstanding between the contractor for these vessels and the Navy Department. But the amount involved is so large that the Department itself did not feel authorized to assume it, and therefore referred the consideration and decision of the subject to Congress which controls the making of contracts as well as the Department itself. The facts are simply that Captain Ericsson has given the country the benefit of his genius and years of his labor and industry, and the results of his skill are incorporated in these vessels, and have become a part and parcel of what the Government will obtain under this contract.

I desire also to remind the House that no appropriation of money is asked for here, but simply a modification of the terms of his contract, so far as that the Dictator, which is nearly completed, shall be finished and delivered in accordance with the terms of the contract; and that the Puritan shall be taken by the Government at a valuation to be made by a commission to be appointed by the Navy Department itself, and shall be finished under its direction by Captain Ericsson. I believe the matter is sufficiently understood by the House, and now I move the previous question.

Mr. ENGLISH. I simply desire to know if there is any difference of opinion in the Naval Committee in reference to this question.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I think there is no difference of opinion upon it in the committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman if the Committee on Naval Affairs has had any testimony in regard to the facts stated, and whether such testimony has been embodied in any report that will be printed and submitted to the House. The joint resolution has not been printed; and yet we are asked to pass it, without either the report or the bill being printed, and with nothing but the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Naval Affairs had no witnesses before them, but they had documentary evidence before them which they considered carefully and directed the report to be made without a dissenting voice. I insist upon my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, demanded the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 85, nays 36, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Bailly, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brandegee, Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, Chanler, Cravens, Dawes, Dixon, Driggs, Edgerton, Eliot, English, Ganson, Gooch, Griswold, Hale, Higby, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, Kelley, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, Knox, Law, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, Marcy, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Ames Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Patterson, Perry, Pike, Pomroy, Price, Prayn, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Ross, Seofield, Scott, Shannon, Smithers, John B. Steele, Srouse, Stuart, Sweat, Thayer, Tracy, Upton, Van Valkenburgh, Wadsworth, Ward, William B. Washburn, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Williams, Wilder, Winfield, and Woodbridge—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Beaman, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Coffroth, Cole, Dawson, Denning, Denison, Eden, Eldridge, Finck, Frank, Harding, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Hubbard, Knapp, Long, Mallory, McDowell, Middleton, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, Orth, Perham, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, Robinson, Sloan, Stiles, Thomas, Elithu B. Washburne, Joseph W. White, and Wilson—36.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, Bliss, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cox, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Fenton, Garfield, Grider, Grinnell, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herriek, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Jenckes, William Johnson, Julian, Kathfisch, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Lazarus, Littlejohn, McAllister, McIndoe, McKinney, William H. Miller, John O'Neill, Pendleton, William H. Randall, Rogers, Schenck, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Stevens, Voorhes, Webster, Whaley, Windom, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, and Yeaman—61.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED RESOLUTION.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution to provide for the revision of the laws of the District of Columbia; when the Speaker signed the same.

APPOINTMENT OF ADMIRALS, ETC.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill to further regulate the appointment of admirals, to increase the number of line officers in the Navy, and for the appointment of certain volunteer officers to the regular Navy; which was read a first and second time, recommitting to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

G. M'KAY AND J. B. GROW.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the petition of George McKay, J. B. Grow, and others; which was laid on the table, and the committee discharged from the further consideration thereof.

PAY OF NAVAL CONSTRUCTORS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the same committee, reported back petition in favor of an increase of salaries of naval constructors; which was laid on the table, and the committee discharged from the further consideration thereof.

GARRETT R. BARRY.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Garrett R. Barry, to report Senate joint resolution No. 41, for the relief of Garrett B. Barry, a paymaster in the United States Navy, and ask that it may be put on its passage.

The joint resolution was read. It provides for the release of Paymaster Garrett R. Barry, United States Navy, from his liability as surety of John Debree, formerly paymaster in the Navy of the United States.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope that will pass unanimously. We have relieved Ericsson from a bad contract with the Government, and I hope this will pass unanimously.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask if there is a report in the case.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We adopt the report of the Senate committee.

Mr. WILSON. That resolution came here from the Senate some time ago, in the precise language in which it has been read, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and is now in the possession of the member from Vermont, [Mr. WOODBRIDGE,] as a member of that committee, for investigation. I cannot understand how the same resolution can come from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I have here in my desk the original Senate engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair presumes the gentleman from Connecticut reports this as an original House resolution.

EVENING SESSION DISPENSED WITH.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, moved that the order in reference to evening sessions be dispensed with, so far as this evening is concerned.

The House divided; and there were—ayes eighty-two, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

NAVY-YARD FOR IRON-CLADS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it is growing late in the day, and I suggest that the Committee on Naval Affairs put aside for the present the reports upon private cases, which have been under consideration, and bring forward at once the proposition in reference to the establishment of a naval station for building and repairing iron-clad vessels, and for preparing iron armature. So earnestly and frequently has this subject been urged upon Congress for its action by the Secretary of the Navy, as indispensable for proper and efficient naval purposes, and so anxiously are the people of all parts of the country looking to us for prompt efforts to place upon a footing, unexcelled by other countries, our naval power, by building iron-clad vessels and powerful armature, that I cannot but earnestly appeal to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and to the members of this House, to second this suggestion for immediate action.

Mr. Speaker, we, who believe with the Navy Department, and with those who have examined the subject without prejudice, that League island, in the river Delaware, is of all places proposed the best suited for constructing our iron-clad navy, by reason of its still and fresh water, its close proximity to the inexhaustible coal and iron regions of Pennsylvania, its nearness to a population incomparable for skill in labor, science, and the mechanical arts, and its entire defensibility from attack, beg of you to pass by all minor matters and now to accept this noble gift of the city of Philadelphia offered to the country, only for its fitness for the purpose proposed.

Mr. Speaker, I urge upon the gentleman from Connecticut to bring this matter at once before the House. If he is anxious to present New London as his choice, let those who are ready to advocate League island have the opportunity of showing its merits. This House has been in possession of facts, through the reports made from the Naval Committee, and should not hesitate now to act, or should not delay action. My colleagues and I want the question fairly before us, and while we from Philadelphia may have a local pride in advocating League island, and the members from Pennsylvania would feel that our glorious old Commonwealth would be honored by locating this great iron naval station within her borders, yet, Mr. Speaker, there is not one member of the delegation who would presume to press upon Congress the acceptance of this generous and patriotic offer, were it not the only location suitable in every respect for the object proposed and having advantages such as do not exist anywhere upon or near the Atlantic seaboard.

Mr. Speaker, I again most respectfully ask that the reports of the committee on iron naval stations be at once considered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not yield the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. If he had waited he would have found that we would arrive at the subject to which he has referred soon enough. I have a few bills of a private nature which I am instructed to report by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and as they will consume but little time, I propose that they shall be first disposed of.

NAVAL PAYMASTER BARRY—AGAIN.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Connecticut reports back this Senate bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs, when that bill has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and is still in that committee. I insist that the bill has not been in possession of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that the gentleman has no right to report it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think I can make a suggestion which will obviate the gentleman's objection. This subject was referred to the Naval Committee, and they have instructed me to make the pending report.

The SPEAKER. As soon as attention was called to the fact, the gentleman from Connecticut had the title of the bill changed, and it is now before the House as a House bill.

Mr. WILSON. I make the point of order that this subject has never been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that they had, therefore, no right to make any report on it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was referred by petition to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair overrules the point of order, and decides the committee has jurisdiction of the subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report of the Senate committee be read.

The Clerk read the report.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Speaker, if anything could be understood from the reading of the report at the Clerk's desk—and from the confusion which has prevailed I am of the opinion that it was not understood very generally—then these facts would have become apparent to the House. In the year 1857, the applicant for relief, Paymaster Barry, became surety with G. W. Cowdery, of Norfolk, for the faithful performance of the duties of paymaster by John Debreë.

Mr. Debreë faithfully performed the duties of paymaster up to the year 1861. In the early part of that year he was paymaster on board the frigate Cumberland when she arrived at Norfolk. Soon after he was induced to resign, but up to the last moment of his connection with the Government honestly cared for its interests, leaving in the public chest, on board the frigate, very nearly twenty thousand dollars in gold and silver, and a large quantity of clothing and small stores, together with the usual transfer rolls of the officers and crew, containing evidence of very large advances made by him during the cruise, all of which were duly received by his successor, Paymaster Cramer Burt, of the United States Navy.

Mr. Debreë was paymaster on board the Cumberland from October 17, 1860, to June 11, 1861, a period of eight months and twenty-four days. Paymaster Burt, in his sworn statement, says that he "cannot recollect the amounts in money, clothing, and small stores which appeared upon the roll as having been issued to the officers and crew of the Cumberland," but he "knows that they were very large, the officers in almost every case being paid in full up to the day Mr. Debreë left;" and the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury, in a communication to the committee, says:

"From the complement of that vessel, in officers and men, Mr. Debreë's payments and issues to them, for that time, in money, clothing, and small stores, must have been certainly equal if not in excess of the above stated balance against him of $45,914 12." * * * "I therefore have not the slightest doubt that had his accounts and vouchers for these payments and issues for that time been received at this office he would not, on settlement, have been indebted to the Government a single cent."

Soon after Mr. Debreë left the Cumberland, the naval engagement in Hampton Roads took place, and all the money and vouchers transferred by Paymaster Debreë to Paymaster Burt, together with Mr. Burt's own vouchers and accounts, went down in the Cumberland, which was sunk by the Merrimac on that occasion. Paymaster Burt was subsequently relieved from the consequences of disaster, and his accounts settled by act of Congress. Paymaster Barry, the surety for Debreë, now applies for the same relief, and the accounting officers of the Treasury say "both Mr. Barry and Mr. Debreë are well known to the accounting officers of the Government for uniform punctuality, intelligence, and integrity, as disbursing officers of the Navy, during a long series of years;" and it is therefore "believed that had not the accounts, rolls, and papers of the Cumberland been destroyed, as stated in the memorial, Mr. Debreë's account with that vessel would have been (as all his former accounts were) satisfactorily settled."

On this state of facts the Committee on Naval Affairs instructed me to report this bill. It is an act of simple justice that Paymaster Barry should be relieved from the consequences of the disaster to the Cumberland. I move, therefore, that the bill be put on its passage.

Mr. WILSON. I think it would be better to have a little more time to look into this matter, and I therefore move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to that.

The motion was agreed to.

TREATY OF 1817.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back House joint resolution No. 91, in relation to the treaty of 1817, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to insert the words "authorized and directed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PRUYN. I would inquire if this is a Senate bill, or whether it originated here.

The SPEAKER. It is a House resolution.

Mr. PRUYN. Has it been considered by a committee?

The SPEAKER. It has been considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and by them reported to the House.

Mr. PRUYN. I would like to hear some explanation of the necessity for this resolution.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. The necessity for it grows out of the objections which have been raised to the establishment of a naval depot upon the lakes. There was some doubt in the minds of the Naval Committee, and it seems there was some doubt in the mind of the Secretary of the Navy, as to the application of that treaty to Lake Michigan. There was no question, so far as I could learn, in the minds of the members of the Naval Committee as to the necessity of some preparation for lake defenses, and upon consultation it was deemed much better to give this notice which would free us from all question of an infraction of that treaty than to establish a depot in violation of what some might term the conditions of that treaty.

I took occasion before this resolution was introduced to have some conversation with the Secretary of State upon the subject, and I believe there was no idea that any difficulty would arise out of the action of the House in this matter.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I understand that the Secretary of State has no objection to this course.

Mr. PRUYN. The object I had in view is gained, and with this explanation accompanying it I think such a resolution should pass. I thought it should not go out to the world without explanation, and as indicating a desire for a rupture with Great Britain.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GRISWOLD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NAVY-YARD AT NEW LONDON, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back a bill authorizing a survey at New London, Connecticut, and the establishment of a navy-yard for iron-clad vessels thereat; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a competent engineer to designate and survey the necessary amount of land on the river Thames, at and above Winthrop, near New London, Connecticut, for the establishment of a navy-yard and naval depot for the construction, docking, and repair of iron, iron-clad, and other naval vessels.

The bill further provides that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy, as soon as the report of said engineer shall have been made to him, and a good title to the land therein designated have been tendered by the city of New London to the United States, to accept of the same for naval purposes for and on behalf of the Government, and to establish thereat a navy-yard and depot for the construction, docking, and repair of iron, iron-clad, and other vessels.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The committee instructed me to report that bill, and ask to have it put upon its passage. But I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] on behalf of a minority of the committee, has prepared a minority report, and desires to submit a bill, in the nature of a substitute, recommended by the minority. I yield the floor to him for that purpose.

Mr. KELLEY. In accordance with the instructions of a minority of the committee, I send to the Clerk's desk a substitute for the bill just reported by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The substitute, which was read, provides that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized and directed to accept from the city of Philadelphia the title to League island on behalf of the Government, and to establish thereat a navy-yard and depot for the construction, docking, and repair of iron, iron-clad, and other vessels.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. KELLEY. I believe I hold the floor with the consent of the gentleman from Connecticut. What would be the condition of this bill if a motion to adjourn prevail?

The SPEAKER. It will come up as unfinished business whenever that class of business is reached.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not yield to such a motion.

Mr. PIKE. I propose to move that this matter be postponed until the second Monday in December next.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I must decline to yield for that purpose.

Mr. PIKE. Well, at some stage in this discussion when I can obtain the floor I propose to make that motion, as it is now so late in the session that even if the House should act upon the subject its action could not be considered and concurred in by the Senate. I suggest to the gentleman from Connecticut that he may as well test the sense of the House now as after the matter shall have been partially discussed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not authorized by the Committee on Naval Affairs, whose organ I am so far as this bill is concerned, to agree to any such motion as the one indicated by the gentleman from Maine. However, I am not disposed to press a bill of this magnitude, relating, as I think, to the efficiency of the Navy, against an unwilling House, especially at this late hour of the day and this late day of the week. If the House is of opinion that this measure ought to be postponed to a day designated next session, I shall not be found forcing myself against a reluctant House. I will therefore yield the floor in order that the sense of the House may be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. PIKE. Without making any observations on this matter, as the House understands the position of it very fully, I move that the further consideration of this subject be postponed until the second Monday in December next; and on that motion I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to postpone was agreed to—ayes 70, noes 36.

Mr. BRANDEGEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. L. MYERS. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has no faith in his bantling, or he would not have assented to the postponement of a subject so important to the interests of the country. I now demand the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider and lay on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

PAY OF PAGES.

Mr. DAWSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That boys who have served on this floor as pages during the present session or any part of it, and who have received $1 50 per day, shall be allowed and paid fifty cents per day additional for the time so employed.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania. I suggest to my colleague that he amend his resolution so as to include the messengers employed about this House. There are men here who receive only the old pay of $1 50 a day, and they cannot live in Washington city upon that.

Mr. DAWSON. The object of my resolution is only to equalize the pay of these boys.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DAWSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved that the House do now adjourn.

NAVAL STATION ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to yield to me that I may offer a resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, asked unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Naval Affairs a resolution authorizing and empowering the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a commission consisting of one naval officer, one officer of the engineer corps, and one civilian to select the most approved site for a navy-yard or naval station on the Mississippi river or one of its tributaries; and also empowering him, with the approval of the President, to accept or purchase the site so selected on such terms as he shall deem most conducive to the public interest.

Mr. THAYER objected to the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The resolution is a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the best interests of the country demand its adoption.

Mr. L. MYERS. With the permission of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] I desire to know whether a navy yard for iron-clads—which I hope may be located at League island—is not of far greater consequence than the one he now presses so warmly. It is very strange that time can be found to act on the one bill, and the urgent demands of the service as expressed by the Secretary of the Navy and known to the whole country be neglected.

The objection was not withdrawn.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and it was not agreed to.

NAVY-YARD FOR IRON-CLADS.

The question recurred on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill in regard to a navy-yard for iron-clads was postponed; on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 70, nays 44, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Ames, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Bliss, Boutwell, Boyd, Brammeger, Ambrose W. Clark, Dawes, Denning, Dixon, Eckley, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Eliot, Finck, Ganson, Gooch, Harding, Charles M. Harris, Hohman, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, Knapp, Knox, Law, Le Blond, Long, Longyear, Mallory, McDowell, McKinney, Samuel, F. Miller, Morrill, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Nelson, Noble, Odell, Orb, Patterson, Perlman, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Robinson, Edward H. Rollins, Ross, Scott, John B. Steele, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Whiteley, Wheeler, Joseph W. White, Wilder, and Wilson—70.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Baily, Cobb, Coffroth, Cole, Cravens, Creswell, Dawson, Driggs, Frank, Hale, Higby, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Philip Johnson, Julian, Kelley, Loan, Marey, McBride, McClurg, Middleton, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Morrison, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Charles O'Neill, Perry, Samuel J. Randall, James S. Rollins, Scofield, Shannon, Smithers, Stevens, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Williams, Windom, and Winfield—44.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Arnold, Bannan, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Brooks, Brownall, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chanler, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cox, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Denton, Donnelly, Dumont, English, Farnsworth, Fenton, Garfield, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Hutchins, Jenckes, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kasson, Francis W. Kellogg, King, Lazear, Littlejohn, Marvin, McAllister, Melndoe, Norton, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Radford, William H. Randall, Rogers, Schenck, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Sweet, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Webster, Chilton A. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—68.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, stated that his colleague, Mr. NORRIS, was obliged to leave the House through indisposition.

Mr. BOYD stated that Mr. ANDERSON was absent on account of sickness.

NAVAL STATION ON WESTERN WATERS.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a commission to select a site for a navy-yard or naval station on the western waters; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved the previous question on its engrossment and third reading.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move to postpone that joint resolution till the second Tuesday in December.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order pending the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield for an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, offered a substitute authorizing the President of the United States to accept from the corporate authorities of the city of Cairo, in the State of Illinois, or from any other person or corporation a site for a navy-yard or depot at or near the city of Cairo, if in his opinion the good of the public service requires it, and to erect such buildings and make such improvements thereon as may be necessary for the construction, repair, accommodation, and supplies of vessels-of-war of the United States; also authorizing the President to purchase any water rights that may be required to propel the machinery and to construct the dockage for such navy-yard, and to receive any donation of lands, water rights, or rights of way which the authorities of the city of Cairo, or any other body-politic, or any person or persons may think proper to grant to the United States for such purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. What will be the effect of an adjournment upon this proposition?

The SPEAKER. It will go over as unfinished business, to come up whenever business of that class is in order; when that will be the Chair cannot say.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that resolution to enable me to report a resolution to which there will be no objection.
